THERE are approximately 18,000 moving picture theaters in the United States, and probably at least three-fifths of these have only alternating current available. Therefore, as the very foundation stone of the moving picture business is light, it is unfortunate that in moving picture work alternating current does not give as good a light from the arc lamp as direct current. A direct-current arc is also much easier to operate for several reasons. First, the light comes from a concentrated point at the end of the electrode, as shown in Fig. 1, instead of from the arc flame, as in alternating current. This concentrated source is more efficiently utilized by the lens, and as the arc does not waver and shift in position like a flame, focusing is made much easier and requires less attention. Also, a greater arc length can be used which makes adjustment less delicate, as small changes of arc length cause less effect. There is not the danger that the body of the electrode will shut off the light, as often happens with an alternating-current arc because of its short length and flickering flame. The data contained in Figs. 2 and 3 was taken under conditions such as will be found to exist in moving picture theaters; i. e., the lamp was enclosed in a lamp housing; the light was directed through lenses on the screen at an arbitrary distance of the order of the throw commonly used; and the lens focused to give a clear picture on the screen. The pictures that were obtained were comparable in size to those shown in average moving picture theaters. The photometer readings were taken at the point where the screen had been placed for getting the focus. The values labeled "illumination" indicated by the curves are not candle-power of the arc but are values proportional to the intensity of light at the screen. The constant of proportionality is the same for both curves. These curves cannot be used to obtain absolute values but can be depended on as comparative tests between alternating current and direct current for moving picture work.

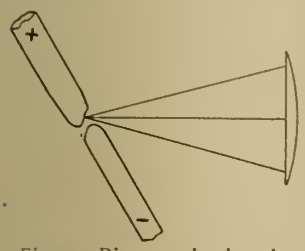

Fig. 1. Diagram showing the point source of light in the direct-current arc.

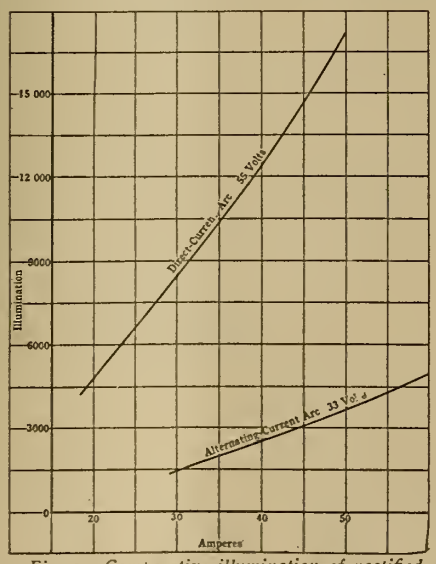

Fig. 2. Comparative illumination of rectified and alternating-current arcs based on the current required.

Since the direct-current arc is so greatly superior to that obtained with alternating current, many operators are making use of mercury arc rectifiers which have been designed for furnishing direct current to moving picture arc lamps, the power being taken from an alternating-current source. The ordinary outfits are manufactured in 30, 40 and 50 ampere sizes, the design characteristics and general appearance being the same. All direct-current moving picture arcs are of about the same voltage (55), and the operator usually requires all the current the outfits will give, especially when showing colored moving pictures; therefore, it should have the simplest possible method of control.

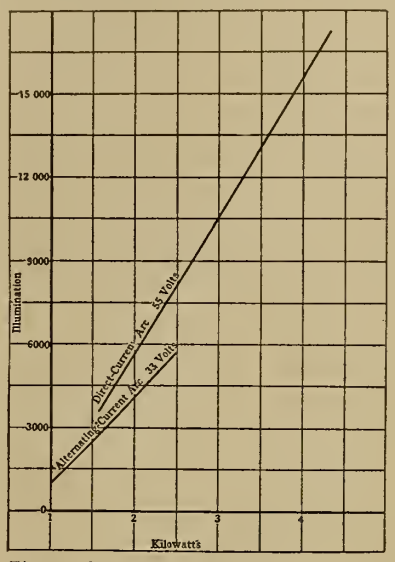

Fig. 3. Comparison of illumination from rectified and alternating-current arcs on a power consumption basis.

Each outfit consists of a cast iron main frame on which are mounted an auto-transformer, a reactance coil, a tilting mechanism, a five point dial switch, a bulb and a bulb holder, all enclosed in a perforated sheet steel cover. The auto-transformer with a large reactance coil in the primary circuit serves to give stability to the arc and to limit the short-circuit current (when the arc carbons are brought together in starting), to a value not exceeding 50 per cent of the normal rating of the bulb for continuous operation. Four different primary connections are provided to take account of such variations of line voltage from normal as may reasonably be expected. Each outfit is provided with an automatic tilting device, so connected that the closing of the arc carbon circuit causes it to tilt. This feature makes it unnecessary for the operator to leave his position in order to start the outfit and unnecessary to install the outfit in the booth. A tilting outfit capable of continuous operation is not used, as the bulb is not subjected to long periods of tilting. A tilting transformer is not used, as in the case of battery charging outfits, but a tilting magnet is so wound that it in itself performs the function of both transformer and magnet. It may sometimes occur that the bulb is not in operating condition, and as it is important, in moving picture business, that the show be a continuous performance, there is incorporated in these outfits means whereby connecting links, as indicated in Fig. 4 and Fig. 6, make possible the operation of the outfit as an economy coil to provide an alternating-current arc, and by means of the dial switch (Fig. 4) the current can be varied to the desired value.

There is considerable difference in opinion as to the amount of direct current that should be used under various conditions. However, it is the consensus of opinion that within reasonable limits, at least up to 150 feet, added length of the throw has little or nothing to do with additional current. As brilliant a picture can be projected with 30 amperes direct current at 100 feet as at 50, provided the size be the same in each case, the only difference being in the focus of the projecting lenses. There is practically no loss of light in traversing the air for distances ordinarily used for projection. Therefore, 30 amperes direct current is satisfactory for ordinary conditions; 40 amperes direct current will perhaps be required when there is an extra thickness of the film or there is considerable light in the theater, and 50 amperes direct current is generally used for showing colored moving pictures.

Operators claim that means whereby the current of the arc can be quickly varied between films is now an essential feature in the moving picture work, especially in cases of spot light and advertising matter where perhaps 15 or 20 amperes direct current is sufficient. This condition is met by an outfit such as shown in Figs. 4 and 5, whereby the current at the arc is varied by the means of a dial switch controlling taps on the reactance coil. This device permits a quick change in current without loss of efficiency, as the change is made by a reactance coil in the primary circuit.

From the diagram of connections shown in Fig. 6, it will be seen that the alternating current enters at C, passes through some portion of the reactance coil, as determined by the dial switch, then to the link connector and into either tap 5 or 6 of the transformer, then leaves the transformer at either tap 2 or 3 and back to the line at A.

In the direct-current circuit the current leaves at 7 or 1 of the transformer, flows through one side of the bulb to the lower terminal, then through the relay coil to the + terminal, through the arc lamp to the — terminal and back to 4 of the transformer. The relay serves to open the tilting circuit during the time the arc is operating

In the past there has been one objection to a mercury arc rectifier for moving picture work, namely, that the natural end of life of the bulb may come during a performance of the show and, unless the operator has a spare bulb on hand, the outfit would be entirely out of commission and a complicated condition arise. This objection is now entirely overcome in the design of the new outfit, as it can be operated as an economy coil to provide an alternating current by transferring a link connector from one terminal to another, as shown in the diagram. When the outfit is used as an economy coil the primary circuit is exactly the same as before, but the arc is connected across the center point 4 and to a special tap 5A of the transformer. This connection cuts the bulb out of the circuit but leaves the side leads of the bulb connected as before, i. e., alive. The alternating-current arc connections are so proportioned as to give a 60 to 70 ampere arc with the dial switch on the high point, which is about the limit in current with moving picture machines now in common use. This gives light somewhat inferior to that with the direct-current connection, but serves in case of emergency to keep the machine going.

Thus the mercury arc rectifier makes possible for projection work the use of a direct-current arc, the ideal for moving picture work, in territory where alternating current only is available. which has the distinct advantage that it does not produce the flickering light, so trying on the eyes, which is obtained from an alternating-current arc. Also, for the same amount of power input to a rectifier for a direct-current arc and to an economy coil for an alternating-current arc, the direct-current arc gives about 35 to 40 per cent greater intensity of light on the screen.

Filming the Arctic

Fred Granville, the well-known camera man, who went into the Arctic regions for the Sunset Motion Picture Company of San Francisco, has reached East Cape, Siberia. He has encountered great difficulty in securing pictures because of the heavy fog, but has secured about 15,000 feet of clear negatives. He expects to reach Nome in a short time.

Universal Scenario Department Moved

The scenario staff of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in New York have been removed from their headquarters at the executive offices, 1600 Broadway, to the Imp studio. The change was suggested by Julius Stern, manager of the Imp studio, in order that co-operation can be developed between the directors and the scenario department.

It is considered essential that these two departments work in unison and the move is certain to prove a great time-saver. It also enables the scenario men to judge what is necessary in the way of photoplays for the various companies under Mr. Stern's supervision.

Trolley Car Falls into Gorge

The Whartons have produced a picture to be released through Eclectic that contains a scene calculated to make even the most blase theater-goers gasp. The working title of the picture is "The Kiss of Death"—this being the name of a famous diamond around which the story is built. In the scene referred to, a trolley car runs wild and, finally, leaving the rails on a high bridge over a gorge, is dashed to pieces on the rocks far below.

To get this remarkable picture it was necessary to stop traffic on a busy trolley line for a number of hours, secure permission from a city to damage an iron bridge and, of course, buy a big trolley car outright. Thurlow Bergen, Elsie Esmond, William Riley Hatch and M. O. Penn are in the cast.

Director Compares Stage to Screen

Lawrence Marston, director of one of the original "big four" New York moving picture companies believes Granville Barker, London's foremost producer of Shakespeare on the speaking stage would do well to jump to motion pictures. Mr. Marston is convinced that the photoplay offers Mr. Barker an unequalled opportunity to present the Bard of Avon as he should be presented.

Lawrence Marston.

"It is an unwritten law of the motion-picture studio," said the veteran director recently, "that when scenes are located amid nature's backgrounds they must be filmed in the open. This possibility of staging classics out of doors is the greatest asset of the cinematograph and if Mr. Barker were sincere in his efforts to give Shakespeare the best mountings possible he would renounce the indoor stage and devote himself to elevating the new art.

"It is Mr. Barker's ambition to present the classics without the arbitrary divisions of acts and scenes. I think the cinematograph has anticipated him in this. Granville Barker's difficulties are those of every producer of 'indoor drama.' Mountains and cascades, real woods and the expanse of waters can be shown with fidelity to Nature only on the moving picture screen. Even in the most spectacular of Hippodrome and Manhattan Opera House productions the introduction of a ship or railroad engine, no matter how elaborate the mechanics of the set, merely excites admiration for the ingenuity of the stage director and does not convince.

"In the motion-picture, however, the Twentieth Century Limited in motion, battleships at sea, armies on the march, transatlantic liners coming up the bay against a background of skyscrapers,—any conceivable object can be introduced as a part of the attendant story with convincing realism.

"I firmly believe that the time is not far distant when the improvement of the motion-picture along lines already foreshadowed will compel the indoor theater to confine itself exclusively to plays of interior scenes.

Liberty Director a Seasoned Actor

Edwin B. Tilton, a valuable member of the Liberty stock company, inherited his talent for impersonations from his father, who was a well-known actor. Mr. Tilton, who has spent his last thirty years on the stage as actor, producer and manager, has been associated with many well-known stars. Some of the most important engagements were with Shook and Colber, C. B. Jefferson, Klaw & Erlanger, Henry W. Savage, Raymond Hitchcock, F. C. Whitney, John Cort, Mary Mannering, Bertha Kalich, Dorothy Donnelly, and Messrs. Lee and J. J. Shubert. Tilton is chief character man and director at the Liberty studios, and the work he has done before the camera thus far stamps him as an actor of sterling ability. Despite the fact that it is often difficult for a player who has been successful on the legitimate stage to adapt himself to picture work, Mr. Tilton has experienced no difficulty in mastering the technique of silent acting.

Essanay Stages Battle

The entire First Regiment, Illinois National Guard, was used one day last week in one of the big battle scenes of "The Plum Tree," the three- act mystery drama which the Essanay Company is producing. With the permission of Governor Dunne and the co-operation of Major John V. Clinnin, the actors in the drama, together with the soldiers, were transported on a special train to Miller's Station, Indiana. There, in a most picturesque ravine, a sham battle between Mexican "Revolutionists" and "Federals" was fought.

Margarita Fischer of the "Beauty" Company has been very distressed during the past few weeks owing to the severe illness of her mother. Mrs. Fischer is better now but her family still feel anxious about her.

Master Seymour Wilson Schulberg is the original of the accompanying "pic," which looks out at you from pages that frequently sponsor the name of Seymour's respected father, "Bennie" F. Schulberg, of the Famous Players Company, he who was first of motion picture publicity men to make an ad copy a work of art. Seymour naturally is a great admirer of his father, and, like him, is individual in his opinions. For instance, Seymour, on being shown a likeness of himself expressed his opinion of the photographer's workmanship by the magical trick of producing two bits of cardboard where but one had been before. But times change, also young men of Seymour's age and habits. Hence, there is a scant likelihood of Seymour's wreaking vengeance upon the photograph used herewith for the simple reason that Seymour is now five months old and the photo two, and young men of Seymour's age and habits do change. A summer at Arverne-by-the-Sea has given Seymour a sunburn of which he might proudly boast, were he that kind of a young man. However, he belongs to the actions-speak-louder-than-words class, just at present, so the only way you'll learn about the sunburn is to make the personal acquaintance of Seymour and see for yourself.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Thanhouser and children, Lloyd and Marie, have returned from their extended stay in Europe. They received a warm welcome from their many friends in the East and are planning a visit to Milwaukee, a former home of Mr. Thanhouser's and the scene of the success of the well-known Thanhouser stock company.

Bessie Learn Prosser learned so many more things than she had bargained for on the trip that took her to Europe that she is a constant source of interest these days out at the Edison studio where she is again at work.

Wallace Beery, better known as "Swedie" in the Essanay comedies, has a new racing car. Recently the company went to Libertyville to take some scenes for a production. A mile dirt track is located at Libertyville, and when Beery was told that he immediately inquired what the track record was. Then nothing would do but he must break said record. He did and is still alive.

H. B. Warner in the Famous Players production, "The Lost Paradise," is the principal feature at the Strand Theater this week.

Grace Cunard and Francis Ford of the western Universal are taking the leads in a three reeler entitled "The Phantom of the Violin." It is one of the most powerful stories that Miss Cunard has ever written and both have very strong acting parts.

A great pavilion, where special parties may gather, dance and generally enjoy themselves, is one of the many features in the rapidly developing Selig jungle-zoo at Los Angeles. The pavilion also will be used by the public in various other ways.

William Garwood of the American Company says that he has to keep busy to keep himself from "embongponks" or girth increasement. Therefore besides sporting in the waves in a violent violet suit, he has spent some of his ranch income on a camera and is taking long hikes. Last Saturday, he walked nineteen miles, from Santa Barbara to San Marcos Pass.

Stella Razeto of the Selig forces escaped certain death by inches last week when the huge glass studio door loosened from its upper groove and fell forward as she was standing near it. Someone shrieked and Miss Razeto sank to her knees under a roll top desk, which was the only thing which saved her from being crushed.

President Guy W. Green of the Nebraska Feature Company, 1210 P street, Lincoln, Nebraska, was a recent caller at Motography's office while on his way to New York City to buy several new multiple reel features. He reports business fine in his section of the country and amazed us with a mention of some of the big houses to which his Rainey African hunt film played in some of the smaller towns of the state. Mr. Green's concern covers a territory consisting of Nebraska, parts of Iowa and Dakota, and is constantly expanding.

Several of the actors at the Hollywood studios of the Universal have received personal invitations urging them to attend the Hallowe'en ball and banquet to be given in Washington, D. C., by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, who offer to pay all expenses incurred en route.

G. M. Anderson, the "Broncho Billy" of Essanay western photoplays, has accomplished a feat which does not necessitate risking his life to perform, but to perfect, has taken long and tedious practice. In a drama called "Broncho Billy Butts In," Mr. Anderson rolls a cigarette with one hand, while with the other he holds a man at bay with a gun.

Quite a number of the "Flying A" actors were present at an impromptu farewell last week to Miss Olive Templeton and Miss Florence Short, who, since the first week in July, have been working in a special feature produced under direction of Thomas Ricketts by the American Film Manufacturing Company.

Manager Thomas A. Persons, of the Selig Zoo, refused a "tempting" offer from a rabbid "fan" a few days ago. "I notice you have only one kind of animal at a time come in when some actor is on the scene," said the letter. "If you pay me $50 I will let them all come at once. I never saw this done before. I'm your man. Ans. quick."

Just because a black snake frightened her in the woods and the New Jersey mosquitos then made her acquaintance, Lillian Walker of the Vitagraph Company has taken a decided dislike to playing in productions requiring "close to nature" settings.

George Larkin, hero of Universal's "Trey o' Hearts" series, recently dived with his hands tied together from a height of sixty feet into a boiling, rock-strewn surf.

Lubliner & Trinz, controlling a number of theatres in Chicago, have contracted for a series of big Kleine pictures.

After September 1 the World Film Corporation will release one multiple reel a week. Among Broadway successes which this concern has contracted to produce are "Mother," "The Gentleman from Mississippi," "The Man of the Hour," "The Pit," "After Dark," and "As Ye Sow."

On Tuesday, August 18, one of the hottest days of the year, Flora Finch was prostrated by the heat at the Vitagraph studio. She was obliged to stay home the balance of the week to insure her complete recovery, but resumed her duties at the studio on August 24.

Justice Saunders, well known in judicial and political circles in New York, appeared in his premier picture at the Universal Studios recently in one of the "Universal Boy" series, in which Matty Roubert, the juvenile screen star, plays the leading part.

Lucien Veuve, treasurer of the Gaumont Company, sailed on the La France Wednesday, August 26, to join the French army now at the front. Mr. Veuve will join his regiment immediately upon his arrival in France.

Dr. H. L. Stafford, well known in the magazine world as a writer of fiction and contributor of technical articles, and who is at present connected with the scenario department of the Universal's western studios, has been assigned to post of special scenario writer for Henry McRae of the 101 Bison Company.

Estelle Mardo Coffin, a recent addition to the Vitagraph players, will be known in the future as Estelle Mardo, this being the professional name she recently decided to adopt.

Webster Cullison, director-in-chief of the Eclair studios at Tucson, Arizona, was host at a luncheon on Saturday, August 22, to the Universal exhibitors of Arizona. A convention of southwest showmen was held in Tucson that week, and on Saturday the exhibitors called at the Eclair studios, where the feast followed an inspection of the plant.

"Julius Caesar," the mighty photo-drama looked forward to as the greatest of Kleine productions, is almost ready for release. Work extending over a period of eighteen months is nearing completion. There are 20,000 costumed people in several of the big scenes.

Harold Lockwood of the Famous Players is keeping himself in perfect trim, despite the heat, by means of the gymnasium and occasional swims. He prefers walking to auto riding and is the despair of the auto agents.

Richard C. Travers, who plays the lead in Edith Huntington Mason's filmatized novel, "The Real Agatha," is shown at the opening of this drama playing golf at one of the country clubs of which he is a member. Although the scenario did not call for it, Mr. Travers made a 250-yard drive when the scene was being taken.

Arthur Jaeger is now manager of the poster department and chief operator at Eclectic's 23rd street exchange. Mr. Jaeger formerly filled the position of operator and manager of the shipping department at the Eclectic office in the World's Tower Building.

Carl Stockdale, the "heavy" of the western Essanay Company, continues to paint his own particular kind of pictures. He spends much of his leisure in roaming about the mountains and valleys of California, painting bits of scenery. His home is filled with beautiful water-colors and he has also done a number of good oils.

A four-part subject entitled "Bartered Lives" will be released by George Kleine within a few weeks. This subject features Miss Hesperia, the European actress, who recently captured first prize in the contest held to determine the most popular woman in films on the other side of the Atlantic.

Announcement has been made by the Thanhouser Film Corporation that David H. Thompson is to appear in moving pictures again. A year ago the Thanhouser company decided that it needed some one to handle its "extra" people and cast the pictures so Dave was selected, but the call of the movies was too great for Dave so he tutored Frank Grimmer, an assistant director, and when the time was ripe Frank "stepped in" and Dave "stepped out."

The members of the three companies of players engaged in staging moving pictures at the plant of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company at Long Beach, Cal., are preparing an elaborate reception, dinner and dance in honor of the approaching sixtieth birthday of Major Daniel Gilfether, dean of the Balboa actors, who, for forty years has been a player.

William W. Johnston, he who started the "Perils of Pauline" on its successful way via attractive advertising and press matter, is now in charge of the publicity desk of the Alco company, at 218 West Forty-second street.

Anna Luther, late of the Lubin company, is now with the Universal-Victor Company, where she is playing opposite Ben Wilson in a series of detective pictures.

Harvey L. Gates, who has the busy "Universal Weekly" desk at 1600 Broadway, is again at work there after a short vacation which gave all the opportunity he wished in which to try out that new car of his.

Vincent Trotta, who for a number of months has been with the Gaumont Company and is responsible for the sketches and composite posters used by both this and the Melies company, has left this position and is open for another of like nature. He has contributed cartoons to Life and other papers and is a brother of Joseph Trotta, the gold medalist. He has had considerable experience with New York engraving companies and is expert in both sketching and cartooning.

Edna Goodrich, stranded at Ostend, who has been engaged in making bandages for the wounded there, writes that her return for the Lasky "Heart of Maryland" picture is indefinite.

Ingvald Oes, president of the Great Northern Film Company, considers a twelve-mile hike a mere incident in his weekly program of events. Last week his constitutional comprised a walk to Tarrytown and tramps across Staten Island are a frequent pastime on Saturday or Sunday.

Edward F. Kaufman, well known in motion picture circles, is now press representative for the Proctor enterprises and can generally be found distributing publicity at Proctor's Fifth Avenue theater. Mr. Kaufman has had much experience and made so many friends while employed on the other side of the motion picture fence that he is perfectly at home in his new position.

Frank Montgomery and Mona Darkfeather, whose identification with Kalem Indian feature productions has made them famous the world over, were visitors at the Centaur studios in Bayonne last week.

ROLL OF STATES

CALIFORNIA.

Oroville, not Chico, is to be the scene of the future activities of the United States Feature Film Company. This was the announcement made recently by George E. Duke, one of the directors of the movie concern, following a conference held with parties in this city.

Crown City Film Manufacturing Company—Capital stock, $200,000; stock subscribed, $7. Seven directors.

DELAWARE.

The following charter was filed at Dover: United Studios Corporation, New York. Capital stock, $300,000. To build, purchase and maintain studios for picture films and exhibitions for same. Incorporators: Thomas Bell, Ida R. Koverman, Harry C. Coughlan, all of New York.

ILLINOIS.

Aurora is to have another motion picture theater, according to a report in Broadway recently. A syndicate is being formed to build a new house in North Broadway, between New York and Spring streets.

Peoria Film Exchange, Peoria; capital stock increased from $2,400 to $5,000.

Royal Film Service Company, Chicago; name changed to Lakeside Film Exchange.

The moving pictures which are being shown at the Rowley rink in Waterman under the auspices of the high school association, have been well attended each of the three evenings, and the boys feel encouraged at the interest manifested.

Herman R. Misch has purchased from Louis and Samuel Ogus and Frank Rabinovich the Alvin theater property, 47x118 feet, in West Chicago avenue, Chicago, south front, 125 feet west of North Ashland avenue, Chicago, consideration not disclosed, but it is understood the price was between $35,000 and $40,000, subject to $10,000, giving the grantors a handsome profit. The land is improved with the Alvin theater, containing about 600 seats.

United Films Corporation, Chicago; capital stock, $100,000; general motion picture business, manufacturing films, etc., and operating picture theaters. Robert Jonas, Nathan Rosenthal and James Christiance.

Work on the new Palace theater in Rockford is progressing.

Animated Film Ad. Co., Chicago; capital stock, $10,000; general photographic and moving picture business. D. W. Powell, R. L. Powell and R. H. Le Vin.

The Majestic theater, Rock Island, has been opened after undergoing extensive improvements. Joseph Quinn is the resident manager.

Freeport is to have a new motion picture theater. Clark Wagner and Leonard Spengler have taken over the building at 113 Galena street, formerly occupied by Balles Brothers. They will remodel the building and decorate in a very artistic manner. The room is 28 feet wide and 128 feet long.

With a brand new moving picture-vaudeville policy, the Empire theater in Rock Island, redecorated and appearing like a new house, has been opened for the season.

INDIANA.

Foild Film Corporation, Virginia; total capital, $2,000; amount in Indiana, $50,000; to exhibit motion pictures; Van Horn Ely, B. N. Busch, H. H. Dean.

Charles Fallon is now the manager of the Nelson theater in Logansport, succeeding Edward F. Galligan.

The explosion of a motion picture film created a panic at the Victoria theater, in Peru. Scores of people made a rush for the doors, but no one was seriously hurt. P. J. McCurdy, the operator, was slightly burned. The fire department saved the theater.

IOWA.

The deal by which the Palace theater people have gained control of the property on North Third street, Burlington, now occupied by the Citizens Water Company, the Kent cleaning establishment and the Hartmann tailor shop, has been consummated and the old building will be torn down and work started on a handsome new moving picture theater as soon as possible. The new building will have a 60-foot frontage with a deep lobby with a storeroom on each side of John H. Kunsky, associated with companies which operate a number of large photo-playhouess in Detroit, has taken a lease of the Washington theater for one year from the Washington Theater Company, and it will be opened August 31 as a photo-playhouse. Howard O. Pierce will be manager.

The Progressive Film and Equipment Company, Lansing, capitalized at $10,000, filed articles of incorporation with the secretary of state. The stockholders are W. D. Ward, A. W. Blankmeyer, H. F. Fowser and H. B. Schwartz.

C. Howard Crane let for Mrs. Hugo Hill the general contract on her one-story brick theater building on the northeast corner of Woodward and Kenilworth avenues, Detroit, to be known as the Alhambra theater, to the Frank Farrington Company.

The general contract on the two-story brick theater, store and flat building at Mack avenue and Riopelle street, Detroit, for Nicol Govannangeli, has been let to Joseph Tinnaly.

Conforming strictly to all state and city regulations and with the most modern and attractive equipment obtainable, the new Temple theater in Sault Ste Marie has been formally opened to the public by the owners, Cook & Beardsley.

MINNESOTA.

Carver will have a motion picture show.

The management of the Metropolitan theater in Rochester has taken over the Grand theater and it will be operated under the supervision of W. J. Pierce in the future.

MISSOURI.

The Victoria theater in St. Louis, under the management of the Grandel Amusement Company, presenting the most notable photoplays, will open on Sunday afternoon, September 6.

NEBRASKA.

J. W. Longworth has re-opened the Favorite theater in Schuyler.

NEW YORK.

Select Photo-Play Producing Co., Inc., New York; motion pictures, etc.; capital, $10,000; incorporators: H. L. Geller, 846 Kelley street, Bronx., Nathaniel M. Kaplan, Bernard C. McKenna, both of 149 Broadway, N. Y. C.

Plans have been filed for a one story moving picture theater at 243 West 110th street and 244 West 111th street, New York, by the S. & R. Amusement Company, to be known as the M. P. Theater. The original plans called for a cost of $10,000 and the revsied plans call for a cost of $19,000.

A motion picture theater to cost 18,000 and seat 500 is to be built at Conkey avenue and Avenue D, Rochester. The owners are J. Fisher, B. Freedman and I. Freedman.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors. Synopses of current films are not printed in MOTOGRAPHY as they may be obtained of the manufacturers.

The Pawn of Fortune

In 5 parts, made by the Whartons. An American drama of the never-know-what's-going-to-happen-next type. It keeps spectators in a breathless, fascinated glow of expectancy—a marooned mechanical genius, savages, sacrificial offerings, treasures in jewels, hereditary genius, a girl safe-breaker and a wind-up of unusual novelty are incidents which assist the fine backgrounds, tense situations, and rapid action of this film to establish it as one of the most unique releases of the season. 1—3—6 sheet posters.

Black Roderick

A 2 part Highland story laid and taken in the Scotch Uplands. It deals with the exciting experiences of a poacher living outside the law in a rugged section of Scotland—Scotch actors—Scotch costumes—living, gripping, realistic scenes. 1—3—6 sheet posters.

The Perils of Pauline

Your patrons will choose the film with the reputation every time. Pauline has established such a reputation for herself that she's first choice among photoplay goers. A new Pauline episode every other week. Pauline and prosperity are running mates.

Cleek Series Comes to Happy Ending

Other Edison Offerings

THE solving of "The Mystery of the Glass Tube" is of more than ordinary importance, as it marks the end of the detective series, the last demonstration of the methods of Cleek, the wizard of criminology, and incidentally Ben Wilson's last Edison picture. It will be released on September 29.

The series ends in the marriage of the hero, as series are wont to end, but this one differs some from the usual ending, inasmuch as the bride is not a person who has shared honors with the hero in all the releases, but has only appeared prominently in two or three, and they not consecutive ones.

Ben Wilson's disguise as one of a band of smugglers is perfect, and bridges important developments that would, with a less perfect disguise, be utterly improbable. An excellent view is given of the sinking of a scuttled ship. The scene takes place at dusk. The ship is seen quite a ways out at sea with a light hanging at the top of each of its two masts. It rocks a little, pitches heavily forward and backward several times, then settles and slowly sinks. It is a realistic piece of work and a credit to its director.

The mystery pertains to the secret shipments of cocaine and opium which continue to enter the country despite the customs officers' efforts to stop the smugglers. Cleek is appealed to and soon learns the rendezvous of the gang, a band of Parisian Apaches. He captures one of the men and binds him to a chair in his apartment. He then changes clothes with him, makes up in his disguise, and pays a visit to the gang's headquarters.

He slinks in and sits down without attracting any special attention. On the table Cleek sees the secret of the cocaine shipments. Eggs are the carriers for the dope. They are opened and the shells filled with some light substance, in the middle of which is a glass tube containing cocaine. The two parts are then placed together and the eggs recrated.

While Cleek is there a message is received instructing the men to meet a boat and take its shipment of eggs. The detective decides to row out to the ship himself and try to trap the smugglers.

In the meantime some of the other members of the gang discover that one of their pals is a captive in Cleek's room and liberate him.

When Cleek boards the vessel he is surprised to find there the Miss Lorne who has previously been the means of saving his life. She tells him of the queer actions of the captain, who has notified her that she is to be taken ashore by one of the sailors. After she leaves, Cleek is taken down into the hold and shown the crate of eggs which is ready to be sent ashore. While the captain has his back turned the detective springs on him and makes him a prisoner. Cleek's plans are defeated by the unexpected arrival of the gang. He is bound hand and foot and left lying on the floor. While some of the men transfer the shipment of cocaine other bore holes in the ship's side.

When Miss Lorne arrives on shore she calls up the superintendent of Scotland Yard and tells him of her fears for Cleek's safety. Soon after he arrives with a few men and the whole party hurry out to the ship, where they find Cleek almost submerged in water in the hold. Just as they reach shore the ship sinks. The smugglers escape, but the business of transporting cocaine and opium in eggs is doomed.

THE humor contained in "In a Prohibition Town" is of the strenuous variety. The awkwardness of a country "boob" and the manner in which he is punished for running away with a drummer's case, is relied upon to provoke laughs, rather than humorous complications, but as Director Seay manages to put the right kind of life in the picture and plenty of it there is no doubt but that it will take with the average spectator, and prove a great source of amusement for those who are meant to be entertained by the Buster Brown adventure which is on the same reel.

Zeke is a boorish sort of a fellow employed in the country store and in love with the storekeeper's daughter, Lizzie. One day the storekeeper sees Zeke in conversation with his daughter and promptly discharges him. Zeke's feelings do not begin to feel hurt at this treatment until he sees the jovial reception given a polished city drummer. The delivery boy, Jake, is also incensed by the drummer's sleek appearance and maliciously chalks the word "whiskey" on the drummer's sample case, in large letters. When Zeke notices the altered case he grabs it and starts off for the constable's office. Daley, a gentleman of leisure and rags, has intended to appropriate the case himself, but when he sees Zeke steal it he notifies the party in the store and sets out in pursuit, closely followed by the others. He overtakes Zeke who drops the case and grapples with him. While they are struggling the others arrive, open the case and take out its contents—fly-paper. This they spread around on the side of the hill. The fighters up above fall and roll down upon the fly-paper, which makes them so uncomfortable that they forget their dispute and help each other get rid of the stuff.

On the same reel is "Buster Brown Gets the Worst of It," which marks Joyce Fair's appearance as Mary Jane in this series. At present Miss Fair is playing a prominent part in "The Dummy" at the Hudson theater, New York City.

This release, which is scheduled for September 30, is different from the usual run of this mischievous boy's pranks only in his receiving the worst of it in the end. Generally his little plans work out perfectly to the great discomfiture of his victims, but this is one case where the final laugh is on him.

THE title of "The Blue Coyote Cherry Crop" keeps one guessing as to its relation to the picture until the very last scene, when we learn that the harvesting of the "crop" is a metaphor for Jack's successful wooing of Cherry, a sweet, wholesome girl, well characterized by Mabel Trunnelle. Robert Connes plays the lead opposite her as the young miner, Jack.

It is a one-reel drama, and easily one of the best pictures which the Edison company has released for some time. The sympathy of the spectator is aroused by the noble sacrifice of the young miners and their intention of concealing their generous act which finally brings them before an investigating committee to account for the lack of payment of further dividends from the Blue Coyote mine, which, in reality, had never paid anything, the money coming from the savings of the miners.

Things look pretty bad for Jack when he refuses to explain the reason for the Blue Coyote's not paying dividends. Even Cherry suspects him of mishandling the funds. At this critical moment the villain appears in the sheriff's office, without being summoned or without any obvious reason for casually dropping into the place and unconsciously gives evidence that clears Jack instead of convicting him, as he had hoped. Aside from this small point Ashley Miller's usual careful direction and cleverly thought out situations are in evidence throughout the picture.

As Bob, Arthur Housman supplies the only touch of humor in the picture. He is a constant smoker and his first inspiration on seeing another distressed is to offer him a cigar. It hurts his feelings to have his donation refused, and he shows his sorrow when Cherry disregards the proffered cigar entirely and her father, recovering from a severe attack of the heart, impatiently motions him away. Edward Earle, John Sturgeon and Carlton King are other Edison favorites who take important parts. The film will be released September 22.

Old man Baker, the owner of the Blue Coyote mine, dies penniless. His daughter, Cherry, is attending a school in the East at the time. Jack, Bob and Ed, three of Baker's friends, start a fund with their savings and each quarter Cherry receives money for her tuition, supposedly the dividend from her father's mine. Finally the miners' funds run out and Cherry is notified that the mine has failed.

The mysterious attitude of the three men arouses in her the suspicion that the mine has not been properly worked. An investigation is ordered and Jack refuses to explain the reason for the mine's sudden failure. At his command Bod and Ed keep silent. Alec, a sneak, who hates Jack, then tells about Jack's paying the tuition for some girl in an eastern school, and of his pawning his watch to secure money. Cherry is astounded to hear this and begs forgiveness for her narrow-mindedness. In the last scene we are shown the harvesting of the "Cherry crop"—the girl's acceptance of Jack's proposal.

Garwood Playing Characters

William Garwod has two fine parts in which to give examples of his artistry and it is doubtful whether there is any actor on the screen today, who can express more by subdued action and the use of the eyes than Billy Garwood. In the "Cocoon and the Butterfly," he was the owner of a department store and in "Break, Break, Break" from the Tennyson poem, he appeared as an old man who saw incidents in his life unrolled. It is not often Garwood is seen in characters, yet he is a character actor of attainment.

Little Kathie Fischer, niece of Miss Margarita Fischer, of the "Beauty" company, celebrated her seventh birthday last Friday.

Youthful Film Stars Discuss Work

The Benham Children Talk

"GEE, but I was glad you sent for me, mother!" Leland Benham announced as he came through the door of the Harry Benham dressing room, out at the Thanhouser plant. Then he saw the company and stopped, though his eager smile remained as he shook hands and again turned to his mother.

"Didn't you have your lesson ready?" asked Mrs. Benham, looking her young son in the eyes, while she smoothed down the hair that a hastily removed cap had mussed.

"Yes, I had my lesson all right," reassured Leland.

"Then why were you so glad that I sent for you?" his mother persisted, and Leland returned with a broadened smile, "Well, when a fellow knows his lesson, what's the use of staying and saying it, when he might be doing something else?"

Dorothy Benham.

"Well, that's what school's for," laughed Mrs. Benham and made room on her chair for Leland. "I've sent home for Dorothy," she enlightened her small son, "and meanwhile you tell the lady all you know about your work in pictures, and how old you are, and get one of your new pictures for her."

In a studious pose.

Leland Benham.

"Oh," responded Leland, the responsibility of his position evidenced in the expression of his eyes; and then, "Sure!" as the last injunction suggested itself as being the easiest of fulfillment. Feeling around under jars of cream and powder, he stealthily and safely withdrew a photograph of himself from a drawer, and, after a glance at it, passed it over with the comment, "A pretty good picture."

As it met with approval the boyish face was covered with a frank smile.

"Glad you like it," he said returning to the portion of the chair that was his.

"I'm ten," he began, swinging the feet that didn't touch the floor, "and I'm in the fourth grade. I'd a' been in the fifth," he added, "only—"

Then the door opened and a little girl who barely reached the door knob with one fat hand, was pushed gently in and left standing there.

"Dorothy!" said Mrs. Benham, holding out her hands to her small daughter. And "Dor'thy!" said Leland, reaching his sister's side and attempting to release the hand that clung desperately to the door knob.

"Let mother," suggested Mrs. Benham. "She loves door knobs," she explained. And Dorothy proved it, for it was some time before she released the knob in order to allow the removal of her coat. But once parted company with the knob, the door no more claimed her attention and she advanced to a closer survey of the room and the company.

A butterfly bow of pink held securely to the top of the golden hair to which it was moored, and an embroidered white dress cleared the plump knees, which showed round and smooth through the white-ribbed stockings. The round brown eyes held innumerable questions in their gaze, but it was not until Mrs. Benham mentioned the word "acting" that Dorothy deigned to speak. The word was magical, for it brought the information.

"Likes to ack! Likes to ack!" And the pink bow bobbed violently.

"Ack and pay tea 'ouse," she further informed, standing on tiptoe at the dressing table in search of new worlds to conquer in the way of toilet articles.

"She means she likes to play house and have tea parties," interpreted the mother of Dorothy, who was then called away by somebody in the corridor, leaving the Benhams and the company alone. Dorothy discovered that the back of the ornament on the company's coat-chain made an almost good mirror, and she held her head on one side and then on the other, during the extended scrutiny which followed. At peace with herself, the world and the back of the ornament, she hummed and minutely examined the reflection of each feature.

"She likes mirr'rs," informed Leland, "and always looks in her plate at table, to see if she can see herself. She's four, Dor'thy is, and I'm ten. Dor'thy's been in pictures, too, but not as much as I, 'cause I'm older. I've been in since I was six. I was in a picture with daddy first. The picture I liked best was 'Little Brother,' 'cause I had to put crabs in Bill Russell's bed. Ha! ha! that was a funny picture." He sat back on the chair, crossed his legs and went on:

"I want t' be a good actor like daddy when I'm big. But I like only funny things and daddy likes ever'thing; but I play other things," he amended.

Again the word "acting" had its effect on Dorothy. Glancing at Leland she intimated her desire to sit down, and further demonstrated her interest to emulate Leland by attempting to cross one fat knee over the other.

"Dor'thy wants to do ever'thing I do," said Leland. "And she loves to have a bath and to dance." As though inspired, Dorothy slid off of the chair and pirouetted about the little room, humming an original accompaniment. In the midst of this entertainment Mrs. Benham returned. She expressed the belief that Dorothy was going to be a dancer, as she could float around beautifully to musical accompaniment. And very probably Dorothy is, as she undoubtedly inherits the talent from her mother, who was a professional dancer.

"She's very proud of herself whenever she works in a picture," observed Mrs. Benham, and Leland, who has had four years of varied roles and successful results in Thanhouser pictures, escaped behind his mother's chair and played dog to the great joy of his small sister.

First Picture of Lubin Series

"Lord Cecil Intervenes" is the first story of the series that the Lubin Company is releasing under the caption of "The Beloved Adventurer," and in which Arthur Johnson plays the role of Lord Cecil, assisted by Lottie Briscoe as a girl of the Golden West.

This first incident of the series tells of the admirable way in which the beloved adventurer saves a young and beautiful heiress from the clutches of an adventuress and her accomplice, who plan to ruin the girl and secure her fortune. In the rescue Cecil displays much clever detective ability and achieves the most excellent results, thereby winning the eternal gratitude of the girl who will, for the balance of her life, regard him as a guardian or second father.

Mr. Johnson makes a wonderful and forceful character of "The Beloved Adventurer" and the pictures which follow will doubtless be anxiously looked forward to learn of the further exploits of this excellent and typical Englishman.

Warner's Stockholders Meet

The annual stockholders' meeting of Warner's Features, Inc., was held in the company's offices on Thursday, September 3. This meeting had been originally scheduled for August 3, but was adjourned one month to permit the completion of important plans connected with the preparation and release of the new Warner's program.

A feature of the meeting was the report of the treasurer which was highly gratifying to the stockholders. The report showed wonderful progress made by the company during the past fiscal year and formed an emphatic record of achieved success. It was unanimously decided to double the company's capitalization in order to cover the larger increase in its operations.

The growth of Warner's Features, Inc., is a reminder of the extensive scale on which it began business when P. A. Powers took charge of its affairs. At the outset Mr. Powers adopted the policy of doing nothing by halves. The result was that from the very first the company has covered a wide territory, with exchanges throughout this country, and abroad. This was an unusually daring policy, but Mr. Powers' wisdom in adopting it is amply proved by the tremendous business which the company is now doing the world over. To-day there are thirty-four Warner's Exchanges in the United States, Canada and Europe.

P. A. Powers, head of Warner's Features, Inc.

The stockholders increased the directorate of the company to seven members instead of four. The directors are: P. A. Powers, J. A. McKinney, W. D. Campbell (of Campbell-Heath & Co.) New York; J. E. Baum (of the Supplee-Biddle Hardware Co. of Philadelphia); H. M. Warner, L. B. Erb, Leo C. Stern.

The officers elected are: P. A. Powers, president; H. M. Warner, vice-president; O. S. Goan, treasurer; J. A. McKinney, secretary, and P. A. Chase, assistant secretary and assistant treasurer.

Essanay to Produce "The Slim Princess"

The Essanay Company announces the production, in the near future, of "The Slim Princess" by George Ade. Although Miss Elsie Janis had an unusually successful run in the play, the motion picture scenario has been adapted from the story, which first appeared serially in the Saturday Evening Post. The Essanay comedy-drama will be in four acts with Miss Ruth Stonehouse in the leading role of the princess of slender proportions.

Australian Bandit Exposed in London

"Captain Swift" Pleases

"CAPTAIN SWIFT," the newest release of the Life Photo Film Corporation, is commended to the liking of the picture world by virtue of its sterling worth as a film of interest, of well handled situations, of capable direction, of good photography and of rich settings. Its men fit admirably the characters they impersonate and its women are well-cast and beautifully gowned. The director's choice of locations is fortunate in that it affords a nature treat; and the interior settings are in accordance with the status of the families involved.

The story is that by C. Haddon Chambers and it loses nothing in interest in the scenario version given it by the Life Photo company. A strong cast is an important factor in the film's success and the names of William H. Tooker, David Wall, Iva Shepard, Harry Spingler and George De Carlton are among those that comprise the cast.

David Wall has the title role and takes, equally well, the part of the rangeman whose name is feared throughout the vicinity of Queensland, Australia, and that of the man who, under the name of William Wilding, returns to England, is received by a family of caste and wealth, and falls in love with a girl who is the guest and neice of his own mother. That Mrs. Seabrook is his mother, is a fact that William Wilding does not learn until the vengeance of the land that knew him as the hold-up man, "Capt. Swift," is closing in upon him. For Wilding is the son of Mrs. Seabrook and the affianced husband of her youth, whose sudden death occurred before the planned date of their marriage had arrived. The fatherless baby is taken away by Lady Staunton, sister of Constance, the young mother, and given into the care of the widow Marshall, whose own son is only a few years older than that of her new charge. With nobody but her sister aware of her relation to the child, Constance married James Seabrook and in the love of a son and daughter tried to forget the existence of her fatherless boy. At the Marshall cottage, the boys grew up in hatred of each other, owing to the older boy's vicious nature, and, at the age of twelve, the younger boy works his way to Australia. It is years later that we again see him; he is lost in the desert and exhausted, when he chances upon a group of travelers, steals food and a horse, and because of the swiftness of his get-away is referred to as "Captain Swift." Through the outlaw years of his life which follow, the name clings to him.

"To steal but not kill," is his motto, and when the wealthy George Gardner, held up on a deserted road, challenges him to kill if he wants his plunder, "Capt. Swift" commands him to ride on, and, turning, rides into Queensland, robs the bank, and shaving off his beard sails for England as William Wilding.

In London, he stops the runaway horse of James Seabrook and the latter takes him to his home as his guest. There his great resemblance to the lover of her youth is noted by Mrs. Seabrook, who sends for her sister, and both agree that Wilding is "Captain Swift" refuses to kill Gardner.

Mrs. Seabrook's son, Marshall, the widow's son, has been taken into the Seabrook household as butler, and he, too, is convinced of the identity of Wilding. Gardner, a friend of Mabel Seabrook, arrives from Queensland but owing to Wilding's changed appearance, does not recognize him. Stella Darbisher, Mrs. Seabrook's neice, beloved by Harry Seabrook, her son, takes a great liking to Wilding and the latter's attentions to her arouse Harry's jealousy.

One day, Michael Ryan, a detective from Queensland, arrives and calls upon Gardner, informing him that "Capt. Swift" is in London and that he intends to capture him. The butler has received his discharge from Mrs. Seabrook, as she fears he may reveal the identity of Wilding to her husband. In revenge, Marshall gives his information to the detective. The latter decides that Wilding and the fugitive are the same person. Wilding, who has become engaged to Stella, is informed by Mrs. Seabrook that she is his mother, and that he must not marry her neice. The detective arrives to place Wilding under arrest; Marshall is stationed outside to prevent his escape, and Wilding, jumping from an upper window, is shot by Marshall. The bullet from the detective's gun, intended for the fugitive, kills Marshall.

As Marshall, William Tooker does an exceptionally fine piece of character work. It is strong and convincing and adds another credit mark to the many accorded this polished "heavy." Iva Shepard does her best film work, up to date, as Mrs. Seabrook, and George De Carlton furnishes his usual allotment of humor in his hole of Gardner. The jealous Harry Seabrook is well played by Harry Spingler and Ethel Wayne is likeable in the role of Stella Darbisher. The proud Lady Staunton is well portrayed by Gladys Fairbanks, and the widow Marshall by Emily Lorraine. Philip Robson as the gouty Sir James Staunton, Maxine Brown as Mabel Seabrook, and Thomas O'Keefe as the detective, all add to the merit of the interesting life-story of "Captain Swift."

War Film a Plea for Peace

The Great Northern Film Company's production of "Lay Down Your Arms" is a most unusual feature. It depicts great battle scenes with such remarkable realism and treats modern warfare comprehensively but, although primarily a war picture, is really an anti-war picture, the underlying purpose of which is to create a hatred for war and advance the cause of peace.

The authoress of the novel upon which this photoplay is founded, the late Baroness Bertha Von Suttner, was perhaps the greatest exponent of universal peace and the most energetic worker in its behalf that the world has ever known. She was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1905, as a result of her wonderful activity in advocating the practice of arbitration and the abolition of war.

Another scene which drives home the horrors of war.

The film drama of "Lay Down Your Arms" has served to immortalize the sentiments and principles, for which the baroness was noted. The picture is mute testimony that war is merely a series of horrors and miseries for non-combatants as well as the combatants.

The production is staged on a most elaborate and massive scale, having enlisted the services of hundreds of people in the making. The battle scenes are stupendous and spectacular, and, with the great dramatic power of the story and the excellence of the acting, make the film a very extraordinary one.

Philadelphia Reel Fellows Organize

The Reel Fellows of Philadelphia have formed a social club where the prominent film men of Philadelphia and adjacent cities, who are members, can bring their wives and friends on Sundays to witness the different entertainments which the Reel Fellows committee will provide. At the first business meeting of the new organization, held on Sunday, August 30, at the Ridge Avenue Theater, the following officers were elected: E. L. Perry, president; S. Libros, 1st vice-president; Ben Zerr, 2nd vice-president; Siegmund Lubin, 3rd vice-president; Howard G. Bobb, 4th vice-president; Wm. Fox, 5th vice-president; Jack Levy, treasurer; Jay Emanuel, secretary, and Steve Talbot, financial secretary. The board of directors consists of all the executive officers and Stanley Mastbaum, Joseph Hebrew, Lewis Swaab and Dave Sablosky. Bennie Zeidman is press representative.

Contract with Mutual Renewed

The existing arrangements of the Mutual Film Corporation and the New York Motion Picture Corporation for the marketing of Keystone, Broncho, Kay-Bee and Domino films, are to continue in the future as in the past. The renewal of the contract, which expired in August, has been the subject of much discussion ever since Messrs. Ince and Sennett came to New York six weeks ago. The matter has been arranged on terms highly acceptable to all concerned.

Man's Sacrifice Rewarded by Girl

"A Splendid Dishonor"

SPLENDID dramatic acting on the part of all the principals in the cast, especially Ruth Stonehouse and Francis X. Bushman, make Essanay's two-part release of Friday, September 25, entitled "A Splendid Dishonor," one of great strength, which is certain to hold the interest from the initial scene to the final fade-out.

The plot deals with the sacrifice of a man who believes his life is near an end but who later discovers he is in perfect health, only to face the electric chair. From this apparently sad ending the film is happily and entertainingly turned into the channels of a pleasing close by a swift and surprising denouement. The construction of the plot is clever and a surprise appears at almost every crisis.

Sargeant refuses to let the penitent Hugh return to jail.

Mr. Bushman is perfectly at ease in a role which allows a wide range of dramatic acting and he is ably supported by Miss Stonehouse, who does some very meritorious emotional work. In several close range scenes both register the feelings of their characters with great realism. E. H. Calvert, who directed the production, also appears as a lawyer who is instrumental in finally straightening matters out, and handles his character in a clever manner. Lester Cuneo, a recent addition to the Essanay forces, portrays an insane doctor in a masterful way. Bryant Washburn, as the heroine's brother, also does very good work.

The settings are arranged with great care and the photography is clear throughout. The fade-out is used extensively and in one or two places it introduces scenes which appear to be out of place, this to the detriment of the story's continuity, but the acting is so good that it covers this fault satisfactorily.

The story opens with the finding, by Hugh Annersley, of the body of a friend named Bowers, a bullet lodged in his heart. Hugh is discovered in Bowers' office with the gun in his hand and is placed under arrest, charged with murder. Detectives at once get busy and secure enough circumstantial evidence to make him appear a murderer.

His sister, Julia, is heartbroken, as she has always been her brother's chum and, while she is certain of his innocence, she can do nothing to help him. She visits him in his cell and tells him to face the ordeal bravely and that everything will come out all right in the end for she knows that her cheering words do much to keep her brother hopeful. The strain tells on her, however, and soon her own health begins to fail.

Frank Sargeant, wealthy young man, knows his heart is weak and consults Dr. Appledane, a famous physician The doctor examines him and then, with a queer light in his eyes, tells him he cannot live more than six months. It is a hard blow to Sargeant and he desperately pleads with the doctor to do something to save him, but the latter says he is beyond hope. Julia's poor health forces her to come to Dr. Appledane and just as Sargeant is leaving the office she enters.

The girl sees the desperate look in the man's eyes and is strangely interested in him. She asks the doctor what ails him and is told of the limited period he has to live. In an instant a thought enters her mind. Why could not this man, who is doomed to death, take the blame of the crime for which her innocent brother is about to go to the electric chair? She decides it is her one chance to save her brother and hurries after Sargeant.

The doomed man returns to his home desperate. He knows that if he has but a short time to live it will mean misery for him every time he thinks of the future, so he decides it is better to end it all at once. He arranges his worldly possessions so that there will be no confusion in regard to them and then slowly raises a pistol to his temple. Just as he does, Julia, who has followed him, appears at the door and her scream causes him to pause in the act of self-destruction.

He demands an explanation of her intrusion and the girl tells him of the horrible mistake the officials are about to make and begs him to take her brother's place. He at first refuses, and tells her to leave the house, but she pleads with him to give his life that is almost spent to save the only protector she has in the world. Sargeant realizes to refuse and then take his own life would be selfishness, so he agrees to shoulder the punishment for the crime of which her brother is innocent.

Carefully he plans to draw the detectives' suspicions upon himself and gradually they begin to believe that he is implicated. Then as the net draws closer about him he calls on Julia and tells her that they are about to take him. It is then that they discover they love each other and the girl is terrified at the thought that their love is in vain. She almost wishes she had not asked Sargeant to make the sacrifice, but he tells her it is better thus.

The detectives find the bait Sargeant sets for them and, convinced that he is the murderer, place him under arrest. He says that he is guilty and when he is placed in jail Hugh is released. Julia is torn between joy at her brother's release and sorrow at the imprisonment of the man she now loves. Hugh sees her in Sargeant's arms and denounces the man he believes a murderer. Neither Sargeant or Julia dare say a word, for to tell of Sargeant's sacrifice would mean the failure of the plan to save Hugh.

The time passes, and one day while Sargeant is reading the paper he learns that Dr. Appledane has been sent to the insane asylum and that he had declared many people to be on the point of death that were perfectly well. An examination proves to Sargeant that he was one of them. Then he realizes the bitterness of giving up the greatest thing he has ever known in life—his love for Julia. He determines he will say nothing, however, for he feels she loves her brother too much to part with him.

Van Epworth, a criminal lawyer and a staunch friend of Sargeant's, now comes to his rescue, for he feels that the young millionaire is concealing something from the police. The lawyer works out a theory he has formed and the end is the confession of Dr. Appledane that he was the man who killed Bowers. The doctor says he had experimented on the man and when the powders he gave him had caused his death he fired a bullet through his heart and made the death appear like a murder.

Sargeant is released and when Hugh, who has learned the truth, meets him, he begs his forgiveness for his rash words. Sargeant willingly excuses him and then goes to claim Julia.

The cast is as follows:

Frank Sergeant	Francis X. Bushman
Hugh Annersley	Bryant Washburn
Julia, his sister	Ruth Stonehouse
Dr. Appledane	Lester Cuneo
Van Epworth, a criminal lawyer	E. H. Calvert
Brewster	Thos. Commerford
Kerns	Chas. Hitchcock
Havens, a detective	John H. Cossar

Gasnier Makes Rescue

Pearl White came near taking one chance too many at Saranac Lake, in the Adirondacks, last week, while working in the thirteenth episode of "The Perils of Pauline." Visitors to that beautiful sheet of water will remember the rocky cliffs of one portion of the shore—bold headlands with deep water right at their bases. Pauline was being chased by a band of gypsies and had to jump from the top of the cliffs into the lake in order to make her escape. She did the jump bravely and shot through the air to the water, but unfortunately did not strike "cleanly." In consequence the wind was knocked out of her, and Chief Director Gansier, of Pathé, standing on the shore with his camera men, saw her make a few feeble struggles and then sink. Mr. Gasnier then did in real life what he has directed some thousands of heroes to do in photoplays—plunged into the water and rescued the heroine. It is worthy of note that a half hour later Miss White made the same jump again and this time the camera "got it right."

Pathe Still Producing in France

Word has been received by the American offices of Pathe Freres that their French studios are still producing negatives, despite the war. There are a sufficient number of actors who are exempt from military service to insure a steady supply of pictures.

In addition to this there was a good stock of unreleased pictures on hand when war broke out, sufficient in itself to meet the requirements of the American market for a considerable length of time regardless of the recent productions. Altogether the feeling in the American offices of the French concern is one of optimism.

Interesting Story of Underworld

Girl Reforms Pal

Dora entertains the patrons of the dance hall.

JUST by way of proving its versatility, the American company puts on a drama of the underworld this week under the title, "The Redemption of a Pal," which is skillfully handled and well acted throughout. The players prove they are just as adept in dramas of the underworld as they are in the western or society types of play in which the public is more accustomed to seeing them.

Winifred Greenwood appears as Dora, a dancing girl, who ultimately sees the error of her ways and reforms, while Edward Coxen is cast as Lane, a banker, interested in uplift work in the slums. George Field plays Andy, a pal of Dora's and a ne'er do well, who is induced to lead a better life through Dora's influence. Charlotte Burton, as Lane's sister, has a small and rather unimportant part, but she does well the little given her to do.

Andy rescues Charlotte from the flames.

Owing to the fact that so many scenes of the story are laid in the slums not much chance is given for settings of magnitude, but the backgrounds are at all times convincing and realistic.

Dora, the dance hall girl, is seen, as the picture begins, entertaining the patrons of the cheap dance hall with a few fancy steps. As her dance ends she descends from the stage and takes a seat at one of the tables where drinks are served. Andy, her pal, arrives a few minutes later and tells her that he and a gang of his fellows have been surprised in their basement meeting place by a detective, but have managed to overpower the sleuth and make their escape. Dora remonstrates with Andy for associating with gunmen and toughs, and warns him that if he keeps company with thieves and thugs he will surely be apprehended by the police and ultimately land in jail.

The girl manages to make Andy see the danger of his mode of life and he promises to endeavor to reform for her sake, though he is by nature indolent and shiftless and inclined to believe the whole world against him.

Meanwhile Lane, a young and wealthy banker, interested in uplift work, plans to visit the slums with a party of friends, though the trip is made purely out of curiosity and as a sightseeing expedition, rather than with any thought of helping the unfortunates who reside in the slums. One of the party is pretty Charlotte Lane, sister of the banker, and she fairly revels in the bizarre experiences with which she meets while in the edge of the underworld.

While the party are in the dance hall Lane is attracted by the beauty of Dora, who is still seated at the table where she had been talking with Andy, though now it is another rough of the lower strata with whom she is conversing. Suddenly the man makes some insulting remark, Dora flushes and attempts to draw away, and the young tough tries to seize her in his arms. Lane is on his feet in a moment and with one blow of his fist sends the thug a dozen feet across the room.

Instantly the whole room is excited. The rough element which infests the dance hall gathers about, expecting to see "the dude" properly disciplined by the man he had knocked down, but that individual has evidently had quite enough to satisfy him, for he slinks away without even offering to again face Lane. Quiet settles down over the room and Lane takes advantage of the opportunity to speak briefly with Dora. He finds her much better educated than he had imagined possible and in some ways she proves quite refined.

An old and bleary-eyed woman approaches the table with flowers for sale, but Lane is so interested in Dora that he curtly pushes her aside and refuses to buy. Dora, influenced by some whim, draws the old woman back to the table, shoves her into a chair, and a moment later whirls out onto the floor in a graceful dance. The dance concluded, Dora seizes Lane's hat and passes it through the throng, collecting a perfect rain of quarters, dimes and nickles. All of these she pours into the old woman's faded shawl and sends her on her way rejoicing over more wealth than she has possessed in months.

Deeply touched by Dora's act of charity, Lane finds himself moved with a desire to do something really worth while for the poor of the district and, ere leaving the dance hall, he gives Dora a card bearing his address and asks her to call upon him at his office the following day. Much surprised, Dora promises to come.

From the dance hall Lane's slumming party visits Chinatown and drops in on many unconventional little scenes in various parts of the tenderloin, returning home at last in the wee sma' hours of the morning.

When Dora calls upon Lane the next day she interrupts a conversation between the banker and his sister, though Dora, not knowing Charlotte, supposes Lane's companion to be his sweetheart. After Charlotte has departed Lane enoys a long talk with Dora and suggests to her a plan for aiding the people of the slums, provided she is willing to take charge of the aid bureau he is willing to create. Seeing this as a means of getting out of the dance hall and helping many of her acquaintances to lead a better life, Dora joyfully agrees to everything that Lane suggests and the two set immediately about putting their plan into operation.

Andy, spurred on by Dora's faith in him, secures a job as porter in a store and earns his first honest dollar. One day, however, another girl of the district meets and talks with him and Andy all but gives up his good resolutions. Seeing that Andy is interested in her, this rival of Dora's hastens to bring to Andy's attention the growing intimacy between Dora and Lane. She even takes him to a building which advertises light housekeeping rooms for rent, and explains that Dora and Lane have been passing many hours there together of late. Believing that Dora is false to him, Andy watches her, and one day encounters her face to face in the entrance of the building. Learning what he suspects, Dora takes Andy and his lady friend within and shows them how Mr. Lane has leased a whole floor of the building, has fixed up the rooms as hospitals, nurseries, play rooms for children, and capped it all off by naming the new quarters Dora's Aid. She explains that Dora's Aid is to uplift and help the poor of the slums, and that all will be welcome there whenever they choose to come. Ashamed of his suspicions, surprised at what he had seen, and proud of Dora for all that she has accomplished, Andy begs to be forgiven for his distrust and declares that he himself thereafter will be a frequent caller at Dora's Aid.

A night or two later the clang of fire bells resounds across the way and Andy and Dora discover that a Chinese opium den in the neighborhood is in flames, while its inmates, most of them stupified with the drug of the poppy, are helpless to save themselves. Without a thought for his own safety, Andy dashes into the burning building and helps many to safety. Among others is a well dressed girl, who is so stupid with opium that she isn't even aware there is a fire until she has been saved. This girl is carried to Dora's rest and put to bed in the hospital and Dora recognizes her as Lane's sweetheart.

Lane, reading of the fire in the paper next morning, hastens to Dora's Aid and finds Andy with his arms in bandages, but a hero. Silently Dora leads him to the hospital and the girl she supposes his sweetheart. Then Dora comes back, alone. Andy makes bold to ask her hand in marriage and Dora, believing Lane in love with the other girl, says "yes" to his plea. Hours later she finds it is Lane's sister whom Andy has rescued, but her word is given, so Dora loyally determines to make Andy a good wife and endeavors to forget Lane.

Wisconsin Exhibitors to Organize

A meeting of all exhibitors in the state of Wisconsin will be held at the Plankington House in Milwaukee Tuesday morning, September 15, to organize and fight the bills which are pending before the legislature in regard to censorship, state license and state building code. The Motion Picture Association of Milwaukee started the movement.

On the Outside Looking In

By the Goat Man

Stella Razeto, Selig star, in crinoline.

I WOULD have taken those two weeks for my outing if it was to have been the last act of my life. I got my fish! I have known people who have been beating back to the north woods of Wisconsin for years and years, "suffering" the vicissitudes of camp life, trudging the trails through the balsam ladened forests, up and down the hills, among the deer and partridges, but haven't a thing to show, even yet. When you graduate from taking your "muskie," then you seek the tarpon. I'm more keen for a post-graduate course in Lower Price Lake, twenty-one miles southwest of Fifield. Muskelunge grow in that lake. You have to throw 'em back when they fall short of thirty inches long! The law made it very plain that I could keep the last one I caught. Fancy heaving over a fish that had fought you for fifteen minutes—it was like having all your friends go back on you at once.

It was at about this time, as a matter of fact, that a number of my film friends were throwing me over. Not that they wanted to especially, but because the game grew so fast that somebody merely forgot. Strange tales have filtered into my Chicago office regarding things that have recently been pulled off in New York. As nearly as I can grasp the flying fabric, genuine film men — men who have known their business right well up to within the past month—have been listening to the songs of the advertising experts. There has been a marked tendency of late to listen to mere stories. The stories of the "advertising expert" have been slow to invade the film business. The agency men are careful to know where the money was to come from. They have had clients a plenty to use the space that they had contracted for in advance. When the fire began in Europe, the equally careful client put on the brakes. That meant dead space for the agency and they turned in a hurry to the films and their producers. At least one agency has worked at least one combination to fall for the big stunt—use the national media. We have seen the start. Not being superhuman we cannot see the finish, but we can make a book on the outcome. Take the Saturday Evening Post with its $5,000 pages. What percentage of motion picture theater men read the Post? Your guess is as good as mine. We both know, in a blind sort of fashion, that $1,200 is too much money to pay for a talk to m. p. exhibitors in the Post, to cover the period of one short week. The same money spent in a trade journal will talk to 'em for six months every week and get 'em. The motion picture theater men—those who amount to the distinction, read trade journals. The city wops never read anything. They are exhibitors, alright, but the film maker never gets any of their money. You follow me, I hope. Thousands of copies of MOTOGRAPHY reach this junk exhibitor because we can't find him out. If we could distinguish between the Pastime Theater on High street and the Pastime Theater on Low street, we'd omit the Low street Pastime.

Charlotte Burton of the "Flying A."

It is pertinent to add that the High street Pastime doesn't care a rap about the advertising to the public. This theater already has the public eating out of his hand. He hasn't seats enough; he is having trouble with the local authorities, because he attracts a hold-out crowd. He has learned who makes the dependable films and he learned it from the trade journal that sends its reviewers to the film studio to see the advance showing of the film itself and then told the story and printed illustrations of principal scenes. At least one of the newer groups of New York feature program thrills has been led into an eighth of a million dollars' expenditure because of an advertising agency expert. See posters for further particulars.

Edison, Like Motography, has a goat. You can see it in "Buster Brown Gets the Worst of It."

Not one of the advertising men employed by the several film makers of this particular group can honestly declare their full approval of the new order of things. As film advertising men they know better.

The thing that gets my goat is that MOTOGRAPHY was permitted to class with the magazines that reach the public instead of the trade. Compliments have a costly way of declaring themselves, sometimes. Merely because MOTOGRAPHY—as a trade journal—heads the list as a news stand seller, doesn't mean that it isn't a trade journal. If it were possible to eliminate this news stand sale, we'd be more than happy. There isn't anything in it for us. By the same token, there isn't anything in it for the Saturday Evening Post, which has more circulation than it cares for. The advertiser in the film trade field will wake up some day to the fact that he can reach his trade and plus, when he plants his business with this de luxe bazoo.

And we only charge for the trade field—remember that!

Incidentally, the Saturday Evening Post isn't going to send George Horace Lorimore and Sam Blythe down to see the films every week and give them two or three page reviews!

A few weeks ago I returned from New York. While I was down there I wrote about the programs in the air. It was the corner conversation of every film group. To-day we have four brand new programs in the announcements and Lewis Selznick to hear from. Adolph Zukor has his and Chas. Baumann has his and Harry Raver has his and Pat Powers has his. There are enough manufacturers lying around loose to make three or four more, if you'll stop and think it over. Wonderful, how the dope runs true. When they fight the last battle on the other side of the little pond, look out for C. Lang Cobb, Jr., with a War Program.

You can stick a pin right here that the war films will never come through while the war lasts. Our imbecilic war strategist tells us that the cameramen are everywhere and that the crank goes around and around, but there are no prints—no current releases.

A scene from Lubin's "Lord Cecil Intervenes," the first of "The Beloved Adventurer" series.

When the war is over and the censors are through with looking at the negatives, we may get some pictures, but not before.

I have talked with friends who have just returned from the other side. There isn't anything to see over there, which should be proof there will be nothing of a war nature to see here. Of course, occasional scraps of films are picked up of battle fields, soldiers in camp, and the like, but they have little or no interest for us. The theaters themselves are having a serious time of it. It takes men to exhibit films and these same men are to be found in the ranks throughout most of continental Europe.

Postcards on my desk tell me that Fred Beecroft is or was at Cliff Island, Maine; Mary Fuller at Blue Mountain House, Shohola, Pa.; Watterson Rothacker at Old Point Comfort, Va.; and Mabel Condon at Norfolk, Va. Wid Gunning seems to be totally obscured by that Irish beard he is growing.

I will never be able to get around to the New York crowd I recently visited, I'm sure. In an idle moment I dropped in to see Percy Waters, of General Film Company. (See war portrait of Mr. Waters herewith, dressed in his every-day togs.) As we gather years of wisdom, prior to the battle against gray hairs, it is natural, wholly so, to learn to take things philosophically. I always drop in to see Mr. Waters. There is only one thing in common between us and that is cigarettes. The brands are different, however. Mr. Waters is one man who doesn't believe in advertising a film program. He is as earnest about his belief as he is earnest about other things he does. With all the competition that threatens the General, there isn't a trace that Mr. Waters will change his mind.

I have always been vigorous in my claims that Percy Waters knows the exchange business. He has taken me all through the scheme of film renting and he was awfully nice about it. Waters has a good, strong chin and a bully set of teeth. He can look you straight in the eye and is company on a hot or a cold day. If you are on the outside looking in or on the inside looking out, it doesn't matter. Percy will see you and talk shop and never tell any secrets with the admonition, "not for publication." He is the one man in the business that doesn't seem to care for anything more than he's got. Mr. Waters has the old place formerly occupied by the present Essanay manager. He was in splendid humor the day I called and merely hoped that we might agree on more things as time wore on. I am a great believer in "time will tell." If my work is clean, constructive stuff, with full regard for my fellows, I know that I'll arrive, sooner or later. My theory in talking to a man like Mr. Waters was openly expressed. I agree that Waters is a film man extraordinary. He knows his business, backed by experience of every day contact with it. But no business was ever fraught with so many changes—showed such constant fickleness. Nothing but a wizard can keep pace with its whimsicalities. Mr. Waters may belong to a passing school. There are faults that should be corrected in the film renting business. It isn't right for the exchange manager to be in the exhibiting business. It isn't fair that the exchange should charge bonus rental for a film in large demand. Some of these fine days a rental agency will be formed that will buy enough prints to satisfy the exhibitors' demands, and treat with them on the basis of your money back if the goods are short of representation. The squeeze play never won in the long run and it won't win in this business. This isn't set down here as an intimation that Mr. Waters countenances bad performance, but these things have happened and in many cases still exist. I believe there is a way to advertise a film program—a way that has never existed since the days of the old Film Index. The house organ isn't the right way, either. But the manufacturers of an entire program should all be represented, as well as the distributor—constantly advertised in a trade journal independent of those interests. Then it would be up to the trade journal to deliver the goods. The various offerings of the different makers should be reviewed without prejudice, that the exhibitor might know the value of the offerings. When only a few of the brands of any program are persistent advertisers—when only those that advertise, receive the reviews, it is hardly reasonable that the whole program be accepted on such representation. This thing of trying to force an exchange to buy prints that have no value except in filling up the niches in the booker's office is bad practice. It has been operated with more or less success, but it won't endure.

Following this incorrect theory we have the example of one of the latest organizations demanding a specified weekly amount from its exchanges—three prints a week minimum of each of two subjects, four thousand feet, or six times four thousand feet at ten cents a foot, equals $2,400. These prints are arbitrarily rented at $50 a day—until some other program forces a cut in the rate. It is incredible to believe the proposition can last in view of the tremendous supply of films now available for the exhibitor. Quality is all fine and dandy when there is no competition, but there is already a second big feature program on the boards and it will take one more clerk around here to list the regular stuff before the snow flies. Here's one exhibitor who proposes to sit back and wait for the biggest, juiciest proposition that is bound to come along.

And now we have with us those alleged film, so-called "popular" journals that have mouched around the edge of the industry, reaping what revenues they could from the film manufacturers, carrying poison to the public. At least one recent advertisement, backed by junk dealers of the unscrupulous sort are seeking money from the great populace, always vulnerable to a greater or lesser degree. Here we find the pictures of men who have earnestly requested the trade journals not to print their pictures. Here we find every decent man held up to ridicule. Here we find an advertisement that the trade journals decline with fine and unanimous acclaim.

The reward is a slap on the wrist. It is little thinks like this that make life sweeter as we live. The day comes rapidly along when the publisher of this journal to the trade will find himself dealing with men—big-hearted, generous business men who will find ample reason for mutual betterments without the use of a microscope. In the eight-page Garrison advertisement, offering stock in the Lewis Film Corporation, we have one of the rawest examples of promoting that has been brought forth. The way to keep your money is to have yourself locked up. Money is safest that way.

Vernon Day says Motography ought to be a good strong paper because it keeps a goat. Doggone such insinuations, anyhow.

I'm told that Harry Ennis worked himself into a spasm on the m. p. section of the Clipper before he gave up the job. He is going back to vaudeville.

My grapevine lines are down, for news is terribly scarce from the East.

Mystery Deepens in Thanhouser Serial

In the twelfth installment of Thanhouser's "The Million Dollar Mystery" much action is introduced which is vital to the development of the story and the first view of the long awaited under-water pictures is also given.

The latter pictures, while rather brief, are clear and give great promise of the future use of this experiment. In one of the views a negro diver is seen swimming beneath the surface and attaching a rope to the treasure chest, while in another the anchor of a ship is seen to catch the same chest. The story itself is one of the most interesting of the series released thus far and the air of mystery predominates throughout.

The first scene shows a schooner about to start for the Bahamas. The crew draws the anchor up and with it comes the treasure chest bearing Hargreave's name. A sailor sees it and secures it. He hides it in his bunk and when the steamer reaches its destination he attempts to smuggle it to shore but another sailor sees him and demands that he be allowed to share the trophy. The men get into a quarrel, during which the box is knocked overboard and again falls into the sea.

At the Hargreave's mansion Jones has a mysterious caller who strangely resembles him. Countess Olga and Braine spy upon them and when they see the caller they become strangely excited. Braine draws a pistol and is about to shoot the man with Jones when Florence, from her room, sees him and foils the attempt by shooting the conspirator in the wrist just as he is about to pull the trigger. The caller hurries away.

One of the conspirators learns from the sailor of the treasure at the bottom of the sea and, after a conference with his associates, goes to the Bahamas where he has a diver recover it. Jones and Norton find one the conspirators on the Hargreave estate and overpower him. From him they secure the password to the meetings of their plotting enemies and attend the next meeting.

At this meeting the treasure chest is brought in by the conspirator who has just returned from the Bahamas. During the meeting the lights are suddenly extinguished and when they are turned on again the box and three of the number who were gathered have disappeared. Who are they? The final scene shows two hands, whose owner is not known, dropping the treasure box into an old well.

New Herald by Selig Company

A very unique, as well as comprehensive, method of exploiting picture plays for the benefit of exhibitors has been created by the publicity department of the Selig Polyscope Company. It is in the form of a "release herald" and contains synopses for the entire month of all Selig releases. Each one of the single reel releases of the company is illustrated with a half-tone engraving and the title, date of release, author, producer, cast and synopsis is given.

Each of the two-reel Monday releases is treated in the same manner, the description and illustration being printed in the fort of the regulation herald, to be supplied exhibitors for advertising the picture.

Another feature is a complete exploitation of the Selig plan to bring the motion picture theater and the local newspaper together. The plan embraces a series of six novelettes, written by the celebrated Selig star, Kathlyn Williams, these stories being based on Selig special three-reel features in which she plays the leading part and which are being released one a month.

Crane Wilbur in Vaudeville

Crane Wilbur, popular Pathe star and hero of "The Perils of Pauline" series, has just concluded a most successful week's engagement at Dale's 116th Street Theater, New York City, a United Booking Office vaudeville theater. Mr. Wilbur signed for a three weeks' engagement through the U. B. O. offices; one week at the aforementioned theater and one each at the Halsey and 5th Ave. Theaters in Brooklyn.

The engagement is a unique one inasmuch as these are regular vaudeville houses, giving two performances a day, whereas Mr. Wilbur appears in the evening only, devoting his days to protecting "Pauline" from further perils in and about the Pathe studios.

BUSINESS.

BUSINESS depression, when it exists, has little effect on the motion picture exhibitor, or at least on the old school exhibitor of five or ten cent admission. Probably the inconsiderable amount of the fee accounts for the fact that even the unemployed never deny themselves the pleasure of an hour's picture entertainment. Or, at least, if some of them do save their nickels and dimes, there are enough others who take advantage of their extra time and go twice as often as usual, to keep up the average. Amusement, entertainment of some sort, is as necessary to life as clothing and meals; and the motion picture supplies it at a price that is next to nothing.

So the exhibitor, being prosperous whatever the general state of business, continues to spend his money in various channels, and so aids in keeping currency in circulation. The exhibitor has become numerous enough in recent years to count as an industrial factor. His continued activity in turning over local money in times when money is generally sluggish makes him valuable as a commercial balance wheel. With enough such balance wheels, of course, there could be no financial stringency. As it is, the exhibitor helps a good deal by keeping the community in good humor and relieving the mental state of fear that is responsible for bad business.

At any rate, with or without the assistance of the ever-optimistic exhibitor, the "hard times" that many misanthropes have predicted for this country has not materialized. The European war, now that the first shock of horror has passed, seems to be doing us little harm in a business way.

Of course all this applies to the exhibitors only—or perhaps to the exchanges also. The manufacturers have had their own problems, because America has been supplying a large portion of the world's films. The European market for American films is naturally in pretty bad shape. But even that is not without its compensations.

A great deal is being said just now about the United States' commercial opportunity in South America. The countries of that continent, which have developed into large buyers of all kinds of merchandise, have been getting most of their supplies via Europe. Even motion picture films produced in this country went to South America by way of European agents. So the South American market that is opening to us means just as much to the motion picture business as it does to any other industry.

South America has many cities and towns of a high degree of civilization. Their people are pleasure loving, fond of all kinds of entertainment, better theater patrons than our own people, or even those of Europe. If our film manufacturers can secure the majority of this business direct they will be more than repaid for their losses in European trade.

In the course of human events the war will cease and Europe will become tranquil once more. It may take a long time to restore even a semblance of what has been destroyed; but still, the people must be entertained. Even those who have cause for personal grief will not withhold their patronage of the pictures. When peace reigns once more in Europe, one of the first harbingers of the return to normal living will be the re-opened picture theaters. And their programs will be made up of American-made films.

Then will come the greatest prosperity the American manufacturers of motion pictures have ever known. With their South American market not only established, but developed away beyond its present capacity; with the European market forced to rely almost exclusively on their productions; and with the domestic market bigger than ever; American-made films will not only lead the world—they will constitute it.

Louis XIV is said to have exclaimed "L'etat!—c'est moi!" The American film makers can then say, "The motion picture business? We are it!"

HOW THE PICTURE IS DEVELOPING

WE are so accustomed to the present standards in mechanics and optics of motion picture projection that we give little thought to them. Year after year the standard film picture remains one inch wide and three-fourths of an inch high; the condenser lens continues to focus on this bit of an image less than ten per cent of the light rays emitted by the arc. Meanwhile the producers are constantly becoming more ambitious and more exacting. Tremendous scenes are filmed at tremendous costs. The script writer, the director, the actor, the camera man, the developer—all are keyed to the highest pitch of efficiency. And they are never satisfied. The next effort must be bigger, more spectacular, more artistic. Great combinations of capital and brains are constantly forming to make the standard of production still higher. But the biggest, most expensive, most artistic efforts of them all are still going into a succession of pictures less than an inch square.

The width of the stage in legitimate theaters runs, say, from forty to even a hundred feet wide. The screen in picture theaters runs from ten to possibly twenty feet wide. The stage in even the smallest legitimate theater is larger than the screen in even the largest picture theater.

Now no one can argue that the average legitimate theater's stage is too big. The reason why it is possible to show as much on a twelve foot screen as on a forty foot stage is that the figures on the screen, being in perspective, occupy a field much larger than the screen—a field that grows constantly larger clear to the horizon itself. There is no horizon on the legitimate stage.

Nevertheless, the day is coming—as we have said before—when the present day screen will not suffice. Already we are making picture productions vaster than any ever attempted on a stage. Only perspective makes them possible at all. When the screen is to show the equivalent of a stage-full of people the image must be reduced either by making a deep scene or by undersizing the figures. To give full scope to picture dramatization a larger screen would be required.

We are not even intimating that there is anything unsatisfactory in present sizes or arrangements. These are merely suggestions—dreams, if you like, of the possible line of future development of the picture. There is plenty of work ahead for the inventors; plenty of opportunity to make the picture greater than ever. And there can be no question that the next few years will show some wonderful innovations, some remarkable developments along lines other than the constant improvement of the work of dramatization itself. Excellent as the motion picture is today, it has not reached perfection, and only awaits further invention to make it more marvelous than ever.

Just A Moment Please

Why in the dickens is it that on one of these weeks when a holiday intervenes, thus cutting a day off the already short time allowed us to get MOTOGRAPHY to press, the whole darn composing room gets off on a toot, and the copy readers skip errors of the most glaring sort in the galley proof?

Some of the copy that comes back to us from the printer's looks as though it had been deleted by the European censors—and Lordy knows we are now and always have been against censorship of every sort.

Speaking of censorship and remembering that poor old Chicago has had more censors wished on her, since the Civil Service Board is now in operation, replacing the one appointed some months ago by his nibs, the mayor, leads us to announce that we're going to establish a little Censorship Board all of our own—only we're not going to make any cut-outs in anybody's film. All our Board will do will be to point out some of the glaring errors on the part of even our best directors. Order your copy of next week's issue now and see if it's your "pic" that is bawled out.

"Gee, that's the second time the film has broke—they must have a new operator."

"Isn't Dick Travers just great? I wonder if he's really married."

"Just our luck. The fourth part of a six part picture on the screen when we come in. That's why I hate long films."

"What a pretty moonlight scene. My but they must have strong cameras to photograph in moonlight."

"Why don't that fool woman take off her hat? I can't see a thing!"

D'ye remember that still picture we had a couple a weeks ago of Ben Beadell seeking the elusive denizens of the deep? Well Ben tells us we put one over on him all right when we published that "pic," but that he's glad we don't know what kind of bait he was using. Now, just for that we'll offer a prize of a bright red apple to the person guessing the kind of bait that Ben had with him that day.

And just to start the ball rolling we'll guess Three Star Hennessey. Maybe now Clary can suggest something. John Rock is also invited to make a suggestion.

OUR WAR CORRESPONDENT.

Zdhytrquopvbklamz, Austria, September Morn.

After my narrow escape of last week I deemed it wise to shift myself and supply of lead pencils to the scene of operations on the eastern frontier and therefore joined the Umptyumph Huzzars who were just leaving for the front. This is a crack Austrian regiment and we expect to lick the daylights out of the Russkies when we meet 'em. Our plan is to be captured and then to eat up all their provisions, when it will be an easy matter to conquer them, as each man carries a dozen or more beef pellets in his knapsack and each pellet is good for at least three meals. If you hear that several hundred thousand of us have been captured you will know our plan is beginning to work. Still stand pat on expense account. Forward check immediately. COL. HEEZA NUTT.

'Swonderful what an effect, psychologically speaking, a good temperance film can have on even so inanimate a thing as a projection machine. Harry, over at Selig's, says he had to oil his projector each time that "The Livid Flame" was thrown on the screen. T'tell the truth, it made us a little dry, too.

TAKING NO CHANCES.

Chas. Ziebarth, who has been developing that seven-reel American feature, "Damaged Goods," the past week or so, informs us that after developing many of the scenes he felt impelled to bathe thoroughly in a solution of bichloride of potassium and formaldehyde. But at that, we'll bet it'll be a regular picture when Chas. gets through with it.

Something tells us the first paragraph of our stuff this week is going to make a tremendous hit with the printers—NOT.

However, they've got it coming.

So we should bibble.

Motography's Gallery of Picture Players

FRANK FARRINGTON, portrayer of the part of Braine in Thanhouser's "The Million Dollar Mystery," makes an excellent chief conspirator, and ultimately desires a directorship. As a matter of fact, the former principal comedian of Lulu Glaser, Fritzi Scheff and many others left the stage with that idea in mind. Mr. Farrington's first picture was "Joseph and His Brethren," the big Thanhouser biblical production, in which he was one of the "bad" brothers, but in "The Adventures of a Diplomatic Free Lance" he paved the way for his remarkable work in the 46-reel serial now running. He was born in London in the "70's" and in 1891 appeared before Queen Victoria in Wellington Chambers, Windsor Castle, and gave an entertainment. His kingdom is his home, where Mrs. Farrington and his two daughters, Doris, aged 9, and Reenie, 17 are his "pals."

Frank Farrington.

CAREY L. HASTINGS plays character leads at the Thanhouser studio, and is a wonder in the art of make-up. She is generally cast as a mother and thus far has "adopted" no less than eight pairs of twins and about thirty singles ranging from a week to three or four years of age. When Miss Hastings first became attracted to motion pictures she was playing the titular role in "Mother." After a long period of success in New York stock she joined the New Rochelle forces and is still congratulating herself on her choice. She is at her best in parts that are strongly dramatic but also puts considerable "punch" into her comedy characterizations. Miss Hastings is loved by all who know her and her dressing room is a haven of comfort for the homesick girls of the studio. When anyone wishes a confidant "Caddie" is the usual choice.

Carey L. Hastings.

ETHYLE COOK BENHAM not only admits that she is married, when asked, but takes delight in having the fact known. She says it saves her the trouble of reading and answering letters from love-sick youths. She is the wife of the Thanhouser leading man, "Handsome Harry" Benham and mother of Leland and Dorothy Benham who often appear in "kid" parts. Before entering pictures Mrs. Benham was a professional dancer on the legitimate stage. It was there that Harry met her during his first appearance before the footlights, and after their marriage they played in several companies together. She is a perfect blonde, has regular features, and a pink-and white complexion. Even more attractive is her charming personality and cheerful disposition. If anyone has ever seen Ethyle Cook Benham angry around the studio he or she has kept it a secret.

Ethyle Cook Benham.

SIDNEY BRACEY came to the Thanhouser Company from "Robin Hood," in which he played "Sir Guy of Gisborne," after the late Charles J. Hite tried many times to have him enter Thanhouser stock. His work in "Her Nemesis" caught Mr. Hite's attention. He was born in Australia in 1882 and started on the stage at the age of 15. Lydia Thompson, the famous English actress is his aunt, and Bracey played in all the Gilbert & Sullivan operas except "Pinafore." His specialty was tenor roles and because of his remarkable voice he proved a great favorite. His mother, Clara Bracey, played with John Drew in New York for three years. Sid's first picture in New Rochelle was as "Pierre" in "Little Dorrit," with Maude Fealy, and since that time his career has been a series of successful leads. He is "Jones, the butler," in "The Million Dollar Mystery."

Film Pioneer Joins Horsley

As the result of negotiations which have been carried on for several weeks between David Horsley and W. G. Gilmore, the last-named gentleman left California and arrived at Bayonne, N. J., last week to become manager of the factory and plant of the Centaur Film Company.

Mr. Gilmore is one of the best known film men in the game, and his return to the East revives old memories of the Sales Company on Fourteenth street and the days when the "Independents" had to think fast and fight hard.

Mr. Gilmore got his start in the motion picture business under David Horsley, when the latter was releasing the Nestor brand once every week, when nothing happened to prevent sales, which at best were not large as compared with present-day outputs.

Mr. Gilmore soon became business manager. Under his care releases increased to three a week and sales jumped forward with leaps and bounds. A larger factory soon became necessary and a new one was built in Bayonne under Mr. Gilmore's supervision. When the Universal Film Manufacturing Company was formed the Nestor brand and property was merged, the factory was turned over to the Universal, and remains to this day one of its largest and best plants.

Early in 1912, when Mr. Gilmore had all arrangements made to go to Europe to establish agencies for the Nestor, he received a telegram from David Horsley, who was then at Hollywood, Calif., requesting him to come at once to the west coast to systematize matters there before going abroad.

Thirty days after Mr. Gilmore's arrival in Los Angeles the Universal was formed and took over the Nestor studios. Big things immediately began to develop and Mr. Gilmore was the first Universal manager, and in conjunction with W. H. Swanson built the first Universal City.

Within a few weeks, fourteen large companies were operating there with facilities which are said to have been second to none in the world.

A Successful Photoplaywright

The script writers for photoplays are now looming large on the horizon but the professional writers who have gone in the game and staid in it as a matter of livelihood are comparatively few. Prominent among these is William E. Wing of Los Angeles, Calif., who for the past three years has enjoyed almost continual exploitation upon the screen who belongs to the versatile line of journalists and has worked in all branches of the game from poetry to practical politics.

He was born in Maine and knows the country from coast to coast. His pen has kept him company since he was 16 years of age through all sorts of experiences and now he has settled down to tap a typewriter in unison with the click of the moving picture camera. He admits that no one came out and dragged him into the photoplay field and also says that there was no "call," but he detected a jingling sound that argued ready money and his commercial instinct was aroused.

He served in the Biograph studio, then under the direction of David W. Griffith, and then began to work on frothy comedies that tickled Mack Sennett. The following fall he jumped to the western Vitagraph company. There he stayed for some time, but one day he strayed into the beautiful Edendale studio and before he got away W. N. Selig had roped and tied him with an exclusive contract for the Selig Polyscope Company, and there he has remained.

William E. Wing.

When asked what rules a successful photoplay writer should follow he responded: "I have no rules which other writers might study with safety. They might follow Bill Nye's advice by studying my methods—and then doing differently. His training may serve him in detail and in technique, but he must have the essential of natural gift—which gives his work distinction as well as quality."

Odd Triangle Story

Frank Lloyd, Universal director, who has taken over the direction of the Turner special feature company during the absence of Mr. Turner, is busy at work on a two-reel psychological drama entitled "As the Wind Blows," that promises to eclipse the efforts of many an older director. The story is one of a triangle, but it is not one of the old, time-worn triangle, for no one is trying to make love to another man's wife. Instead, William Worthington, playing opposite Anna Little thinks his wife is in love with a young engineer, Herbert Rawlinson, and in order that she may marry him, Worthington starts systematically to ruin his own reputation to give her grounds for a divorce. After he has succeeded in making her think he does not care for her, an incident occurs that opens his eyes to her love for him and all ends happily. The scenario was written especially for Mr. Lloyd's company and shows off the players at their best.

Alco Exchanges Being Organized

Al Lichtman of the Alco Film Corporation has left on an extended trip through the eastern and central states to establish branch exchanges for the distribution of the Alco features.

It has not yet been fully decided where these exchanges will be located but he will visit the following cities: Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Columbus, Detroit, Chicago and Washington, D. C., and others. Six exchanges have already been organized, full announcement of which will be made later.

Sans Grease Paint and Wig

By Mabel Condon

Clara Kimball Young.

"IT will give me big opportunities," said Clara Kimball Young, as she sat back in the big office chair near the window, that belonged to the desk near the door. It was her husband's office and her husband's chair; hence both were Clara's, and "Jimmie" Young found things of importance to discuss with the big, auburn-haired and pleasant looking man who paced back and forth with him in an adjoining room, and who is Harry Jay Smith, co-director with Mr. Young.

The office is new to "Jimmie," for he has but recently assumed its duties, though since taking up his new duties he has converted into scenario form the play "Lola," in which the popular Clara Kimball Young is to be featured and which is to be put on at the studio in Fort Lee, N. J., the $100,000 one erected in place of the Eclair studio that burned, and that is now to be used by the Peerless Feature Producing Company.

This is the company that is to manufacture the Schubert, Brady and Owen Davis plays for release through the World Film Corporation. The officers of the company are Lee Schubert, president; Joseph Rhinock, vice-president, and Britten N. Busch, treasurer. And Clara is to be the "resident" star; for while other Broadway stars will come and go, at the studio, in their respective best-known roles, Clara will stay on in a preordained and large number of parts. The first Clara picture will be the five-reel one of "Lola," and after that there is to be "Darkest Russia" and many others.

So Clara, in her white broadcloth gown that had a footing of black velvet, and a short cape-coat, lined with striped silk, and a fall shade of pink hat, talked happily of what she hoped to do in the variety of roles that will be her's in the company and the studio that are new to her.

"I want," she declared, "to play every variety of emotion. I love the dramatic and I intend to reveal it; I like good comedy, too; but I do not care about burlesque. I think," she folded her hands and thought aloud, "that I am better in drama than in comedy. Anyway," and this must have been what really settled the question on whatever occasions it had been discussed, "I like it better.

"Those who have noted my leaving the Vitagraph company, may be surprised," she said, and in so doing sensed the public thought. "But there are so many people who are being featured there, and deservedly, that I felt I would have a better chance to do the work I want to do in a company that will make only features, and that will give me the opportunity to do what I feel is a bigger work. I can select my support——"

As though to prove it, "Jimmie" and the big, auburn-haired, pleasant looking man entered to have Clara choose between a blonde and a brunette type for one of the parts in an early Peerless release.

"The blonde," chose Clara instantly, and told why. "Because she is a greater contrast to others of us in the cast and she photographs the better for the part."

"I like strong support," she added, when the reference committee of two had departed, "and I want everybody in the cast to be the particular type each part calls for; if people don't fit their parts, then I don't believe they should play them. But in a company where there are many people to play the leads, one can't choose as to parts. Now, however, this new affiliation will allow of my deciding whether or not a part fits me, or I fit a part, and that surely should be satisfying.

"The parting with the Vitagraph company was a friendly one; I felt that I could better myself by going into a feature company. Mr. Young had already left, so we liked this proposition and here we are, ready for work. We start our first picture at the Peerless studio on Wednesday. And I'm so anxious to start!" The big dark eyes that have helped make Clara one of the most popular of screen artists, opened wide with the enthusiasm and pleasure expressed by their owner, and a generous smile made for accompaniment.

"We're getting rid of our home in Flatbush," informed Clara en route to the street from the fourth floor offices of the Peerless Company in the Leavitt building on Forty-sixth street. "It would be too big a journey to Fort Lee every day, so we're taking an apartment on Riverside Drive at One Hundred and Fiftieth street."

"That's not far from the ferry," put in Mr. Young, as he cranked his car and shut the door on the occupants of the rear seat. The car sought Forty-eighth street, where it turned down Broadway toward Forty-second; and Clara had just finished telling about the speech she made to a clamoring audience at Proctor's Fifth Avenue theater only the other night, when the stop at the Longacre building was made.

"Mr. Proctor was kind enough to say he didn't think it would lessen the patronage of that house," laughed Clara, as she climbed out of the rear seat to get into the one beside "Jimmie."

"It was all right, that speech," defended Mr. Young as he tucked Clara in beside him.

"We've got only a few things to do today," Clara thought to inform as the car started. "Just five or six gowns and hats to select and some——"

Then the car turned south into Broadway and a South Ferry street-car hid it from view.

Catherine Greely, of the Eclair western studio, is recovering from her recent dangerous illness and her many friends will welcome her return to the films.

Thrills Increase in Pauline Series

Eclectic Features Strong

"THE Perils of Pauline" have now reached their thirteenth episode and still going big. Releases of this serial are in greater demand than anything the Eclectic Film Company is marketing, though it is releasing good three to five-reel features every week.

The gypsies search the hills for the escaped pair.

The reason for this great and continued popularity is that each episode is crowded with thrills, excitement, and adventures; things that are bound to take with any audience. The thrills are now carefully worked into the story and come as a natural sequence to the circumstances instead of being stumbled upon without warning, as was the case in a few of the earlier episodes.

This, the thirteenth release of the series, teems with excitement. First, a snake is discovered in the innocent looking basket of flowers received by Pauline. Second, she is one of the entrants in the national steeplechase. And third, an escape is made from the gypsies by leaping from a one-hundred-foot bluff into a lake below. Any of these is a sufficient thrill in itself upon which to build a story, but here they are offered in one release without overstepping the bounds of probability, which is further proof that the "Pauline" series is not merely being "ground" out.

Of these three thrills the greatest, by far, is the steeplechase. There is no fake about it. It is a real steeplechase, and there are at least six falls in the "taking" of seven or eight obstructions. In some of the cases it is one of the foremost of the large field which falls, and the jockey is plainly seen on his knees dodging in and out between the legs of the onrushing horses, the time being too short to allow him to regain his footing.

At the opening of this episode Pauline is in the act of lifting the beautiful wild flowers out of the basket left for her by some stranger. Just as she is about to gather them in her arms Harry hears a faint rattle and at once divines its meaning. He seizes the basket from Pauline and throws it on the floor. This disturbs its occupant, which crawls out. Using a rug to shield himself, Harry quickly kills the snake and orders the ground searched in the hope of capturing the sender of the diabolical gift.

The butler discovers the gypsy who gave him the basket and he and Owen catch her. The butler is sent to call the automobile, so that the girl might be taken to the authorities, and during his absence Owen allows the girl to escape giving her a message to be delivered to Chief Balthaza.

The next day the advertisement of a horse auction catches Pauline's eye. Owen's suggestion that she buy Forest King, the racer, and ride him in the steeplechase renews the fire of adventure in her and she again falls into his trap by purchasing the horse and entering in the event in spite of Harry's pleas that she keep out of it.

According to Owen's directions Balthaza enters the racer's stable and drugs the horse, not sufficiently to show the effect, but enough so that a hard run will tell upon and weaken it. Forest King bears up until about the eighth obstruction, which is a high hedge. He clears it, stumbles, and throws his rider heavily. Dazed, Pauline attempts to rise and does so directly in the path of one of her followers. At the first-aid tent a thorough examination of her injuries is made, and, luckily for her, they are not serious. Her escape from death is pronounced as nothing short of miraculous.

When fully recovered, Pauline leaves with Harry for the McCallan's house party in the Adirondacks. Here she again falls victim of another of Owen's plots, is kidnapped by Balthaza and his band, and carried up into the wildest part of the mountains. In searching for her, Harry also falls into Balthaza's power. He and Pauline make a desperate attempt at escape and are successful, but soon find themselves at the edge of a steep cliff with the gypsies in hot pursuit of them.

Harry and Pauline escape by leaping over the cliff.

They decide to risk the jump to the lake below in preference to again falling into Balthaza's hands. They manage to keep their balance in the air and strike the water without injuring themselves. When they reach the shore they are met by the other members of the house party who are searching for them in the vicinity. Up above on the edge of the cliff is a group of much chagrined gypsies shaking their fists and shouting threats.

THE crisis of "While Fire Raged" is reached when the flirtatious dancer, Gaby, saves the ship of the captain who despises her by keeping the passengers entertained while the boat's crew battles with the flames in the hold. This heroic act places the captain under a deep debt of gratitude to Gaby, but does not restrain him from asking a greater sacrifice of her, that she give up his son, who is infatuated with her. The picture is in five parts and is being released by the Eclectic Film Company.

Gabrielle Robinne, the star of the Comedy Francaise, takes the part of Gaby and is a rare artiste. Her dancing as seen in the picture is not exceptional, but as only a little of it is shown, and that in short flashes it would not be fair to pass judgment on her ability in that line. Her acting, however, is splendid. Each little mannerism, expression, and act is typical of the style of woman she portrays—a fascinating Parisian favorite with a host of admirers, all of whom she encourages, but none of whom she loves.

Playing opposite Mlle. Robinne, as Wallace Summers, is Rene Alexander, a handsome, tall, well-built young fellow, admirably suited for his part, and an actor of repute on the legitimate stage. The cast in support of these two stars is sincere, and its work is convincing.

The scenes are all realistic, especially those of the fire in the hold of the ship. The scene showing the dining room of the ship is a marvel in size and the number of extras used. Another unusually large and realistic scene shows the immigrants struggling below deck when the fire is discovered. The panic and consternation which reigns when people find themselves hopelessly trapped by fire at sea is vividly pictured, and is contrasted strongly with the presence of mind and bravery of one person whose self-sacrificing act prevents hundreds of people from causing their own death in their mad efforts to reach the decks.

Captain Summers of the steamship Jupiter has planned that his son, Wallace, shall marry Ethel Richards and becomes angry when he learns that the boy has fallen in love with the famous dancer, Gaby De Rose. Returning from a long voyage, Wallace, who is his father's first mate, is met at the dock by Ethel, but he slights her in his eagerness to be with Gaby.

He visits the dancer in her dressing room and there discovers a number of love letters from other admirers. Aroused by jealousy he quarrels with Gaby. She is offered a long engagement in America and, seeking to bring about a reconciliation with Wallace, she sails on his father's ship, the Jupiter. Her plan is successful and again the young mate is hopelessly in love with her.

In midocean a fire breaks out in the hold and Wallace persuades Gaby to entertain the passengers in the salon and thus keep them in ignorance of their danger. Unhampered by panic-stricken passengers the crew overcomes the fire in short order and with but little loss. This places the captain in a peculiar position. He is deeply grateful to Gaby for her valuable assistance in saving his ship and the lives of all aboard, but at the same time he realizes that it is because of her that Wallace is neglecting his betrothed, Ethel.

He lays the situation before her and she finally gives in to his pleas and agrees to land at the first port, promising never to see his son again. Wallace is stunned at first when he learns of Gaby's departure, but as time passes he forgets her entirely and dreams of the day when he shall return to port and again meet Ethel.

NO exhibitor will make a mistake in booking "The Bond of Love," now being released by the Eclectic Film Company. It is a most unusual film and will take with any audience or class of people. The above has been said about Cabiria and other pictures because they are masterpieces. This film is also a masterpiece in its own class. It is a two-part drama and was made by members of the Yale University Dramatic Association, alumni of the 1913 and 1914 classes. The cast includes two women and the students are to be complimented on the way the parts are played.

A few of the interiors were made in the Pathé studio, but only a few. All the exteriors were taken at Yale, several of them including some of the most famous buildings of that university. One of the interiors was exactly what it represented, the dean's office. Several other scenes were taken in the students' rooms, this being possible because of the unusual number of windows in some of them. One of the interiors is of the famous Mowrey's, showing a table, the top of which is decorated with the initials of about every student that ever entered that New England restaurant.

Besides supplying the cast, scenery, and atmosphere, the Association also wrote the scenario. Several changes were made in the original script because of the faculty's objections to some of the gambling scenes. Only two now remain, one in Mowrey's, where the student's are seated at a table directly under a fan, which is spun around to determine the loser, and the other is in a regular gambling hall. Supers were to be had for the asking, and being students and interested in the success of the picture aside from a salary consideration they supply a realism that is strictly in accordance with the story.

Fred Wright directed the picture. The plot is above the average two-part drama's construction, though it could hardly be termed exceptional. The acting, however, is unusually good and the character types well chosen. The students do not, at any time, seem to be threatened with "camera fever," and their movements and expressions are actuated by a perfect understanding of what the interpretation is to be.

Bob Finch, an orphan who has been brought up by his uncle, enters Chatham College to study for a profession. His cousin, Eric, is less ambitious, but finally yields to his father's pleas and joins Bob at Chatham to be tutored for the West Point examination, as he is behind in his studies. Before his leaving home Bob promised Eric's sister, Cecilia, with whom he is in love, that he would help her brother any time the opportunity presented.

His promise was soon to receive a severe test. The day of the West Point "exams" arrives and Eric is unprepared. Fearing failure, he takes a book with him into the hall. The professor approaches and Eric passes the book to Bob, who is then accused of cribbing and suspended pending investigation. After his return home his uncle receives a letter from the dean stating the cause of Bob's dismissal. In anger he orders his nephew from the house. Bob is offered an opportunity to work in the East, but before leaving he writes to Cecilia and makes an appointment to meet her in the library at midnight.

Eric's love of drink and gambling was held in restraint somewhat by Bob's presence, but after his cousin's leaving the young fellow drifts from bad to worse until he is finally several hundred dollars in debt. In desperation he decides to rob his father's house, and makes the attempt on the same night Bob visits his former home.

The cousins come face to face. A struggle ensues and the rest of the family is brought to the scene of the racket. In his father's presence Eric denies owning the burglar's tools and Bob takes the blame. This awakens the little manhood left in Eric and he confesses his part in all the scrapes for which his cousin paid the penalty. While Bob is receiving the apologies of his foster parents and the congratulations of Cecilia, Eric slips out and sends a note back with the butler stating that he has left with the intention of making of himself a son worthy to be called such by his father.

Two Exciting Warner Releases

Both Subjects Thrill

WARNER'S Features, Inc., is now releasing "When We Were Young," a three part drama of the Western life of years ago, a life which is preserved only in books, stories, and pictures. The film contains a good plot, dealing with a treacherous half-breed whose hatred for one of the white men causes him to leave the other's quirt beside the body of the man whom he had murdered himself. The law at that time was swift in its judgment and swifter in its execution. How the accused man is arrested after proving himself a hero in battle and is finally vindicated forms a strong dramatic plot.

The Indians prepare to raid the settlement.

There are many exciting and interesting events worked into the story, such as expert riding, pursuits, and Indian battles. The body of the picture is the re-enactment of scenes of the past in the memories of two aged sweethearts who live over again the events of their courtship days.

The Indians, cowboys, mustangs, prairie schooners and other equipment used are all a part of the Miller Brothers' 101 Ranch, where the scenes are taken.

Dan, a reckless young fellow, incurs the hatred of a half-breed by knocking him down when he sees him abuse an Indian girl named Dawn. Later, Dan rescues Lieutenant Avers from a band of Indians, is introduced to the Avers family at the fort, and falls in love with the lieutenant's sister, Anna.

The government issues a call for scouts and Dan applies and is accepted. A short time afterward he is sent out on duty. Just before he leaves the half-breed shoots and robs an immigrant and leaves Dan's quirt lying beside the body. This is considered conclusive evidence when the body is found, and Lieutenant Avers is ordered to arrest the murderer.

When Dan returns after a long siege of hard fighting and scouting his first call is made at the Avers home. Here he is met by the lieutenant and placed under arrest. Dawn shows her gratitude for Dan's act of kindness in shielding her by testifying that she saw the quirt in the halfbreed's possession just before the murder. The half-breed is arrested and pays the penalty of his crime, while Dan is again received into the Avers home and later makes Anna his wife.

THE Cricks Film Company, of London, is now releasing a three-part drama entitled "Temptation" through Warner's Features, Inc. The plot is the triangular one of the girl who thinks herself neglected because her lover gives most of his time to his work, and who, in a little fit of temper encourages the attentions of the man who is trying to copy his invention. The result is a mix-up which affords the rival ample opportunities of displaying his villainy and the hero an equal chance of showing his true worth.

Aside from this there is a little drama enacted in itself in the daughter's leaving her country home for the more active city life, and returning, worn-out but considerably wiser, after her mother's death, which was caused by worry and loneliness.

Jack Newton is working on a new flying machine invention, and stays at his workshop continually in order to have it finished in time to enter it in the government test, the winner of which is to be rewarded with a large contract. His sweetheart, Lucy Marlow, calls upon him, but his thoughts are all on his work and she finally leaves, angered that she has become a second consideration in his mind.

James Thorne, an aviator, visits Newton and tries to learn from him the secret of his invention but is unsuccessful. Having his mind set upon landing the government contract and being unable to solve the problem himself he decides to steal the engine from Newton's model. His attempt awakens the inventor and in the struggle which follows Newton is shot.

Just previous to this Jack quarrels with Lucy because he sees her talking to Thorne. Her explanation that their meeting was purely accidental makes no impression upon Jack in his jealous frame of mind. Lucy becomes angry at this and insists that she is privileged to speak to whomsoever she pleases. The result is that their engagement is broken and Lucy returns home in anything but a peaceful mood. Her father reminds her of her several duties about the house which have not yet been performed, and in her anger she tells him that she is through being a drudge. That night she leaves home and journeys to the city. Here her experiences are anything but events on the smooth road of ease that she had expected, and in a short time she is almost penniless and unable to find employment.

Jack's wound proves to be merely a scratch and, after a short time, he is able to continue work on his invention. When the time for the test arrives Jack sends his flying machine by express but does not enclose the engine. This proves a great disappointment to Thorne and his men who take great risks in stealing the airship from the train and carry it a great distance only to find, on unpacking it, that the secret of the invention has been removed.

They make a prisoner of Newton and try to threaten him into disclosing the hiding place of his engine, but of no avail. Even binding him and placing a bomb at his feet does not succeed in making him divulge the whereabouts of his invention. The time for the bomb's explosion is set an hour or so ahead and Jack is left, guarded by one of the band, to think it over.

Lucy falls into Thorne's power and is locked in one of the rooms of their headquarters. Later they decide to use her as a means of forcing Newton to tell his secret, but she has heard enough of their plans to know Jack's danger and has made her escape through one of the windows. After notifying the police Lucy hurries to the shack in which Jack is held prisoner, slips past the guard and frees her lover. Pursued by the police Thorne and the rest of his men arrive at the shack and find that their prisoner has escaped. They attack the man who had been left as guard and in the midst of the fight the bomb explodes, sending them all into eternity.

Again united to Jack and free to return home,

Lucy's joy seems complete until, on arriving at the house she learns that during her absence her mother has passed away, her illness being caused by pining for her daughter.

Edison Entertains Cape Town Exhibitor

Joseph Fisher, Cape Town, South Africa, exhibitor and director of Fisher's Elite Bioscope, Ltd., and the Grand Theater, both of Cape Town, arrived in New York last spring in plenty of time to attend the Exposition of the Motion Picture Art held in connection with the national convention of the International Motion Picture Association, and only this week is planning to return home, via England.

While in the States Mr. Fisher has made the rounds of the studios and visited the leading film manufacturers of Chicago, New York and Philadelphia. Most recently he has been a guest at the Edison plant and while there appeared in a thousand foot film, specially devised by Mr. Plimpton of the Edison studio, in which Mr. Fisher will be shown greeting the popular Edison players and appearing in company with other notables.

Horace G. Plimpton, manager of the Edison studio, introducing Mr. Fisher to Director Brabin.

Speaking of the conditions in Cape Town Mr. Fisher said:

"Cape Town has a white population of 80,000. There are twelve picture theaters and only one where vaudeville is shown. The license tax is based on seating capacity. For a thousand and over the charge is $50 yearly, for 750 it is $40, and below that $25. Our Grand Theater seats 940 persons and runs the year around, two performances a day. We use an orchestra of ten pieces, and pay as much attention to the music as we do to the pictures. We show six reels and change programs twice a week, Tuesday and Friday. We use the Gaumont and Pathe Weeklies and about 600 feet each week dealing with South African happenings."

Farhney Again with Horsley

Milton H. Fahrney, playwright, actor, producer of big successes in the golden days of the legitimate drama, pioneer motion picture producer and now principal director of the Centaur Film Company of Bayonne, New Jersey, was brought up in the old school of legitimate stage directors, a protege of the peerless Augustin Daly, and a co-worker with Richard Mansfield.

Mr. Fahrney was quick to master the technique of dramatic production, and has long been rated as one of the finest stage managers in America. In 1908 David Horsley induced Mr. Fahrney to enter the film game. He is chiefly noted for the atmosphere he gets into his pictures, for the remarkable action he gets out of big ensembles, and for the care and judgment he uses in selecting locations and outdoor light effects.

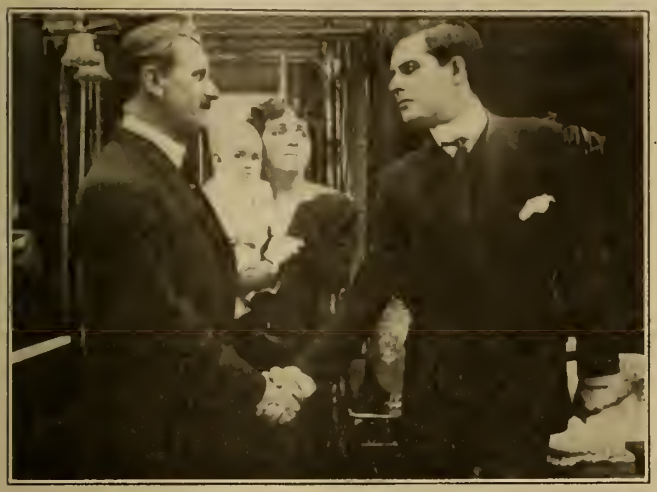
Mr. Fahrney recently returned to his old employer, and is now directing a special brand of one-reel comedies for David Horsley's coming program of seven comedies a week.

Commercial Company Booming

One of the foremost commercial film manufacturing companies in the East and one which for some time has been regarded as leader in the work of developing, printing, toning and tinting films of all variety is the Commercial Motion Picture Company, whose executive offices are located at 220 West 42nd street, New York City.

Edward M. Roskam, under whose personal direction all laboratory work is conducted, has learned the motion picture business from the bottom up and is constantly seeking new and untried effects. His first experience in handling motion picture films was with the Vitagraph Company and after that he served under the banner of the Independent Motion Picture Company until he felt that he had mastered the work and then formed the Commercial Company which has met with success from the time of its organization.

The company has not only handled the developing of its own films but has also done much work for many of the large eastern producers, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Ramo and several others sending their products to the Commercial plant to receive the finishing touches. The laboratory at Grantwood, N. J., is always a busy place for, besides its own material, the outside work is constantly accumulating, but the force is large and competent and no orders are, even for a moment, neglected.



The Life Photo Film Corporation, of which Mr. Roskam is president, has all its films handled in the Commercial laboratories and the many unique effects gained in the productions of this company are a silent tribute to the genius of the man at the head of the firm and the laboratory force who labor over all the films they receive like true artists.

Especially worthy of mention are the subtle effects which have been gained through artful tinting of films. Instead of a harsh red or blue coloring that is often noted upon the screen the products of this company strike the happy medium between this class and the "washy" style of tinting which is also more or less common. The brown tinted films, perhaps one of the most difficult varieties to handle, have also been treated with great success by this firm and the color is made substantial and lasting.

With the commercial worth of films fast being realized by the leading men of the business world and the constantly growing demand for more artistically developed and tinted films asserting itself, the future appears very rosy for this company which has already proven that it is capable of giving the very best results along both of these lines.

Selig Film a Temperance Lesson

"The Livid Flame"

McNair agrees to go to Burkhart's hunting lodge.

IN "The Livid Flame," its release of September 21, the Selig Polyscope Company breaks strongly into the Prohibition ranks, for a more striking temperance lesson has seldom been seen on the screen, if we except "John Barleycorn," the Bosworth special feature which has been so widely advertised.

Earle Fox and Lafayette McKee have the two leading roles in the two-reel drama and both are seen to advantage, Fox in particular distinguishing himself by his forceful and yet restrained acting in the "big" scenes of the photoplay which depict his struggle with temptation.

The arrival at the hunting lodge.

Adda Gleason, as the wife of Fox in the picture, does the little given her to do in a natural and convincing manner, which drives home the temperance lesson even more forcibly. Miss Gleason's role depicts the suffering and anguish which liquor causes the wife and children of the man under its influence, and adds much to the worth of the story as a whole.

The film opens in the office of R. Hayes Burkhart, a prominent business man, just as a delegation of citizens representing the reform party call upon him to announce that he has been chosen as the candidate for governor on the Citizens' ticket. Burkhart is overwhelmed by the honor paid him but accepts the nomination and promises to do everything in his power to win.

Soon afterwards Burkhart meets and is much impressed by James McNair, a young attorney, and engages him to look after his legal business. McNair is a bright young attorney with an excellent practice, a good income, a pretty wife and baby, whom he loves devotedly, but unfortunately is obsessed by a craving for drink.

He has successfully managed to conceal his weakness from his wife and his associates by sternly controlling himself and never entering a bar or cafe where liquor is served, if he can possibly avoid doing so, as he well knows that after one drink of whisky he is sure to lose all control of himself and drink on and on until no longer able to stand.

One day while, with Burkhart and others, McNair is led into a bar and urged to drink. McNair declines and takes a cigar instead, but Burkhart and the others joke him about being "a teetotaler," until at last he accepts and tosses down a glass of whisky. Instantly all his old desire for the stuff returns, and seizing a decanter he pours out another glass and then another. There is no more work that day for the young attorney. He staggers home intoxicated, to the alarm and surprise of his wife, who has never before seen him under the influence of liquor.

With the old craving strong upon him, day after day finds him leaning against bars, lounging in cafes or drinking from a bottle that he keeps in his desk. On many different occasions Burkhart has had to escort him home, since he was too drunk to get there by himself. Even Burkhart's business is being neglected, until through his carelessness he permits the filing of an important suit against his client and then makes matters still worse by letting it go unchallenged and undefended.

In his endeavor to influence McNair to stop drinking, Burkhart one night starts an argument with him just as he reaches his home and McNair angered by Burkhart's advice shouts, "Who was it that urged me to take that first drink? Who was it that made me again a drunkard? It was you, you, you." Mrs. McNair, thinking her husband is insulting his friend and benefactor, tries to quiet him, but Burkhart, thinking back to the day when he had urged McNair to drink, and when he and his friends had joshed McNair because he preferred cigars to whisky, admits that the charge is true. His eyes opened to the wrong he has done McNair, Burkhart returns to his office and insists upon withdrawing from the governorship race, and writes a letter to the campaign committee saying that he is going away.

Then he returns to the McNair home and insists upon the young lawyer coming with him to his mountain hunting lodge, where they will be far away from all liquor and its temptations. At first McNair refuses to even consider such a trip, but when to the pleadings of Burkhart are added those of his wife, and later the thought of his baby boy, for whose sake he ought to reform, he finally agrees and leaves with Burkhart for the mountains.

By the time the mountains are reached McNair is wild for whisky, and Burkhart has difficulty in restraining his guest. The new surroundings, the cosy cabin, and the wonderful view to be obtained from its front porch temporarily distract McNair, but as soon as he is left alone in his room Burkhart finds that he is making use of a bottle which he has brought with him. Burkhart takes the liquor from him by force and puts him to bed.

Next day McNair manages to get hold of a bottle of whisky that an old negro servant has upon his person, but again Burkhart interferes and prevents his getting a real drink. He has alternate fits of depression and stern resolutions to overcome his weakness. He is unable to sleep at night and daytimes wanders about the woods a nervous wreck. One day, returning from a long ramble, he sinks onto his cot and dreams that he has entered Burkhart's room seeking whisky, and that again his host has prevented his getting hold of the bottle. In his wrath he seizes an axe standing against the wall and brains his host. Pulling a revolver from his pocket he places it against his temple and pulls the trigger. The old negro servant picks up his unconscious form and carries it back to the bed.

Just at that moment he awakens to find that Burkhart is alive and well and standing beside his bed shaking him. Almost delirious with joy over finding it all a dream, he grasps Burkhart in his arms and hugs him. His host has brought him a letter from home in which Mrs. McNair writes that Burkhart has ruined his whole career and lost a chance to be governor of the state on his account. To make matters still worse, Burkhart's absence has weakened the business house of which he was the head and some of his creditors have foreclosed a mortgage on the stock and fixtures.

Thoroughly sobered by the news of the sacrifice Burkhart has made for him, and knowing that he can never repay the debt, McNair becomes a man, pledges himself to forever leave whisky alone, and then urges his friend to return to the city that they may do what they can to straighten out Burkhart's own affairs. Burkhart assures McNair that he has only paid a debt which he honestly owes, that he has caused misery and unhappiness by tempting another to drink, and that naturally sacrifices are in order to set matters right again.

McNair's home coming is enough to repay him for all that he has sacrificed, asserts Burkhart, as he sets about making a new start in business and in life.

Eaco Films Formed

The Eaco films, in which Edwin August, late Universal star, will be featured, have completed their first two-reel dramatic photoplay, "Below the Dead Line," which will be released shortly through one of the prominent programs. Edward E. Anderson, a brother of the well-known G. M. Anderson of the Essanay Company, and Edwin August are the officers of this newly formed company, which has offices in Suite 1402, the World's Tower building, New York City. Mr. Anderson, who is the business manager of the concern, is in negotiation with the heads of the various programs, who have all made him interesting propositions.

It is the intentions of Eaco Films to produce for one of the prominent programs two multiple reel photoplays and one-reel comedies per week. Edwin August, who is one of the most popular of actor-author-producers, has in preparation a number of scenarios which he will produce in the immediate future for his company. Associated with him in this respect is Edward J. Peil, who, previous to his Eaco engagement, played leads at the Lubin, Philadelphia, studio for two years.

Mr. August is surrounded by an excellent company which consists of Charles B. Ross, whose last two legitimate stage appearances were in "The Traveling Salesman" and "Within the Law"; Ann Derson, whom head producer August discovered while touring abroad; Hal August, who played juvenile leads for the West Coast Universal studio and likewise with the Vitagraph; Etta Raynor, who has held a number of prominent stock engagements for three years; Mabel Janot, who has appeared in a number of successful musical comedies; and Master Edward Charles, whose most recent success was in Lubin's picture version of "The House Next Door."

The publicity and advertising department is under the personal supervision of Bennie Zeidman, who is perhaps better known as "Bennie of Lubinville." Mr. Zeidman resigned from the Liberty Motion Picture Company, where he was manager of the publicity and advertising department, to join the Eaco organization.

Producing Companies Organized

The organization of well-known motion picture producers into a company having for its sole object the production of the new complete Warner's program is one of the big moves of the past week.

The title of the company is the United Motion Picture Producers, Inc. The officers are: Ludwig G.

B. Erb, president; Gilbert P. Hamilton, vice-president; Herbert Blache, secretary; Leo C. Stern, treasurer.

The idea is that by operating under a general governing body, the individual companies will obtain better results and greater benefits than by independent operation. Each individual company, of course has a voice in the general management, so that the rights of each will be maintained while promoting the good will of all.

The United Motion Picture Producers, Inc., will decide upon the specific work to be done by the component companies. Instead of a manufacturer proceeding on his own account, regardless of what the others are doing, to produce a drama, or a comedy, or a Western picture, he will produce an assignment from the general organization. These assignments are made only after a full conference, and the various classes of productions are so distributed as to assure the utmost variety in each weekly program released by Warner's Features, Inc.

The new program will be ready for first release in about a month, and Warner's Features, Inc., is now ready to receive applications for bookings.

P. A. Powers, president of Warner's Features, Inc., declares that the new program will be the greatest proposition of its kind ever offered to exhibitors.

"But bear in mind," said Mr. Powers, "that we shall also handle big features of four or more reels in addition to the program. In short, we can supply the exhibitor with a complete service and can do it promptly and efficiently through our thirty-four exchanges."

Henry McRae, director of the 101 Bison company, is finishing a two-reel western drama entitled "The Law of the Range" and adapted by Dr. H. Stafford, from the book of that name written by Wayne Gorves Barrows. This is the first work which Dr. Stafford has turned out since he started to write exclusively for Mr. McRae's company.

Harry Pollard has not been making "Beauty" films for a year but with the help of Margarita Fischer has established an enviable position for the comparatively new brand. The reason is not far to seek. The stories are good and carefully selected, the productions well staged and costumed, and the direction and acting away above the average. There is real beauty in each film which pleases the eye and a well bred tone which satisfies.

In a special dispatch relayed from Ostend to the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, it was stated that the home of Annette Kellerman (Mrs. James R. Sullivan), heroine of the charming production, "Neptune's Daughter," has been razed in order to make way for the fortresses located in the environs of Paris.

House Peters who recently resigned from the California Motion Picture Corporation has not made any plans so far although he has already received several flattering offers. It is his intention to take a short rest.

James Rolph, mayor of San Francisco has gone into "play acting." He and Mrs. Rolph made their debut in "A Modern Rip Van Winkle," a new film of the American camp.

Wilfred Lucas, who is producing "The Trey O' Hearts," has had to rest up a few days because of the bone in his shoulder which was put out of place in an accident sometime ago.

Charles Ray and all the other members of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, who act in pictures bearing the Kay Bee, Domino and Bronco brands, are constantly receiving letters saying "Do you work for the Broncho (or Domino or Kay Bee) too?"

Henry Walthall of the western Mutual Company will visit the East on business as soon as "The Clansman," now in preparation, is completed and David W. Griffith, director and Blanche Sweet, leading lady of the same company are also expected to be absent for about two weeks on a vacation which will also probably be spent in the East.

That a horse can be better trained by kindness than by all the whipping in the world is one of the pet theories of G. M. Anderson, Essanay's famous "Broncho Billy." Mr. Anderson says that he never touched a pony with a whip and has taught them many things by using kindness.

General Manager Watkins of the Standard Motion Picture Company has just returned from Sterling, Illinois, where he transacted business of importance for his company.

"Neptune's Daughter" continues to fill the Fine Arts Theater, Chicago, several times a day and the shapely sea goddess, enters her seventeenth week as a screen star in the phantasy of King Neptune's realm.

Anna Little, of Universal, is the latest actress to take a lay off because she had to. She has been quite sick—just tired out. During her short absence Beatrice Van will take her part in "The Vagabond."

Miss Vivian Rich was stalled for a time in the mountains near Santa Barbara, Cal., with her automobile last week. Fortunately another driver came along and rendered the necessary assistance. Miss Rich is busy these days when off duty, in painting and decorating her garage.

Myrtle Stedman, as a nun, has been doing delightful work in "The Hypocrite" written by Lois Weber and produced by her and Phillips Smalley for Bosworth, Inc. Courtenay Foote, as a monk, takes the male lead. The play will probably be in five reels.

Herbert Blaché, the motion picture manufacturer, exchange owner and practical film man, who also stages his own productions predicts that the coming year will be a banner one for exhibitors.

Edward J. Le Saint of Selig took a delightful trip to San Diego and also returned. The adjective is not applicable to the return trip as it took twelve hours, was stuck in the sand and had two blow outs.

Tod Browning of the Komic Company recently told Fay Tichner of the same company to throw a baseball to him. The speed with which the horsehide was delivered was too much for the comedian and a muff resulted in a broken nose. He expects to be back at work within a week.

Marvelous discoveries in tinting and toning cinema films have been made by Robert Brotherton, chief chemist of laboratories at the Balboa Amusement Producing Company's studios in Long Beach, Cal., and motographic experts who have viewed the wonderfully colored new films he completed recently have declared that his achivements will revolutionize laboratory work everywhere and soon result in the projection in theaters of releases that show almost every hue known in nature and art.

Louise Glaum is still the dear in "The Dear Hunter" being produced by Harry Edwards of Universal. While the company were in the hills and Louise was wrapped in the skin of a deer, a real hunter came up to Edwards and excitedly said, "In the name of goodness, why take such risks in the hunting season? I would have shot this young lady in another second or two had I not heard her call out." The party took no more deer scenes in the wooded hills.

Dot Farley is having a holiday on the Coast during the absence of her Director G. P. Hamilton who is in New York. She is preparing some big photoplays for production by the Albuquerque company.

Harry Von Meter of the "Flying A" forces says that next week he will be sporting a yellow silk swimming suit that will make Billy Garwood's violet one look like a funeral on a wet day.

Harry Todd, the "Mustang Pete" of the Essanay "Snakeville" comedies has constructed a big war map and, with colored pins for armies, has kept up with the movements of the European troops from day to day. From his study of the situation he is certain that Jan. 1, 1915 will see the final shot fired.

Carlyle Blackwell of the Favorite Players is finishing "The Key to Yesterday" and the scenario for his next porduction is being prepared. It is by another well known author, Richard Harding Davis is entitled "The Man Who Could Not Lose" and will be in four reels.

Stella Razeto of the Selig Company went to the theater the other night largely to see how her beloved pet dog "Paddy Woofen" acted in "What Happened to Mary Jane." Imagine her indignation when she heard the following conversation behind her. "Say, that Mary Jane is all right, ain't she?" "Sure, but what do they want to use such an ugly little mutt as that dog for, why not get a good dog?"

Bess Meredyth, the clever Universal comedienne who is writing the scenarios for the "Trey O' Hearts" series, is trying to trace the crooked minded person who poisoned her dog "Whitey," her special pal.

Hetty Gray Baker, photoplaywright, recently sent a little note of appreciation to Harry Pollard for the way in which he put on her pretty story "Her Really Mother." "I am a very fortunate person to have my work given so sympathetic and dainty an interpretation" she wrote.

The new Vista Theater, Chicago's latest picture palace, opened its doors at 47th and Cottage Grove Avenue last week with the big Kleine spectacle, "Antony and Cleopatra."

Universal's Animated Weekly, number 131, released September 9, shows the wounded Germans in Brussels; the defenders of Liege, and the Belgian civil guard, going to the front. The films were brought from Gelbium at great risk, and carried across the Atlantic in the personal baggage of Mrs. J. C. Graham, wife of the general manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, who arrived on the Olympic from Liverpool on August 29.

E. Guazzoni, one of the greatest directors in the world, has renewed his contract with the Kleine-Cines Company for an indefinite period. Guazzoni is the producer of "Quo Vadis?," "Antony and Cleopatra," "Julius Caesar" and many other Kleine successes.

With Louis Joseph Vance on the ground and working day and night to keep ahead of him with copy, Director Lucas of the Gold Seal company, is soon to start on the ninth installment of the spectacular "Trey O' Hearts" serial.

J. E. Berkson, the popular Chicago exhibitor, added another to his already long string of houses when on Saturday evening, September 5, he opened the palatial new Roseland theater at Michigan avenue and One Hundred and Thirteenth Place. The house has an adequate seating capacity, is beautifully decorated and seems assured of big business. The people of the neighborhood are to be congratulated upon having their entertainment served to them by such an experienced amusement purveyor as Mr. Berkson.

On Friday morning, September 4, E. H. Taylor, Jr., & Sons, Inc., owners of the Old Taylor distillery near Frankfort, Kentucky, exhibited in the East room of the Hotel La Salle, Chicago, motion pictures of the distillery and the portion of Kentucky in which it is situated.

The Winchester Avenue Theater, Bronx, New York City, the home of the Mutual program, has sprung something new in the way of a day nursery with maids in attendance. It appears to be very popular, for during the first five days of its existence 258 children between the ages of 6 and 10 years were taken care of.

Crane Wilbur recalls with amusement a night he spent in a bedroom set in the window of a furniture store in Allentown, Pa., when he played an engagement there some time ago. A convention had filled every hotel and boarding house, and with the shades pulled down, the window made a perfectly private room. When Mr. Wilbur awoke, however, the shades had mysteriously been raised and a crowd watched until the manager of the store came to the rescue and lowered them again.

Upon Pancho Villa's recent visit to Tucson the members of the Eclair Company grasped the opportunity of taking a close view of the man who had a monopoly on the front page of most daily papers before the war in Europe crowded him inside.

The Sydney Amusement Company of Canada, operating high-class photoplay houses in Sydney, East Sydney, Sydney Mines, and Glace Bay, have secured the exclusive rights for all of Nova Scotia for the Novelty War News Pictorial, the weekly European war pictures produced by the Novelty Slide Company of New York.

Leo White—he of the Essanay "Sweedie" comedies—who formerly was a member of Fritzie Scheff's company, and a prominent figure in musical comedy, works in at least one comedy and one drama each week and probably is the most sought after actor by producers working under the "Indian Head."

Miss Anita Loos, conceded to be the youngest successful writer of photoplays in the country, was a recent visitor at the R. and M. Mutual studios in Los Angeles. She came from her home in San Diego to see Eddie Dillon put on several scenes in "The Million Dollar Bride," one of her comedies.

Jeff Dolan, who handled the New England sales for "The Toll of Mammon," has left the Excelsior Company and is in New York at the present time. Mr. Dolan has not made arrangements for the future, but expects to be back in the field soon, representing some film concern.

Shapiro, Bernstein and Company are the publishers of a very timely song, "The Fatherland, The Motherland, The Land of My Best Girl," which is being featured in picture houses. A set of song slides for this number has been produced by the Novelty Slide Company.

Alfred Hollingswirth, one of the directors at the Eclair Western studio, upon crossing the Santa Cruz river one day, picked out a location for the next day's work. Upon his return to make the scene he was quite surprised to find only a large bed of sand. An investigation proved that the large volume of water he had seen on the previous day was the result of a cloudburst and that the Santa Cruz is merely a river in name only.

Marguerite Clayton, who plays opposite G. M. Anderson in most of the latter's "Broncho Billy" dramas, recently was supposed to "hold up" Mr. Anderson with the latter's pistol. Her finger was on the trigger when "Broncho Billy," his hands above his head, calmly ordered the camera man to stop. Then he took the revolver from Miss Clayton and removed six cartridges from its cylinder, saying that he had forgotten to remove the cartridges after his previous day's target practice.

The Bijou Theater, on Broadway, New York, is featuring the Novelty War News Pictorial.

At the Reliance and Majestic Mutual studios in Los Angeles, Tammany Young is being featured as "Bill," the wide-awake office boy, in the Bill series, adapted from the well known stories of Paul West.

ROLL OF THE STATES.

CALIFORNIA.

The Franklin theater, on Franklin and Fourteenth streets, Oakland, which has been recently opened, represents the highest type of motion picture theater construction. The exterior is of the Egyptian style of architecture, and the simple leaf decorations have been beautifully carried out in colors. The policy of the Franklin is to present the best motion pictures that can be obtained.

GEORGIA.

The Palace theater in Macon will be opened to the public September 21. It is one of the best equipped moving picture theaters in the country. J. B. Melton is the manager.

IDAHO.

The Rex and American, two moving picture theaters in Idaho Falls, opened their doors to the public on September 1.

ILLINOIS.

The Lyric theater in Streator has been purchased by G. R. Ainsworth, of Pittsburgh, Pa., possession to take place on or before October 1.

Fire, caused by crossed electric light wires, did damage to the extent of $400 at C. D. Caster's moving picture theater in Bloomington.

Randolph Amusement Company, Chicago; capital stock, $10,000; amusement theater and moving picture business. Richard H. Hollen, Abraham Levin and J. A. Massen.

Fred Peterson and Henry Salto, managers of the Armory theater in Geneseo, have had the interior of the building beautifully repainted, varnished and redecorated, making a beautiful appearance, and have reopened the season with one of the best motion picture shows curtained.

IOWA.

A deal was consummated recently by which Freely Golly purchased the Dreamland theater in Oelwein of T. A. Bryan and at once took possession.

Conway has a new motion picture theater known as the Gem, opened recently in Woodman Hall.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors. Synopses of current films are not printed in MOTOGRAPHY as they may be obtained of the manufacturers.

Richard Bennett Stars in "Damaged Goods"

A "Flying A" Subject

DRIVING home facts of life that could never be so convincingly portrayed in literature or upon the legitimate stage, the seven part motion picture adaptation of "Damaged Goods" produced by the American Film Manufacturing Company, is certain to do an unlimited work of mercy for millions who were denied the privilege of seeing the original version of Brieux's great work. Starting with the college life of a young man of the type we meet daily on the street —not bad but easily influenced to stray from the high road — and following this same young man through his courtship and marriage and finally to the birth of his first child and the terrible results which follow, this photodrama delivers its moral in a manner which is never to be forgotten by one who sees it.

Mrs. Forsythe is attracted by George.

Its theme, one of the most vital ever attempted by a dramatist, is given development which is a rarity in the most finished productions, and with its massive power it holds one enthralled from the opening scene, through its tale of temptation, weakness and terrible suffering, to a close which is powerfully dramatic.

Richard Bennett, the actor and manager who brought the drama to America and who succeeded in staging it only after subduing the unjust opposition of the authorities, takes the leading role in the screen version and appears perfectly at home before the camera at all times. The players who support him are chosen from members of the company who supported Mr. Bennett on the legitimate stage and from the ranks of the "Flying A" Company, and all do work of the highest caliber.

The characters are symbolic of various types of people and are exacting in their requirements, as a misrepresentation in a subject of such proportions as this one would be no light matter. Each player has lent his or her greatest effort to the work, however, and all deserve great commendation for their splendid work in this worthy drama of the great social enemy.

Thomas Ricketts, the director of the production, has turned out a play which is filled with vital facts and which teems with dramatic action, rising from causes which are met in every day life by the average person. There is no sign of padding—there is no need of it—and the film tells the story from beginning to end and when the latter point is reached it stops. Great care has been used in the selection and elimination of the material offered by the Brieux drama and in one or two places the interest has been intensified by binding the characters closer together with dramatic action.

The moral, which dominates the entire story, is brought out with greatest strength in the fifth reel when the young man, after hearing the doctor's warning not to marry, is taken to a hospital by the physician and there shown the results of the terrible disease the world knows as syphilis. Several patients, suffering from the disease in various forms, are shown him, all these cases being actual ones taken in a Los Angeles hospital. Another scene of great realism is the office of a "quack" doctor, taken at an establishment in San Francisco shortly before the building was razed.

The story is divided into three acts, the first two being two reels each in length and the last one three. The reels are each preceded by a foreword touching upon a fact in regard to the theme of the story and are followed by an epi-title of the same variety. Some very interesting facts are also made known on the titles, in regard to the percentage of people suffering from this disease and the manner in which they are shunned by those who could help them.

There can be nothing but praise for the entire production and it is to be hoped that the censors in the various cities will be broad minded enough to realize the great worth of this big, clean film and not mar it in such a manner that the message it carries to humanity will be lost sight of, for there can be nothing found in it which, in the slightest manner, suggests any other than the highest purpose. The American Company is booking the subject direct, on the basis of a feature film.

The story opens at a college where George Dupont is studying law. He is ambitious and studious and his nights are spent over his books while his classmates dine in cafes with girls of the underworld. One night they determine that he shall join them and. despite his protests, lure him to the cafe by a trick. When he sees that their object was to make him one of their number he leaves them and returns to his room, but is strongly tempted to join them in their gay life. A struggle takes place within him but he finally wins out, when he gazes upon the portrait of his mother. He returns to his books and works while the others, scorning his industry, enjoy life in their own way.

Time passes and graduation day arrives. George's hours of study prove well spent, for he receives the honor of graduating at the head of his class. His friends, the young men who were "jolly good fellows," fail utterly and leave college unprepared for the battle of life which lies before them.

Among those who are with George on his graduation day are his mother and aunt, Senator Locke and his daughter Henriette, and Mrs. James Forsythe, an old friend of the family. The party return to the Dupont home and there a party is given in honor of the young man. Mrs. Forsythe, who has not seen George for a number of years, is attracted by his manly appearance and asks him to call at her home during the evening. George is not greatly impressed with this invitation but thinks little more about it.

Dr. Clifford stops Senator Locke as he is about to kill George.

He retires late in the evening without giving Mrs. Forsythe another thought but not so with the woman. Her husband leaves on a trip and she sends her maid to the theater. Then she telephones George and, after rousing him from bed, pleads with him to come to her at once as she needs his legal advice. The young man goes and is no sooner in the house than she uses all her wiles on him. He struggles against the temptation but his will power succumbs to his primal instinct and he takes the first step on the road to destruction.

The next morning, as he reads the paper, the truth of the statement he has often heard—that interference with genuine affection can bring nothing but disaster—is brought home to him with the news that

Mr. Forsythe was killed the evening before in a train wreck. The young man is heart broken to think of the offence he has committed and his sorrow is increased when Mrs. Forsythe lightly tells him she can now transfer all her love to him. A feeling of disgust seizes him and he tells her he never wishes to see her again. But the seed has been sown.

Time passes and George is successful in law practice. Senator Locke and the young man's aunt plan the marriage of George and Henriette. The senator is pleased with the prospect of the money to be left the young people and does all he can to rush matters. George in the meantime has become entangled with a seamstress and both believe they love each other. Their dream is shattered one day, however, when Mrs. Dupont sees her son with the girl. George is then told that he must become engaged to Henriette and, to please his mother and aunt, he consents.

Henriette meets and loves him and he appears to return her affection as he is strangely attracted to her. Mrs. Dupont sends a check to the seamstress and tells her that she must never again see George. The young man's aunt makes him heir to all she possesses and Senator Locke takes him into his law firm as a partner.

The date of the wedding is announced and George's friends decide to give him a farewell bachelor dinner. All plans for the affair are laid and George looks forward to it with pleasure. As he leaves home to attend it his mother tells him not to stay long as she will wait for him to return. George promises her he will be home early and then goes to the dinner, filled with anticipation of the pleasure of this last night with his old friends.

While his mother sits by the fireplace and, in a vision, sees her son among gentlemen, George and his companions are drinking and carousing wildly in one of the cafes, all being more or less under the influence of liquor. Mrs. Dupont goes to sleep as she waits for her son.

About midnight the men start to leave and one of George's special friends telephones Mrs. Dupont that George will spend the night with him. The two men then go to the home of the mistress of George's friend where the young lawyer meets the product and the cause of the great social disease—a girl of the streets. The couples spend the night together and in the morning George returns home, sober and sorry for his action.

Four weeks pass and bring many changes. The girl of the streets meets Doctor Clifford, a specialist and philanthropist, and he sees in her a spark of goodness. He cares for her and she becomes a nurse in his employ. George's wedding is approaching and he is very happy until he suddenly discovers that he is suffering from disease. A coward's first thought is suicide and, as he fears exposure, he buys poison and goes to a park to end his life. But the girl of the street sees him and knocks the bottle from his hands.

When the young man recognizes her he flies into a rage and is about to kill her but controls himself. She tells him to listen to her side of the story. Then she says that a girl of her class is only summing up her score against society by her acts and that he was only one of the many whom she forced to suffer. She tells him how she came to the city and was ruined by a man who remained respected while she became an outcast and then how the hospitals refused to treat her. "And that is true of ninety-seven per cent of the hospitals in America," she adds. Then she relates her awful vengeance on all mankind and ends by telling him how the great doctor helped her and says that he will surely help him.

George goes to Doctor Clifford and the physician, after an examination, tells him he cannot marry for two years and if he does, he will be a criminal. To impress the fact on George the doctor takes him to one of the hospitals where the many cases of this disease are being treated. There he sees with his own eyes the horrible results of marriages which take place in ignorance of the consequences; the little creatures, old from birth, ninety-two per cent of whom die, but many of whom grow to be imbeciles and idiots. He also sees the terrible disease which has been transferred to the women by their husbands and learns that ninety-five per cent of the women marrying syphilitic men are contaminated.

George returns home, determined to follow the doctor's advice, but fear of exposure leads him to another doctor, whose advertisement appears in the paper as being able to cure all ailments of men. The "quack" gives him some pills and tells him that he will be cured within three months and that to delay his marriage he can pretend to be threatened with consumption.

George takes the pills and succeeds in delaying his marriage by the excuse, and at the end of three months is assured that he is in perfect health. The ceremony takes place and George and Henriette are very happy. Had the marriage certificate called for a physical examination they would have been spared a life of misery.

All appears well at first and George is inclined to scoff at the statement Doctor Clifford made to him, but there can be no lasting happiness founded on false hope. One day George does not feel well and goes to call on the "quack." To his discomfort he learns that the fake has been driven from town. He then seeks Doctor Clifford, only to learn that he has gone to Europe. On returning home Henriette meets him and tells him her happy secret.

After months of doubt and fear George awaits the coming of the little stranger who is to make his household a place of even greater joy. As he paces the hall the words of the worthy doctor—"if you marry within two years you will be a murderer"—come to him. When he is admitted to Henriette's room, however, the baby appears healthy and he is again at rest.

A few months of happiness pass and then one day the truth is brought to George's door with crushing force, when a doctor, called in for what George's mother believes is a slight ailment, refuses the case and sends the child to Doctor Clifford who has returned from his trip. The great doctor tells Mrs. Dupont she must dismiss the wet nurse, as the woman is liable to become infected and, as the nurse denounces George, Henrietta learns of the awful fate of her baby. She takes the infant, and hurries to her father's home and Senator Locke is about to take George's life when Doctor Clifford stops him and tells him if he had inquired into his son-in-law's health rather than into his financial condition all this would have been avoided.

George, recalling the horrors he saw in the hospital, cannot face the ordeal before him and, leaving all his estate to his wife, he goes to the sea. Again the coward's first thought is suicide and this time there is no one to interfere with his purpose.

"Below the Dead Line"

The initial release of the Eaco Films, "Below the Dead Line," in which Edwin August, who has won considerable fame as an actor—author and producer, is featured, is a thrilling underworld story in which a number of counterfeiters figure chiefly.

To secure the true to life interiors of the home of the counterfeiter, Mr. August purchased from a reformed crook a number of plates showing the interiors of his erstwhile counterfeiting joint. He ordered special sets to be copied exactly from the plates, and had the former counterfeiter supervise the erecting of the scenery at the Pathe Jersey City studio where the filming of all the Eaco interiors will take place. "Below the Dead Line" is full of thrills from start to finish and will be released shortly through one of the prominent programs.

"War Stricken Louvain"

On Monday afternoon, September 14, John Hardin, manager of the Eclectic Film Exchange in Chicago, received the first prints of a one-reel Pathe subject, entitled "War Stricken Louvain," which is alleged to contain the first real and authentic views of the fighting in Europe.

The pictures were taken with a small camera, which the camera-man was able to conceal beneath his mackintosh and so the fact that they were being filmed was totally unknown to the troops who are shown on the screen. Censorship has been so severe that motion picture operators equipped with the ordinary type of cameras have had great difficulty in getting any war pictures, and still more trouble in getting any pictures which they were able to take out of the country.

The Pathe subject is remarkably clear and shows in detail the early operations of the Belgian army. We see the troops, both afoot and on horseback, going to the front, concealing themselves behind hastily thrown up barricades to await the coming of the Germans, and dragging their heavy artillery into position. Among the most interesting scenes are the ones showing the light guns, drawn by dogs, en route to the firing line, and the views of the peasants fleeing for their lives, carrying with them such few of their household belongings as they were able to transport.

Closeup views are given of a number of troops encamped for the night or pausing by the roadside to enjoy their noonday lunch, and one can obtain an excellent idea of their uniforms and equipment. The film was released on Tuesday, September 15, and will undoubtedly meet with a tremendous demand on the part of the exhibitor who is anxious to show his patrons war pictures direct from the scene of the big European conflict.

Fuller Company Returns to New York

Mary Fuller with her Victor company, including Charles Ogle and Walter Edwin, has just returned to the Imp Studio, New York, from Shohola, Pike county, Pa., where several big features were produced. Miss Fuller with a splendid coat of tan and rejuvenated spirits has many interesting experiences to tell and more interesting pictures to show.

Conspirators' Plans All Go Wrong

Russian Agent Foiled

EPISODE thirteen of the "Million Dollar Mystery" verges close upon comedy, for two of the conspirators, each intent upon trapping either Florence Gray or her father, so disguise themselves for the purpose of catching their prey that they unwittingly foil their own plot. Each mistakes the other for a victim, and when the disguises are removed they discover that, instead of trapping either Mr. Hargreaves or his daughter, they have wasted their diplomacy and intrigue upon each other.

A new character makes his appearance in this thirteenth part of the exciting serial, the new role being interpreted by that popular Thanhouser star, Irving Cummings. The remaining figures in the famous story are the already familiar ones, and the same players appear as in previous episodes.

As the film begins we see Countess Olga and Braine, the conspirator, busy with their plans for capturing either Florence or her father in order to learn the whereabouts of the million dollar treasure. Braine suddenly recalls that there is to be a meeting of the Black Hundred and hurries away in order to be present.

In the darkened room of the secret fraternity the members of the Russian society are deep in their schemes to trap the man whom they believe to be a traitor to their order, when suddenly there is a rap at the door. The man outside evidently gives the correct password and grips, for a few moments later he is conducted into the room and introduced as a secret agent who has been sent direct from Russia to take charge of the Hargreaves case.

The members of the Black Hundred hasten to explain in detail all that has already been done toward capturing Hargreaves or finding the missing million dollars. Great is their surprise when the Russian secret agent laughs at their efforts, calls them childish and hopeless, and offers himself to take charge of the Hargreave case in the future, promising the Black Hundred that he will show results within twenty-four hours. With this understanding the members of the Black Hundred depart from the conference, leaving the future action of their body entirely in the hands of the Russian society's recently arrived secret agent.

The plotters, mistaken as to each other's identity, depart in a taxi.

Florence Gray, meanwhile, in her home is receiving the attentions of Norton, the reporter, who has time and again aided her in escaping from the clutches of the conspirators and been of inestimable aid in thwarting plots of the secret society to obtain information as to the hiding place of the fortune. A love tryst of Florence and Norton is beheld by Jones, the butler, who smiles to himself as he sees the developing love affair, for the butler is positive Jimmy Norton will prove an ideal mate for the girl who has been left to face so many perils.

The butler chances upon the love tryst.

Shortly after Norton's departure the maid hands Florence some letters and papers that have just arrived, but ere Florence has time to more than open the first letter she is interrupted by the arrival of Countess Olga, who greets her with a caress and appears as unconcerned as though she has not time and again plotted to kidnap and overpower Florence.

A maid, who has been so clumsy as to upset a pedestal on which stood a valuable bit of pottery, rushes into the room to explain to her mistress how sorry she is over having broken the rare decoration, and Florence, excusing herself to the countess, accompanies the maid to the scene of the disaster to see if the damage can not be repaired. In her absence Countess Olga makes bold to glance over the letter which Florence has left lying on the table. Her eyes light up with excitement as she perceives that the short missive is signed with the name of Florence's father, and that it names a meeting place in the old arbor at eight o'clock that night.

Instantly Countess Olga conceives a plan for taking Florence's place and so capturing Mr. Hargreaves. In order to make certain that the real Florence does not interfere with her plans, Olga hurries across the room to a clock that stands on a mantlepiece and sets it back a half hour.

Having accomplished even more than she had believed possible when she set out to call upon Florence, Countess Olga hastens to bid her hostess adieu, upon the latter's return to the room. Following the departure of the countess, Florence picks up the letter she had started to read when the countess was announced, and learns for the first time that her father wishes to meet her in the garden that evening at eight. Florence is delighted at the thought of again meeting the father she has not seen since leaving boarding school, and hastens away to prepare for her evening's journey.

Promptly at eight o'clock that evening a man with the familiar beard and slouch hat of Florence's father stands waiting in the old arbor. He paces backward and forward in his endeavor to conceal his impatience and anxiety, but suddenly becomes alert as a cloaked and hooded figure flits through the shrubbery toward him. "Father" cries the hooded figure. "My child," answers the man in the arbor, as he folds the slender figure in his arms.

After a brief conversation, Hargreaves explains that important documents relating to the fortune he wishes to turn over to his daughter are in a downtown building and that she must accompany him thither. With apparent reluctance the daughter agrees, and the two enter a taxicab and leave for the business section of the city.

Entering an office building Hargreaves raps on a certain door and, then, the girl with him seems, for the first time, to suspect that all is not well. The door opens a moment later to admit the two to the inner room of the Black Hundred. On all sides of the room sit the conspirators. With a curtesy to her fellow conspirators, the girl who has just been ushered into the room sweeps off her long cloak and concealing hood and shows herself to be none other than Countess Olga. With a smile she waves her hand to the man who has escorted her to the society's meeting place and declares that she has captured Hargreaves.

Laughing in derision at her declaration, the man supposed to be Hargreaves jerks off his wig and false beard and exposes himself as the Russian secret agent. He then dramatically declares that he has lured Florence into the clutches of the gang. Each discovers by that time that there is a mistake somewhere, though neither has seen the other before and so cannot quite comprehend what is wrong.

The Russian agent curses the countess for meddling in an affair which he had agreed to handle alone and unaided, while the countess bitterly denounces the other members of the society for not having informed her of the secret agent's arrival and plan of campaign. The humiliation he has suffered in seeing his plans go wrong proves too much for the secret agent, however, and he dashes out of the room declaring that he is through with the society and will aid it no farther.

Florence, meanwhile, has discovered that the clock has been set back and so that she has missed keeping the appointment with her father. As the picture ends she is seen bemoaning the fact that she was prevented from keeping the tryst, little realizing that, had she done so, she would, at that moment, have been in the clutches of the conspirators.

Montgomery-Darkfeather Form Company

Frank E. Montgomery who has for years been associated with the production of Indian Features first with the Bison company and then the Universal and recently the Kalem, has formed his own company and will release through the Sawyer, Inc. His contract calls for the release of 3,000 feet a week, one reel of comedy and a two-reel Indian feature.

The Indian plays will feature Mona Darkfeather, and the name of the brand will be "The Darkfeather Features." The comedies will be called "Monty Comedies." Mr. Montgomery will direct the Indian Features and is now augmenting his band of Indians. J. Davis will direct the comedies with Jane Keckley and other capable people in the cast. The company will occupy the Norbig studios at Edendale, Cal., until new studios are built.

Gallant Mr. Selig

The September 3 issue of the London Bioscope contains an interesting little item in the Paris correspondence of Mr. John Cher, which relates to a little incident that took place in a Paris railway depot and in which W. N. Selig, the Chicago film manufacturer figures as the central character. Mr. Cher's item reads as follows:

Last Sunday, Mr. Bates, of the Eclipse Company, left Paris for London with a huge consignment of negatives destined for the Urbanora and Selig Companies. William N. Selig was to have accompanied the director of the Eclipse Company, but a little incident at the Gare du Nord delayed his departure for twelve hours. It happened like this: Mr. Selig duly left the Hotel Edouard VII. at an early hour on Sunday morning with the intention of boarding the 7 o'clock train with Mr. Bates. He found the station filled with people endeavouring to secure places. About five minutes before the train was due to leave a poor Englishwoman with several little children arrived on the platform, only to find every compartment occupied. Observing her distress, Mr. Selig very gallantly gave up his place and returned to his hotel. Do not think that the Chicago film manufacturer told me about the story—far from it; indeed, when I mentioned the matter to him a little later on in the day he seemed a little annoyed that I should have learned the facts.

Screen Club Buys Cotton

Following the splendid example set by the President of the United States, the Screen Club of New York has arranged for the purchase of one of the bales of cotton piled up in the South because of the war.

The banner cotton crop, coming as it does at a time when the foreign markets are demoralized, has tied up capital in the South in a manner that threatens great hardship. President Wilson recently bought several bales of cotton, thereby setting an example well worthy of serious consideration.

At a special meeting of the board of governors of the Screen Club on September 9, Treasurer Jake Gerhardt was authorized to buy a bale of cotton for the club, which has large southern membership. Cotton is a good investment and the bale will undoubtedly sell at a profit when the market again becomes active. Any money realized upon the investment, which is altogether an act of charity, will be placed at the disposal of the relief committee.

Selig Play Based on Indian Legend

Trapper Gains Faith

In the snow-covered wilderness the holy Pere Corraine does infinite good among the settlers and natives.

ANOTHER one of the Selig Polyscope Company's two-reel productions of the land of ice and snow is booked for release on September 28. It is entitled "The Going of the White Swan" and is an adaptation of a story by Sir Gilbert Parker.

Four principal characters appear in the cast and the roles are handled in a convincing manner by the well known trio of Selig players, Bessie Eyton, Wheeler Oakman and Frank Clark, assisted by little Roy Clark. Messrs. Oakman and Clark do some clever work in the climax scene in which the former, as a man who is opposed to God, faces the latter as a minister of the Creator. The scene is purely psychological but the players register the emotions going on within them clearly and with great dramatic power.

Pere Corraine comforts Lucette and tells her that John will reform.

The settings are very pretty, the snow backgrounds photographing clearly, while the interiors appear true to the wild region in which the story is laid. The title is derived from an Indian legend which states that when a person sees the vision of a white swan his death is approaching. In this case the swan comes to a little boy whose mother has left him, but with the return of the mother he sees the going of the White Swan.

The story opens with the marriage of Lucette, a girl of the wilds, and John Bagot, a well meaning trapper who is very set in his ideas and is devoted to the whiskey bottle. The young couple leave for the little cabin in the wilderness which John has built and which is to be their home in the future. The trapper's manner of showing his love for his wife is rather rough, but Lucette does not mind and returns his affection.

One of the last ones to bid them good-bye is Pere Corraine, a beloved missionary, whose kindness and thoughtfulness to the simple-hearted people of the wild region has endeared him to everyone. While John likes Pere Corraine personally he cannot bring himself to believe in the power of God and so, while the good messenger of the Creator bids Lucette, who holds her religion above all else in her life, farewell, the trapper walks away and, taking a whiskey bottle from his pocket, drinks from it.

The trip is made by the young couple after many hardships and at last they arrive at the little hut John has built, where they begin their married life. Their happiness is short lived, however, for John's devotion to the whiskey bottle and Lucette's religious beliefs soon force them apart. She begs him not to drink but he ignores her and laughs at her when she prays before a statue.

The months pass, the young couple quarreling almost continually. One day a baby comes to them and for a short time all is happiness, for John is so wrapped up in the little infant that he does not drink. Then Pere Corraine comes to see the child and again the lack of faith shows in the trapper and, while Lucette and the missionary talk over the cradle, John secludes himself and drinks from his beloved bottle. Again he becomes morose and again Lucette is unhappy.

Twelve years drag slowly by, the trapper and his wife being kept together only by the presence of their little son, who has been named Dominique. The boy has grown into a healthy specimen of a youth of the wilderness and is greatly loved by both his parents. Although John does not know it, Lucette has taught Dominique the truths of her religion and has had Pere Corraine come to see the boy every time he passed near their cabin.

One day, while John is visiting his traps, a pack of wolves creep up to the cabin door and their howling terrifies Lucette. Dominique takes his gun and goes outside to shoot them. The wolves flee from the fire and the boy follows them into the nearby forest. On and on he runs, firing all the time.

John has been drinking while tending his traps and when he returns home and finds Lucette praying before her little altar he is much amused. Under the influence of the liquor he insults her religion several times and at last Lucette, unable to control herself any longer, flees from the cabin and hurries down the trail. The man, although he is not able to think clearly, realizes what has happened and sinks into a chair, heartily sorry for what he has done, but unable to follow the woman he loves because of his condition.

Dominique, in the meantime, has fired his last shot at the wolves and, when they turn upon him he is forced to flee for his life. He reaches the cabin torn and bleeding. John saves him and carries him inside their little home. He tries to care for him but cannot nurse the boy as Lucette would and in desperation determines to seek her. Then he realizes he cannot leave the boy alone in the hut, so he is forced to give up the search. Dominique, in his semi-conscious condition, raves wildly and tells his father that he has seen the White Swan, the Indian omen of death.

Dominique sees the passing of the White Swan.

While the father suffers great mental agony at the bedside of the boy Lucette continues to run away from the cabin and into the wilderness. Dominique begs his father to pray for him and the man who has never believed in God realizes his mistake and falls on his knees before Lucette's little altar and prays, for the first time in his life, that his boy will be spared him so he will not be left alone.

A band of wandering, half-savage Indians meet Lucette and the chief decides to make her his squaw. Pere Corraine is passing near their encampment and sees the girl in distress. He tries to persuade the chief that it is wrong for him to hold Lucette a prisoner, but the Indian says he has captured her and that he will not release her unless he receives his price, which he names as ten barrels of rum. The missionary knows that to give the liquor to the red men will be selling his own soul. It is the only course, however, and he meets the chief's demands and takes Lucette home to John.

The trapper is still on his knees praying when Pere Corraine and Lucette arrive and the priest, to teach him a lesson, tells him that his wife has been carried away by the Indians. At first John is angry because the holy man did not stop them, but his grief overcomes him and he sinks to his knees and again begs God to help him. Pere Corraine then brings Lucette to him and, as the husband and wife bend over the bed of Dominique, the boy happily opens his eyes and says that the White Swan has gone. And the couple know that all danger of death has passed. John tells Lucette that he now firmly believes in the religion to which she is devoted and promises that he will never drink again, and so the happy little family start life anew.

The cast is as follows:

Lucette	Bessie Eyton
John Bagot	Wheeler Oakman
Dominique	Roy Clark
Pere Corraine	Frank Clark
Indian Chief	Joe King

Costly Kittens Appear in "Beauty" Film

When Henry Pollard was producing "Her Really Mother," a recent release of his "Beauty" brand, he hurried into the Santa Barbara studio one morning and told Miss Margarita Fischer, who was featured in the production that she must have some attractive domestic animal on hand within an hour to use in a certain scene. As Miss Fischer's mind at once picked a kitten as the species to be desired she started her search. The property and dressing rooms of the studio were visited but they yielded no kittens. Then a hasty inquiry was made among the other actresses of the company — but still no kitten appeared. As the hour was fast drawing to a close and Miss Fischer had about given up the search she suddenly thought of a friend who lived near the "Beauty" studio and who was a great admirer of felines. A hurried trip to said friend brought the desired results, and in the accompanying picture Miss Fischer is seen holding not one, but $300 worth of kittens, all of whom posed before the camera with enough ease and grace to qualify them as professional performers.

Blache Exchange Growing

Exhibitors and exchange men of Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, are watching with interest the movements of O. W. Moore, manager of the Indianapolis Blaché exchange, who is preparing to book Blaché and Solax features direct to the theaters of Ohio from his Indianapolis offices. Manager Moore, who is well known throughout the Middle West as a practical man of long experience, states that his exchange expects to be in a position to make a definite statement regarding the distribution of Solax and Blaché features in Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky at an early date, which may include the notice of a new Blaché exchange being opened in Cleveland.

Essanay Stages Big Battle Film

"The Plum Tree"

ACTING of a really superior sort, stage settings that show care and detail, photography that is above criticism and several spectacular battle scenes in which hundreds of supernumeraries participate, all tend to make Essanay's three-reel offering of Friday, September 18, entitled "The Plum Tree" one of the best that has recently come from the Essanay studios.

Francis X. Bushman has the male lead and does splendid work as Craig Ewell. Supporting the popular Essanay star are Beverly Bayne in the role of Alice Graham, Lester Cuneo in the "heavy" role of Norris Griggs, and Frank Dayton as John Graham. Some excellent character work is done by Helen Dunbar as Mrs. Ewell and Harry Dunkinson as "Dug" Taylor.

The federals attack the revolutionists.

Director Calvert is to congratulated upon his excellent handling of the large number of troops he used in the battle scenes. These men, it is understood, were all members of the first regiment Illinois National Guard and totally without experience before the camera, yet the Essanay director so skillfully handled their maneuvers that one might easily mistake them for tried and experienced film players. But one slip is made in this portion of the film and that is in the involuntary turning of some of the men toward the camera. The way in which the action of the rapid fire gun registers on the screen is one of the snappiest bits of the entire picture and sure to enthuse the audience who will behold it.

Griggs confesses all to the padre.

Just why the picture should have been named "The Plum Tree" may puzzle many who will view the film, for the only part the plum tree plays in the story is as a background for some of the earlier scenes and, later, as a setting for the closing scene. In the first view we have of it the tree is a young and immature one, while later we see it in blossom, and, at the close of the picture, it is shown leafless and sear, thus symbolizing the development of the story as it affects the lives of the leading characters. It may be called a symbolic title.

Craig Ewell is in love with and loved by Alice Graham until Norris Griggs, the village banker, threatens to obtain judgment on some notes given him by Alice's father and which are then due. John Graham, being unable to meet the notes and having noted that Griggs is much interested in Alice's beauty, suggests that a marriage might be arranged between the two. Griggs, who in reality is much taken with Alice but has believed that he would have no chance of winning her while she had so attractive a suitor as Craig Ewell, instantly jumps at the chance given him and hastens to assure Graham that he will tear up the notes if a match with his pretty daughter can be arranged.

Graham, who has seen Ewell and Alice in conversation near the plum tree, at the side of the house, immediately orders young Ewell away and gruffly commands his daughter to accept Griggs as a suitor for her hand. Alice replies that she loves Ewell and Ewell alone, and that she cannot encourage anyone else.

Angered by her dislike for him, Griggs returns to his office and sets about a plan for getting Ewell out of the way. He has much to say to "Dug" Taylor, the village loafer, within the next few days, and ere the week is over "Dug" finds an opportunity of calling upon young Craig Ewell. He explains that he has found the hiding place of a large sum of money, and that if Craig will accompany him that night the two can secure it. Ewell is at first inclined to scoff at "Dug's" proposition, but after a talk with Alice he is moved to investigate, at least.

Immediately upon obtaining Ewell's promise to meet him in Lone Man's Cove that night, "Dug" hastens to Griggs' office to report that all is well. That night Craig sits in the lonely rendezvous waiting for the coming of his associate. He has brought a revolver with him, as instructed by "Dug," and while waiting he amuses himself by playing with it. Suddenly a figure comes dashing toward him through the underbrush, closely pursued by other figures, who are firing at the fleeing man. Just as the pursued reaches Ewell he stumbles and falls dead. Ewell is amazed to discover that the man is masked and holds a strong box in his arms. Removing the mask, Ewell starts back in horror to find that the dead man is none other than "Dug" Taylor. A moment later and Ewell finds himself surrounded by a bunch of trainmen from the nearby railroad, who explain that the fast express has just been robbed by the man they were pursuing. Ewell is arrested as an accomplice.

Weeks pass and the trial of Ewell results in his being found guilty and sentenced to ten years in the state penitentiary. Within less than a year after beginning his prison term, Ewell receives a message from his mother which states that Alice Graham has been forced by her father into a loveless marriage with Griggs. Naturally this makes Ewell more gloomy than ever.

Ten years pass and at last comes the day when Ewell is to be released from prison. With arms stretched wide he breathes in the first pure air he has enjoyed since entering the penitentiary, as he leaves the iron gates and stone walls behind. During his imprisonment his mother has passed away and Ewell therefore finds no excuse to return to his former home.

Aimlessly he wanders about and eventually makes his way to the Pacific coast. One day, while strolling along the cliffs that line the seacoast, he comes upon a gang of roustabouts busily loading arms and ammunition aboard a vessel at anchor a little way out. By chance the men discover Ewell's presence and, fearing that he will spread the news of their operations, they seize him and compel him to assist in the work of loading the contraband arms aboard the ship, which has been chartered by a Mexican revolutionary junta.

Griggs, the former banker, is now deeply interested in the success of the Mexican revolutionists, for he has been acting as the financial leader in the uprising, though this fact is unknown to Ewell. Though Griggs is aboard the vessel when it sails, Ewell does not recognize his former rival in the swarthy, sunburned man who is aiding the revolutionists. One night he overhears the plans of the junta and learns that immediately upon landing they hope to arm their forces ashore, and then to attack the citadel of San Pedro.

Determined to thwart the plans of the men who have kidnapped him, Ewell leaps overboard when the vessel nears the Mexican coast and, after many dangers and difficulties, which include a running fight with the rebel army ashore, Ewell finally arrives at San Pedro and warns the garrison of its peril. Guided by Ewell, the federal forces sally forth and in some spectacular battle scenes surprise and overpower the revolutionists.

During the struggle Ewell encounters Griggs and the two engage in a hand-to-hand combat in which Griggs is mortally wounded. Ewell carries him out of the line of fire and to a nearby hut, where a padre is summoned. To the priest Griggs, realizing that he is dying, confesses that ten years before he planned the robbery of a limited express train, and that with the assistance of "Dug" Taylor, his tool, the crime was fastened on Craig Ewell, an innocent man.

Ewell, hearing his name mentioned, draws near, and then for the first time recognizes the man on the cot. The shock of recognizing Ewell proves too much for Griggs and he dies, leaving his confession in the hands of the padre.

Weeks later, Ewell returns to Alice and, after showing her Griggs' confession, a beautiful reunion occurs under the old plum tree.

This picture is produced in conjunction with the Ladies' World Magazine, which is running the story One paragraph in the story is omitted, but this portion of the tale is shown on the screen. Prizes are offered for the best paragraph submitted by readers of the magazine after seeing the film.

S. S. Hutchinson Returns to London

An exciting trip from Berne, Switzerland, through France to London, with S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, his wife and two sons, Hobart and Winston, as the principal leads, would make a thrilling moving picture.

The party was accompanied by a number of unfortunate tourists, but after many trying experiences reached London. Mr. Hutchinson is expected to reach this country the latter part of the month.

On the Outside Looking In

By the Goat Man

MAYBE it isn't fair to charge it up to the film business, but I can't help it. You see I have been taking myself seriously of late. For six years past I have given all of my time and much of my money to the cause of the motion picture. Neither of these elements may have concerned you, but they are of vital importance to me. I managed always to have sufficient nerve-force to "get by" until two years ago last March when I caved in, physically. Prior to that I could do about one hundred and fifty hours a week, maintaining high pressure all the way. My temporary jolt taught me to put on the soft pedal and slow down a bit. Life's pathway is strewn with lessons. ¶The film industry will try a man's soul. The men with power are largely non-comittal — their subordinates make all the promises. I have been prone to heed the noisy ones. My own word has some value among my fellows and I try to judge film men as I would other men in other walks of life. In the film game it isn't always safe to do that. Two years ago, I went to the mat with a malady that has been hard to throw off. No better proof can be offered than that as you read this I will be lying in a hospital, either in a comfortable room, which matters, or upon a slab, which doesn't matter. The reason for it dates back to two years ago when my nerves blew up. I charge it all to those men who break their word with me. ¶This is not an arraignment. With faith in modern surgery I hope to lose little time with my work. I have been fishing for nearly three weeks. Fishing gives one time to think. I am not satisfied with my work, in which some of the prospective advertiser list must agree. I have seen a number of faults in it. When you go far away and look back at your field of activities you can usually see ways to add improvements and correct faults. Shall I return to my desk, I propose to put some of my plans into execution. I have assurances from the largest exhibitors in the country that they will cooperate with me and I am relying on those exhibitors. I am heartily sick of the eastern sentiment that "Motography doesn't reach the exhibitor." This prevailing thought has been fostered by a few advertising agencies who have been granted commissions by some publishers I might name, while being denied a commission by this journal to the trade. The effect is temporarily damaging to me. In the end, it will make little difference.

There are a number of dopesters down in little old New York who might just as well save one extra manifold-sheet and a little postage by refraining from sending the sheets to me. I am positively tired unto death of falling for press matter that always leads up to the hazy probability that some advertising will surely follow. For a long time we have been more than generous with these fellows only to find the business planted in a publication supposed to cover the industry like a blanket. It does. You can find stacks of 'em wherever you go. Because Motography is sufficiently attractive and readable to have interest for film folks, you never see it lying around! There's the difference. One of my plans will show you exactly where to find Motography —give you a key to its location.

I am an ardent believer in good service. It is the motto of our shop. As a motto, it may be as meaningless as the pounding of a dancing Igorrote on a bronze gong, but at our shop it is made to carry a meaning of deep and special significance to our customers. The real desire to serve our patrons —the intelligence, experience and energy we put behind our motto give the words full and lasting impression. ¶At that, mere words count for little or nothing. It is the association back of the characters that gives them meaning to the human mind. We have a tiny little bundle of letters of appreciation from customers that mean almost as much to us as those which start off with—"Enclosed find check." Straws tell which way the wind blows.

is a cracker jack little county-seat town with about 1,500 population. Ferd Retzman never had a film less than ninety days old and he probably never will until the town begins to grow. Country towns are pretty much alike all over. I was absorbed recently by an investigation purporting to prove that in counties of 20,000 or less, the census indicates that the country districts, the small towns and the large towns all grow in proportion. When the population of the county passes 25,000 a change immediately takes place. Country districts often stand still and the small towns usually retrograde, while the larger towns show heavy increase in population. This is conclusive that a change in the film rental must come if the small town exhibitor is to serve his public with reasonably current releases. As it is, the better citizenship of his community drive their cars to the larger near-by cities and see films that are denied their townsman exhibitor for weeks. They come to regard his theater as second-rate or less and sneer at his efforts, no matter how earnest and sincere they are. When he does strain a point and pay a bonus for a feature, this same better citizenship pooh-pooh because they saw it thirty-five miles away in a larger city two months ahead of the local theater. ¶The present renting system is all in favor of the better house in the more densely populated districts.

Arrow is Silent Warning to Settlers

Strong Western Picture

ONE of the latest releases through Warner's Features, Inc., is "The Arrow's Tongue," a two-part western drama produced by Miller's 101 Ranch under the direction of Marshall Farnum. The events take place in the days when the merest kind of an excuse was all that was necessary to arouse the Indians' hatred for the white settlers and send them out on a burning and scalping expedition.

The title fits the picture excellently. The story is of the reminiscences of the years gone by, awakened in a settler's mind by turning up a skull and an arrow in plowing the first furrow of his new land.

The knowledge that the cowboys and Indians are members of the famous 101 Ranch Wild West Show, gives the picture more realism than is imparted by the average western production. The scenes were taken on Miller brothers' extensive ranch and contain plenty of frontier atmosphere.

A farmer comes across an old arrow and a skull while plowing the first furrow in his new claim. The sight of these relics of the first settlers, both white and red, brings to his mind the recollection of the dangers which beset the pioneers in their first efforts to make the West their home.

An Indian girl named Sacashu is traded to a whiskey runner for his entire load of liquor. Wa Hu Ha, a young brave who intends to make Sacashu his squaw, becomes incensed at this and swears vengeance on the white race. Some years afterwards he becomes chief of the tribe and at once starts out with his band to raid and burn the settlers' homes. His first visit is to the home of his old enemy, the whiskey runner. The white man is killed and Sacashu taken prisoner, but their son manages to escape. The Indians discover him as he mounts a horse to ride away and the arrow sent after him lodges in his back.

Still clinging to the horse, the boy passes a number of settlers' homes and wagon trains, his horse going wild. The short glimpse which the immigrants have of this phantom-like rider as he dashes by is enough. The arrow protruding from the boy's back tells them that the Indians are on the warpath. A circle is formed with the wagons, and the settlers prepare to defend themselves.

In the meantime Sacashu escapes from Wa Hu Ha's band and makes her way back to her former home. It lies in ashes and no trace of her boy can be found. She then rides to the scene of the battle, dismounts and rushes across the open to the settlers' circle. One of the defenders mistakes her purpose and shoots her. The arrival of a regiment of troops puts the Indians to rout, ending the battle. At this the farmer awakens from his musings, throws the arrow and the boy's skull, for such it is, away and continues with his plowing.

Thrills in New Lubin Series

Because "The Beloved Adventurer," the fifteen-part Lubin series, written by Emmett Campbell Hall especially for Arthur V. Johnson and Lottie Briscoe, has been described as a character study—which it is—it should not be thought to be lacking in thrilling situations. On the contrary there are a dozen incidents that will cause the most hardened spectator to hold his breath in suspense or gasp with astonishment. This is not merely by reason of the exciting "business," but because the thrills are legitimate and are logical developments from reasonable situations, not mere "stunts" dragged in for the sake of spectacular effect; and because these incidents have been so introduced as to obtain dramatic contrasts of startling yet artistic abruptness.

Instead of following the not unusual course of writing his stories around some big mechanical effects or twisting machine-made plots to embrace them, the author of "The Beloved Adventurer" has made the sensational and spectacular scenes incident to and not the basis of the fifteen unit-plots contained within the one master-plot of the series. Usually the photoplaywright is hampered and limited by the consideration of expense, but it was not so in this case, the Lubin Company being determined that nothing should stand in the way of a perfect production, and giving the author a free hand.

Edwin Barbour in Lubin's "The Investment."

There are, as a consequence, some effects which ordinarily would have been considered as "big" enough to serve as feature scenes in multiple reel productions, but which in "The Beloved Adventurer" are only incidents in the single-reel units—as, for instance, a head-on collision, and the wrecking and burning of two railway trains, and the burning and blowing up of a ship.

Arthur Johnson is called on to display skill and daring in many ways, and Miss Briscoe performs the unique feat of lassoing, from the top of a hundred-foot cliff, a man standing at its base and then dragging him up the sheer face of the rock like a fish at the end of a line.

Merely to read the book—the complete story of "The Beloved Adventurer"—which Emmett Campbell Hall has written and which is published by the Lubin Company coincidentally with the release of the film, is enough to cause one's pulse to quicken perceptibly, and to force the conclusion that "adventure" is a mild term to apply to the experiences of Lord Cecil.

New York Exhibitors Ball

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York has hired the four floors of Grand Central Palace for the fourth annual entertainment and ball to be held on Monday night, December 7, 1914. No program will be issued for this ball and therefore all manufacturers are asked to co-operate in the abolishment of this form of levying "ads" on the manufacturers.

This ball is being held for the purpose of getting together the manufacturers, the photoplayers, the exhibitors and 50,000 photo fans, and a gala time is assured.

A Talented Pathe Director

The work of Frank Powell, the director of Pathe Freres Special Features, is work that has created a world-wide interest. Not only is it a combination of unique artistry and truthfulness of historical detail, but it bespeaks the vast experience Mr. Powell has had in the motion picture industry.

Frank Powell.

In years Mr. Powell is young, but in directing experience he is ripe and aged. Starting as a stage director for Augustus Thomas, he later joined Kirke LaSalle and afterwards directed productions for several years in Europe for Miss Ellen Terry. He then returned to America and made his debut in the motion picture field by directing comedies for the Biograph Company. With this firm he was connected for two years, then returning to Europe again, was engaged by Pathe Freres as a producer of historical and romantic drama. Ill health however necessitated his resting for awhile, but his art and advancement did not suffer, for though he was compelled to quit work, he toured the continent acquainting himself minutely with foreign customs and types. On his return to America he was engaged by the Powers Motion Picture Company and after working with it for some time, rejoined Pathe Freres as a director of their special features.

Among Mr. Powell's most recent releases are "The Ghost," a three-reel Colonial drama; "The Corsair," a four-reel Turkish story, necessitating much research and historical exactitude; a three-reel dramatization of the well known classic poem, "Lucille," and "The Stain," a six-reel modern American story that is said to be one of the strongest and most artistic productions released and, soon, "The Taint," a remarkable six-reel melodrama.

New Bill at Vitagraph Theater

The Vitagraph Broadway theater at Forty-fourth street is enjoying added patronage since the advent of fall, which was coincident with the putting on of the theater's change of bill. The two feature films which are the attraction there now are the four-part comedy, "The Win(k)some Widow," by J. Stewart Blackton, directed by Edmond Stratton, and a detective drama bearing the mysterious title "413." The latter film is the work of Donald I. Buchannon and its production is that of Ralph Ince.

The Blackton film is a riot of action which registers humorously and well. There are complications that follow each other in rapid succession and they precipitate a climax in which firemen valiantly flood a fireless house and afford the participants of the comedy a chance for an unexpected swim. Cissy Fitz-Gerald plays the title role and justifies her casting. The work of those who support her in this role is especially good and Mr. Blackton is seen on the two brief occasions when the use of his high-powered motor boat is brought into the story, and plays a short but essential part.

The "Win(k)some Widow" is a prima donna who turns all masculine heads with the witchery of her famous wink. Her admirers are many and when "Friend Husband" makes an unexpected appearance, the widow has a not-to-be-envied time disposing of these admirers who all choose this particular evening on which to call. Confusion results, and a call is sent to the fire department and, after the others have swum to doubtful safety, the widow's rescue is affected on the back of "Friend Husband."

The cast contains the following well-known names:

The widow, a prima donna with a famous wink.....
.....Cissy Fitz-Gerald
Cutey, her press agent and one of her admirers...Wally Van
Her husband.....L. Rogers Lytton
Hughie, her manager, also one of her admirers..Hughie Mack Jack, the one she admires most.....Donald Hall
Nini Tosca, her orchestra leader, who admirers her violently.....Nicholas Dunaew Old Gotrocks, who thinks his millions will win her.....
.....Albert Roccardi
Her maid.....Edwina Robbins
A bibulous reporter.....Harry Kendall
A real estate agent.....George S. Stevens

Mr. Ince's company, responsible for the drama, "413," features Anita Stewart, Julia Swayne Gordon and Harry Morey. Harry Northrup also does work worthy of note in this three-part film and Paul Scardon and Anders Randolf appear to advantage.

The story contains a wonderful climax in the derailing of a train, stolen by the head of a gang of diamond smugglers. The turning of a switch sends the train, at top speed, along an unused track which terminates at the top of a hill, and the train runs off, down the embankment. Under the ruins of the engine the body of the smuggler is found.

The story is interesting throughout, the cast well chosen, the action splendid, and the direction and photography of the best.

Strand's Popularity Increases

S. L. Rothapfel's management of the Strand theater is making for the greater popularity of that Broadway house, with its every program. The theater represents excellence of quality, and that is the characteristic of its respective programs. The bill for this week has as its headliner, Jack London's "Odyssy of the North," as directed and starred in by Hobart Bosworth, of Bosworth Features. A splendid Keystone film with Charles Chaplin and Arbuckle as the chief fun-makers, is also shown.

MILITARY CENSORSHIP.

SOME little time before the European war broke out MOTOGRAPHY declared itself against all forms of censorship in this civilized age and country. As we read the brief denatured and emasculated reports that come to us from the front, we are not quite so sure as we were about the civilized age; but we stand pat on the censorship question.

As everyone knows, the war offices of all the belligerent nations of Europe are maintaining a strict censorship on all news coming from the front. In the furtherance of this policy, all news dispatches are coming through the censorship and all dispatches directly from the scenes of battle are actually prepared by the war offices, and not by newspaper correspondents. No newspaper or magazine representatives are allowed at the front; and such few photographs of actions as have been obtained were practically "stolen"; that is, they were taken without official permission and by adroit concealment of the means.

It has been argued that the war, however obscure its cause and though it be a war of kings and not of people, is fought by the people and paid for with their money; and consequently that the people are entitled to know all the facts as news. We are neither affirming nor denying the justice of that sentiment; it is outside our province. The war lords control the situation and will do as they please about censorship.

It is the question of motion pictures of this, the world's greatest war, that interests us. If press correspondents and photographers are kept away from the seat—or seats—of war, naturally so are the motion picture camera men. And no doubt what is justice for the one is but equitable for the other—whatever may spell justice in this matter.

Suppose we grant (because we must perforce) that the war offices of the belligerents are right in denying passports to our camera-men. We cannot afford to dismiss the matter without further comment. The function of pictures is not only to entertain. All of history—the greatest activities of nations through the whole period of civilization—could be recorded in fac simile on a few reels of motion picture film. The mere fact that such a thing is possible makes it the sacred duty of those who are making history to see that it is done.

The accurate details of this great war live only in the secret records of the war offices. If a few men will it so, the world—the people—will never know anything but the final result, and perhaps not all of that. It is the time and the occasion for motion picture records if ever there was time and occasion. Even now the official camera men of the English, Russian, French and German war offices should be in the field, present at every engagement, using miles of film to make permanent the fleeting turbulences of battle. Who dares to estimate the incalculable value of such records to the war offices themselves, no matter whether the public ever sees them or not?

Perhaps this is to be a war without a history; for history itself is non-existent if the people cannot know it, as sound is non-existent if there be no ear to hear it. Even so, even if the secret records remain always secret, records there must be; and to ignore the greatest of all recording instruments, the motion picture film, is like ignoring high power firearms and going to war with bows and arrows.

If the modern magazine rifle and the commissary wagon are necessary to the soldier, the motion picture camera and the film vault are vitally essential to the war office. Possibly they are all so equipped; for the censorship prohibits our knowing even that. If they are not then the world is deprived of the greatest use of its greatest invention.

POLITICS AND THE SCREEN.

CHICAGO has just witnessed a coalition of pictures and politics that was not only successful in its local application, but has a great deal of significance for the picture business at large.

Most lines of business need occasional political friendship, and get it by having representatives in power. Then when ignorant or prejudiced politicians become interested in proposed legislation or regulation inimical to any industry, the member representing that industry is able to show them the error of their ways and avert, or at least moderate the threatened catastrophe.

The motion picture business has needed more, and had less, of this kind of help than any other business we can think of. It has always been the target of drastic and unnecessary laws and regulations, and has never been in a position to make any defense. It has seldom had either a friend or counselor at court when the need was greatest.

The voters at the last primaries in Chicago nominated a prominent motion picture man as the republican candidate for a high political office. During his campaign his fellow exhibitors to the number of about four hundred used their screens to further his popularity by means of slides showing his portrait and plea for nomination. We do not know, of course, what his chances might have been without this co-operation. But he got the nomination; that speaks for itself.

We have referred before to the power of the pictures in politics, and the possibility that future political campaigns would be swayed by the screen. The opportunity was always there. No other single agency in the world has so great an audience or wields so great an influence. The most cursory examination of simple statistics reveals the strength of the picture theater as a public institution. The four hundred theaters involved in the Chicago campaign, if each theater averaged a daily attendance of only three hundred, carried their candidate's political message to one hundred and twenty thousand people a day, and these one hundred and twenty thousand people, all of them, saw and read the message. They could not avoid it. Some newspapers may have a greater circulation; but do you suppose ten per cent of their readers actually read a political announcement of that kind? A newspaper is not a trade paper; all its readers are not interested in the same subject. And they do not have to read anything they are not inclined to read. In a picture theater every patron reads everything that comes on the screen. He can scarcely help himself, unless he deliberately closes his eyes or turns around; and he will not do that unless he already knows what is coming, and that it is distasteful.

Chicago has furnished a good example of what the screen can do politically. The way is open for larger works. A few such examples will teach the exhibitor to know his power; and if he uses it wisely it will increase beyond any present conception. It is possible that the motion picture theater manager will hold the politics of the country in the hollow of his hand.

Just A Moment Please

According to Dick Nehls' last press sheet Ed. Coxen, American leading man, when questioned as to why he didn't buy an auto is alleged to have replied that "One good horse is worth a dozen autos." Ed. must have seen Jack Richardson trying to drive that new buzz wagon of his.

"Why will they offer such punk vaudeville, between good films?"
"Wonder if that pianist really imagines she's playing the pictures?"
"For railroad dramas Kalem has 'em all beat."
"Gee, the blame Censor Board just spoiled that film."
"Yes, she looks innocent, but these actresses are all alike."

A special message, just in from Noo Yawk, informs us that the Screen Club is going to help save the country by buying a bale of cotton. The usual odds are offered that they'll change the Screen Club Anthem next, to "Down Where the Cotton Blossoms Grow." Any takers?

The genial Bob Levy, Pres. of the Illinois branch of the I. M. P. A., is now eligible to play the lead in anybody's five reel feature to be entitled "The Battle of the Ballots." Bob just cleaned 'em all up at the primaries. If we only had a few more like Bob, Maj. Flunkhouser and his gang would soon take to the woods.

The Better Man (Famous Players)—Cut out flash of order reducing pay of street car men, when General Wharton is supposed to be showing it to his secretary. In the large picture Gen'l Wharton is holding the paper in his hands. In the small close-up flash of the document itself, thumbtacks in each corner are used to fasten it to a board background, all of which registers clearly on the screen.

DIGBY BELL, whose wonderful make up in the character of "Mr. Pipp" in the stage production of "The Education of Mr. Pipp," has again appeared in this same character in a motion picture production of the same play by the All Star Feature Corporation. This is also Mr. Bell's first appearance in motion pictures, but after a trip to Florida and Cuba, where the scenes of the picture were taken, he expressed a keen delight in the new work. Formerly a tenor in grand opera and later a prominent musical comedy favorite, Mr. Bell has successfully appeared in later days in light comedy roles where he has always been a pronounced favorite among the more popular American actors. His debut on the stage was made at the Island of Malta, where his success warranted the command to appear before the Duke of Edinburgh. He is a prominent worker in the Lambs Club.

Digby Bell.

ETHEL BARRYMORE, who is making her debut in motion pictures under the direction of the All Star Feature Corporation in an original play written especially for her premier screen appearance by Augustus Thomas, director-general for the All Star Company. Probably no actress in America has a greater following or is more generally loved by the American public than Miss Barrymore, and her appearance in motion pictures is one which has long been heralded and most eagerly awaited by the motion picture fans. In private life Miss Barrymore, known as Mrs. Russel Colt, spends her every idle moment at her beautiful country home at Larchmount, where she worships her two children. Her part in the coming production of "The Nightingale" is one offering her numerous opportunities for her wide range of ability which she has accepted most gracefully.

Ethel Barrymore.

LOIS MEREDITH, the fascinating little ingenue, who jumped into the realms of stardom and public favor in a single night through her wonderful performance in the theatrical success "Help Wanted," makes her motion picture debut in the role of "Lila," the blind girl, in the All Star Feature Corporation's production "Dan," in which Miss Meredith appears in support of Lew Dockstader. This clever little actress has many times since her appearance but a few weeks ago, been termed the "Peg o' the Movies," owing to the success she enjoyed in one of the companies of "Peg o' My Heart," part of last season, together with the cute little trace of "brogue" which Miss Meredith displays. She has proven her aptitude for picture work in a most conclusive manner and her portrayal of the character of "Lila" has marked her as one of the season's "finds."

WILLIAM RILEY HATCH, whose first work in pictures was done in the All Star Feature Corporation's presentation of Eugene Walter's "Paid In Full," and who later appeared in the same company's production of "Pierre of the Plains," in the role of "Peter Galbraith," scores another triumph in the latest of that company's productions, "Shore Acres." Although practically a newcomer in the field of motion picture acting, Mr. Hatch has enjoyed a very prominent position in the field of theatricals for some years past. The most prominent of his successes on the stage was the role of "Captain Williams" in "Paid In Full," which part he created and played successfully on tour throughout the country for several seasons. Mr. Hatch has been particularly successful in his characterizations in motion picture work, his portrayals being exceedingly vivid.

Spacious Theater in Iowa City

On August 29 the Waterloo, Ia., Evening Courier and Reporter contained the following description of the new Plaza theater, now being erected in that city:

Now that the contract for erecting the new moving picture theater on Fourth street west has been awarded to H. A. Maine & Co., the work will be pushed through to completion with all possible speed and it is thought it will be ready for opening about November 1. The building alone will cost about $35,000 and besides that a large sum will be expended for inside equipment by James E. Bryant, the manager.

The building will be 60x125 feet and the auditorium will be 60x90, with a seating capacity of nine hundred, all on the main floor. There will be no galleries or balconies, but two elevated loges that will seat thirty-five persons will be located in convenient paces. The building will be devoted to the theater exclusively and it will be open on all four sides, giving assurance that there will be excellent ventilation and safety in case of fire.

There will be a modern ventilating system installed, heating will be by steam and no expense will be spared to make the theater comfortable, safe and attractive as possible. The seats are to be the very latest styles of opera chairs, upholstered, easy and luxurious. The front of the building will be constructed of terra cotta and tile, and the structure will be fireproof in every respect. The $5,000 organ that is being constructed in Chicago will be ready by the time the building is completed. Mr. Bryant promises the amusement loving public that nothing but the highest class of entertainment is to be provided in the new playhouse at all times.

Two trains, one of them an engine and three passenger coaches, and the other an engine and seven freight cars, both running at a rate of 35 miles an hour, collided, recently, as planned, on the Pittsburgh & Susquehanna railroad at Phillipsburg, Pa., and furnished the star attraction of the town's three day celebration, as well as the climax, a moving picture being filmed by the Lubin Film Company.

Betwen 6,000 and 7,000 spectators witnessed the novel sight, and there were 600 automobiles lined up outside the roped-off collision grounds. Considerable delay was caused by the difficulty in getting the engines both speeded so that they would meet at the desired point, and it was 5 o'clock before both engines were started for the last time. The crash came at the point designated, and the engines met in a mighty roar, reared in the air and then for a minute escaping steam eneveloped the wreck. Both engines were a tangle of twisted iron and splintered wood.

One passenger coach was squeezed up like a closed accordion, the car seats being thrown to the east side of the track. Part of the frame of the car had crawled over the passenger engine. Three of the freight cars were also badly wrecked. Camera men of the Lubin Company, which staged and directed the collision as the climax of a railroad drama, say the conditions were ideal for obtaining a perfect film.

Centaur's War Correspondent

Harry Palmer, the well known cartoonist and war correspondent, sailed for Europe early last week in the interests of David Horsley and the Centaur Film Company of Bayonne, New Jersey.

It was his intention to get on the firing line with one of the regiments engaged and then to make a series of sketches of the actual combat. These sketches are to be arranged in consecutive order and will be photographed so as to make split reel and full reel subjects.

The first subject, if all plans carry, should reach the Centaur studios the latter part of September. The "Siege of Liege" will be the first of the series. Sketches of the scenes and mighty forts concerned in this frightful conflict were completed from photographs before Mr. Palmer left America. Some of the actual battles will be sketched from reports made by eye witnesses, and of the battle grounds with their abandoned machinery of war, heaps of dead soldiers and horses, etc., exactly as they now appear.

Immediately after the Liege pictures have been completed Mr. Palmer will endeavor to make his way to the scene of whatever big military engagement may then be in progress and will—as long as he is fortunate enough to dodge promiscuous bullets—continue this line of action. In this manner, Mr. Palmer will keep abreast of the advancement of the war, and the Centaur Film Company, barring the miscarriage of any of the consignments of the sketches, will issue the series in proper order, as rapidly as they can be filmed and released.

Mr. Palmer, who is known to newspaper readers everywhere, is one of the most distinguished war correspondents in the world. During the Boxer uprising in China he represented a syndicate of American papers and his bravery and daring made him the most successful war correspondent at the front. As a result Mr. Palmer's services were very much in demand at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, and he gave up his cartoon work to represent a New York syndicate of magazines in Cuba. In that memorable campaign Mr. Palmer was constantly on the firing line, and the remarkable resourcefulness he exercised in "getting his stuff home" will stand him in great stead in the difficulties which now confront him.

"Richelieu" a Regular Release

What the Universal Company considers a gift of $50,000 to the exhibitors was made possible when President Laemmle decided to use the four part subject "Richelieu" as a 101 Bison regular program release instead of charging the extra rental to be gained by marketing it as a special feature. The action was taken to help the exhibitors boom fall business.

Exciting Chase in Wharton Production

Another Eclectic Feature

TO WHARTON, INC., belongs the credit of producing the big five-reel feature now being released by the Eclectic Film Company, "The Pawn of Fortune." The story is divided into two parts; the first tells of the trials and adventures of John Hadley, and the second of his daughter's life; her learning that J. Harvey Hall, whom she has always thought to be her father, is really the leader of a band of thieves, and her final restoration to her real parents.

A connecting link exists between these two threads in Mr. Hall, who was responsible for Hadley's disappearance from home and is unconsciously responsible for the return of his daughter, Janet, to him. One is a little mystified at first as to the identity and connection of the tribe of savages into whose power Hadley falls, as they resemble cave dwellers more than the American Indian. This, however, is later explained by a sub-title which is shown when he manages to make his escape.

A chase, beginning in autos and relaying to elevated trains, street cars, and cabs, finally ending in a foot-race is not usually an interesting sight but the one in this picture is an exception. The chase is a vital part of the story and is a long one as the variety of conveyances used suggests, but it does not become tedious to watch because of the busy New York street scenes which it introduces.

The photography throughout the picture is beautiful. The stills cannot be taken as proof of this because they are only enlargements from the film and not real photographs, consequently lose much in detail and clearness that the original picture possesses. Some of the scenes were photographed from a river boat and follow the action on the side of the cliffs clear to the water's edge, but the photography is just as smooth and even in these as in any of the interior scenes.

The time covered by the story, necessitating two distinct threads of action, divides the honors of the leading part among three or four people, but this strengthens it, as their co-operation is perfect and their work, individually, up to the highest standard.

John Hadley is considered a genius in anything pertaining to machinery. He is liked and respected by his employer until one day he chastises that person's son for insulting one of the factory girls. Continued misfortune seems to be the reward for this piece of gallantry for he is discharged and is unable to get work because of the spiteful advices received by other firms to whom he applies for a position.

Janet explains her invention to "Handsome Harry."

Reduced to poverty and discouraged, Hadley jumps off of a pier with the intention of committing suicide. It happens that just at that time a boat glides from under the pier and it is in it that Hadley lands instead of in the water. The occupants are a part of a gang of thieves. They take their new captive to headquarters which is a fashionable yacht anchored out in the bay over which the leader, J. Harvey Hall, presides. To prevent his "peaching" Hadley is taken out some distance and set adrift in a rowboat. He lands on a strange island and is taken prisoner by its savage inhabitants. He manages to escape and returns home.

In the meantime Mrs. Hadley has lost their little baby, Janet. How or where she does not know, except that while wandering in the street one day she falls of exhaustion. When she recovers consciousness she is in a hospital and her baby has disappeared and the doctors claim that it was not with her when she was found. Hadley is grief-stricken when he hears the story.

Meanwhile, J. Harvey Hall's attention is drawn to a little white bundle lying before his dog, Bruce, the animal having found the baby lying beside a prostrated woman and carried it home. Hall adopts the child and raises it as his own daughter. She has always shown a deep interest in intricate mechanism and when only eighteen years of age invents an appliance which enables her to work out the combination of any safe. One night she displays her skill before "Handsome Harry," Hall's lieutenant, and safe expert, and it makes a deep impression on him. He proposes that she be made a member of the band but Hall will not hear of it.

Much against his will, a few nights later, Hall is forced to put Janet's knowledge to criminal use. Access has been gained to a broker's office and the prospects for a big "haul" are good when "Handsome Harry" pretends to have burned his fingers which are filed to the quick and claims that he cannot work out the safe's combination. Janet is sent for on the ruse that her opening the safe will decide a wager made by her father.

The police have been "tipped off" and raid the office. Janet escapes but Hall is killed. She is almost heart-broken when she realizes what his real occupation was. In sympathy the maid tells her of the relation between her and Hall. Fearing that she might be followed by the police Janet leaves her home and obtains a position as governess of the adopted child of Mr. and Mrs. Hadley.

Detective Dagget, who was present at the raid, takes up the case of tracing the missing Hadley girl. He follows the clues given him and, learning the story of Hall's adopted girl, decides that she is Hadley's daughter. He passes her on the street but is too late in turning for she has recognized him as one of the raiding squad and started off at a run. He follows and a long chase ensues ending by Janet's arrival at the Hadley home. Her belief of his mission changes when Daggett enters the room accompanied by her employers and announces her as their daughter. Her happiness at being restored to her parents is shadowed somewhat by the knowledge that this man is aware of her part in the attempted robbery, until he assures her that he knew she was innocent of criminal intention all the time.

ONE'S first impression of "Black Roderick" is that it is an adaptation from one of Sir Walter Scott's poems, but it is not, though it embraces characters similar to those that Scott made immortal in his "The Lady of the Lake."

The story is of an incessant poacher, Black Roderick, who shoots a man and lays the blame on another. The truth is found out and the black-bearded scoundrel chased up into the hills, where he is finally captured after a desperate battle.

The film is two reels in length and was made by the Big Ben Company of England and is being distributed by the Eclectic Film Company. The photography is wonderfully clear and, by its splendid views of the valleys, lakes, and mountains, enhances the picture greatly and makes its background a fitting one for a Scotch story.

Lord Sterling one day meets the daughter of one of his tenants and makes love to her. Cameron, her father, is a favorite of the young lord's and often accompanies him on his fishing and hunting trips. When the old man learns of Lord Sterling's conduct he reproaches him, and threatens his life should he ever attempt to meet his daughter again.

This threat is heard by Black Roderick, a known poacher who, somehow, has always managed to escape being caught with the spoils of his depredations. Roaming through the woods one day Cameron hears a shot and later comes upon Lord Sterling sitting idly upon a fallen tree trunk. Cameron mentions having heard a shot but the young lord states that he has neither fired his gun nor heard anyone else shoot.

Out in the open Cameron comes upon Black Roderick bent over the carcass of a deer. The poacher shoots him, leaves him for dead, and hurries to the settlement with the news that Lord Sterling has shot Cameron to revenge his rebuke. At the trial the young lord is openly accused of the crime by Black Roderick who claims that he witnessed the shooting.

In the meantime Cameron recovers from his wound and is admitted at the trial shortly after Roderick accuses Lord Sterling. The sight of the man whom he has thought dead is enough for Roderick and he flees from the room knowing that his fate is sealed as soon as Cameron takes the stand.

He is pursued by the soldiers, captured after a hard fight, and led back to pay the penalty of his treachery.

Lubin Engages Rose Coghlan

Rose Coghlan has signed a contract with the Lubin Manufacturing Company to play the leading role in "The Sporting Duchess," which that firm willl produce as a moving picture. The direction of the melodrama has been assigned to Barry O'Neil, who will select a cast from the pick of the studio companies. Some years ago "The Sporting Duchess" was brought direct from the Drury Lane theater, London, and had a phenomenal run in New York and other big cities, Miss Coghlan being the star. The production will be made without regard to expense and promises to surpass the original stage version.

Sans Grease Paint and Wig

By Mabel Condon

Wally Van.

WALLY VAN was tightening his four-in-hand tie and making the usual variety of faces that men make when fussing with their tie. He was in his shirt-sleeves, his blonde hair lay back damp and smooth from his round forehead, his China-blue eyes, also round, glowed pleasantly, because it is their nature to do so, and his skin contributed color, likewise a glow, to the general happy appearance of Wally Van.

"Hello," he said, taking in the last sixteenth of an inch that the tie could possibly afford. As you've noticed, no doubt, Wally is the kind that likes his collars and ties tight.

"Oh, hello," Kate Price and I answered, as we turned from the window that looks out over the Vitagraph yard and surveyed Wally's conspicuous neatness.

"What did you do—fall in?" Kate hazarded. I was giving Wally mental credit for a voluntary bath but Kate was a better guesser, after all.

"Didn't fall in, but I might as well have," returned Wally inserting a cameo pin in the tie and getting it straight the first time. "The motor-boat splashed so that I got as wet as though I had jumped in. You see," he added, leaning against the window-ledge and returning a nod from Flora Finch, as Flora hurried toward the women's dressing-rooms across the yard, "our boat could only make thirty miles an hour, so we all got wet."

"That's where Mary Charleson got a soaking, then," put in Kate Price. "I hope she won't take cold," she worried, making a fan out of her handkerchief and flapping it in front of her face.

"Mary had to jump off the big boat and land in the motor boat," explained Wally.

"And did she land—in the boat, I mean?" asked Kate, holding the handkerchief limp in the anxiety of the moment.

"Oh, yes, no trouble about that," Wally's tone carried assurance. "It was only a ten-foot jump. We were eloping," he further explained. And Kate resumed her handkerchief-protest against the heat with the remark, "Well, I'm glad she landed." Kate is Mary Charleson's cousin and she "kind of feels responsible for her welfare," so she says.

"Come up and see our room," invited Wally. "Kate's seen it, but she won't mind seeing it again."

"Don't mind if I do," accepted Kate, so we started up the stairs and to the room that has a wide view of the studio and the yard. A huge pair of khaki trousers, hanging on the back of the door, flapped us a greeting as we entered.

"Bunny's," offered Wally, in explanation of the size. Kate picked out the biggest chair—also Bunny's judging from the size—and faced the window and a pair of blue silk hose swinging from the top of the sash-curtain. This time Wally offered no explanation as to ownership, so you are privileged to think as I do regarding them.

"We're proud of our room," said Wally, sitting down beside the window. "We never allow it to get mussed up."

"Never," agreed Kate, championing the sentiment. "But," she added, "it's a trait of his nationality."

"My people are from Holland," said Wally. "But they were among the first to settle in this country; they chose New York, so I was born there. Van Nostrand is my real name and that tells you exactly how Holland-Dutch my people were. But they liked America and I was sent to American schools and colleges. I was graduated a scientific engineer in the School of Sciences, New York, had five years' experience with the Westinghouse Company, building motors. And that really was how I happened to get into pictures."

Kate Price looked incredulous, without bothering to stop fanning, and Wally proceeded to explain his statement.

"Yes, it was because I happened to know all about motors. I became engineer-in-chief for the Baby Reliance boats that Commodore J. Stuart Blackton helped make famous. An extra man was needed in a picture one day and Mr. Blackton sent for me. I left the motor I was fussing with and came. He said, 'You're needed in a picture,' so I went in. It was my first experience in any but amateur plays and after being sent for hurriedly on a few other occasions, I began to spend more of my time at the studio and less in the interest of scientific engineering. But I still am engineer-in-chief of Mr. Blackton's boats, and nothing pleases me more than to put on a picture in which motor boats are used.

"Mr. Blackton's new boat will make sixty miles an hour. It will go so fast that we'll just skim the top of the water and there will be no splash. With that thirty-mile an hour boat today we all got wet because it didn't go faster."

"And accidents?" I asked.

"One big one," answered Wally. "Both Mr. Blackton and I were thrown overboard and a private yacht came to our rescue. Mr. Blackton got safely aboard," he said, as though in conclusion. But Kate Price and I sat at attention, so he added, "The weight of the water was taking some of my clothing with it, so I had to stay down in the water and hang onto the rope ladder with one hand and dress with the other. But that's the only accident we've had. Sounds like something that might have happened in a picture, doesn't it?"

We agreed with him and Kate said that she knew of a like incident in a picture, for she was in the picture. It was an accidental incident, though, so it won't get as far as the screen.

"Do you dislike the name 'Cutey' so terribly?" I wanted to know, and Wally replied:

"Why, no, not terribly. It was as 'Cutey' that the public first knew me, and as 'Cutey' I got their interest. The name has meant 'me' ever since. 'Cutey and the Twins' was the first picture I worked in, and that was just two years ago. That began a series of 'Cutey' pictures. Nine months ago I began to direct pictures and that is what interests me most right now."

"In fact," said Kate from the Bunny-size chair, "there isn't anything he doesn't do."

"One or two—I hope," Wally requested.

"Don't you play the violin beautifully?" Kate countered.

"I play the violin," Wally admitted. "I studied it for several years."

"And sing and dance?" Kate challenged him.

"Yes," Wally modestly confessed, feigning not to see the one traitor hose that deserted its mooring on the top of the sash-curtain and fluttered to the floor.

"And do female impersonations so well that were it not for your collar mark you'd never know the difference?" Not pausing for an answer, she demanded: "Where's that new photograph?"

"Here," replied Wally, "as the 'Widow of Redbank.'"

"Well, then," triumphed Kate.

Three Dramatic Subjects by Edison

Variety of Themes

A THREE-reel drama entitled "The Long Way" is to be the regular Edison release on October 9. It can hardly be classed as a feature for it has not a feature "punch" but it will go a long way as a multiple reel drama.

The story is of a girl who marries for money only, her love being given to another man. When discovered in a clandestine meeting with him she explains that she is only imploring him to preserve her sister's honor. As a result of this selfish girl's lie her sister is obliged to marry the intruder, deliberately sacrificing her future and happiness to prevent trouble and possible bloodshed, should her sister's real motive in meeting the man become known.

An all star cast appears and they are ably supported by a number of other members of the stock company and many extras.

The honors of the lady lead of the production are divided between Miriam Nesbitt as the generous, serious-minded Rachel Leven, and Mabel Trunnelle as the younger sister, Eva, who is vain and selfish. Marc MacDermott's role of Captain John Charter affords him an excellent opportunity to portray the manly, dignified character which fits him so well. "Heavy" impersonations are Duncan McRae's forte and he is seen to good advantage as Henry Belhaven, the outsider who completes the quartette of leads.

The marriage of Eva and Astoy in Edison's "The Long Way."

The thoughtless sister flirts with her former lover.

Robert Conness does well as Eva's husband, Johnston Astry, and is just the type of man for such a part, but it is unfortunate that his role is vital in existence only and does not call for his appearance more than a few times.

Mary Imlay Taylor is the author of the scenario and Charles Brabin directed its production. A beautiful country villa was secured for the exterior scenes and the rest of the settings are correspondingly elaborate and appropriate. One of the scenes is of a camp in the Philippine Islands showing some transplanted tropical vegetation, a group of thatched huts, and a company of uniformed Filipinos. Cut-backs to it are used effectively. The photography contributes its share of excellence by being clear and restful.

Eva Leven is courted by both Henry Belhaven and Johnston Astry while attending a house party at the Astry country home. Belhaven is really the one she loves but Astry is the wealthier of the two and her desire for a luxurious home easily overcomes any qualms she might have about marrying without love. After her marriage to Astry, Eva continues to meet Belhaven secretly. One night Astry surprises his wife and his guest in earnest conversation in a secluded spot.

In explanation Eva says that she was only imploring Belhaven not to desert her sister and leave her in disgrace. Astry is only partly convinced by this, but takes the stand that if the imputation be true Belhaven must marry Rachel, Eva's sister, at once. If, however, this explanation be only a subterfuge, Astry threatens to kill the intruder.

Rachel's lover, Captain John Charter, has been called away to take a command in the Philippine Islands, and consequently she feels lonely. To add to this she overhears some women talking of his proposed marriage to some other woman. Ordinarily she wouldn't listen to this empty gossip, but, being moody, she credits it with being the truth.

Rachel gives up all that is dear to her for her sister's sake.

Eva tells her sister of the position in which she has placed her and begs her to marry Belhaven. Rachel agrees on the condition that the marriage shall be one in name only. While away Charter is stricken with cholera, recovers, and is granted a furlough to return home. He meets Rachel and is stunned to learn of her marriage.

Eva sends for him and informs him of Rachel's reason for marrying Belhaven. Angered by the injustice of it all, Charter calls on Belhaven and tells him his opinion of his conduct. In answer to the man's question as to what he should do, Charter states that a real man would release her. Belhaven has fallen in love with Rachel since their marriage but is not loved in return. It is chiefly because of this that he seeks to divorce her, but the conscientious girl will not have it, claiming that it is in variance to their marriage vows.

But one way is now open to Belhaven if he would make Rachel's life happy, and he exhibits his first sign of true manliness by accepting it. A few days later his body is found in the river. Nothing now prevents the marriage of Rachel and Charter, and Eva's secret has been preserved.

A scene from Edison's "The Poisoned Bit."

THE theme of "A Transplanted Prairie Flower" is one that is often attributed to city life, in drawing comparisons and seldom found to be true. The fact, however, that it is even sometimes found to be true is sufficient justification for this Edison picture which will be released on October 3.

The "transplanted flower" is a Western girl who is summoned East by relatives. The rigid conventionalities of the East do not appeal to her and appear more of a sham than ever when she discovers that the well-groomed "social lion" is a modern "Raffles."

Gladys Hulette's work is always pleasing, if for nothing but her charming personality and vivaciousness which she shows in all of her roles. To her heart falls the part of the Western girl, Mary Arden, and her impersonation makes her universal popularity seem easily probable. Edward Earle enacts the "social lion," Robert Goodall and Harry Beaumont, Sallie Crute, and other popular Edisonites make up the remainder of the cast.

Mary Arden receives a letter from her aunt in the East informing her of the death of one of her relatives, to whose property she has fallen heir, and advising her to come East and live as befits one of her station. Mary immediately packs up and leaves greatly to the sorrow of her lover, Jim.

She is frigidly greeted by her cousin, Alice Wilson, but her aunt is more cordial and acquaints her with some of their friends. Mary's free and jovial manner soon make her popular with all except Alice, whose popularity wanes as her cousin's grows. Mrs. Wilson's favorite suitor for Alice's hand is Robert Goodall, a handsome young man skilled in the wearing of evening clothes, and in the appliance of burglar's tools, as later events prove.

A big social event, a masue ball, is given, and Mary prepares to attend, costumed as a western girl. At the last moment she is stricken with remorse because Jim is unable to attend also and decides not to go. Mrs. Wilson and Alice receive a note from Goodall stating that he is prevented from accompanying them but promising to see them at the ball.

Some time later Goodall enters the Wilson apartment by the way of the side window. Mary is startled at hearing a noise in the room below and, sneaking down, surprises Goodall in the act of rifling the safe. He attempts to resist and is shot in the hand. The noise attracts the police and shortly after their arrival the Wilsons enter and learn the true profession of their idol.

The next train to the West carries Mary back to her former home where she receives a greeting from Jim which she knows is not influenced by the size of her bank account.

EDWIN CLARKE plays the leading part in "The Poisoned Bit" and does it so well that he will undoubtedly be seen frequently in juvenile leads hereafter. He is exactly the type for whch the part calls. His work is sincere, and he does not overact or step out of his character even for a moment.

The story is carefully handled, and contains the true sportsmanlike atmosphere and magnetic charm for which race-track tales are noted. It will be released by Edison on October 2. Lucky coincidence is a bit too prominent in the plot, but one easily forgets this in the sympathy aroused by the condemning circumstantial evidence against the young jockey, and when it turns out that the outlawed rider is the son of Lord Blyncourt by whom he is employed as a stable hand, it fulfills the hope in the spectator's mind though the approach to the climax might have been made more complicated.

Tom is the drudge of a gypsy camp. In desperation he finally decides to rid himself of the routine of hardship and abuse, and runs away. One morning Colonel Standish and his daughter are surprised to find that their dog Prince has a guest on the front porch. On closer inspection they see that it is a white boy, poorly clothed, and that he is asleep. Hearing his story, the colonel hires him out of sympathy and installs him to assist Trainer Maloney at the racing stable.

One day Edith Standish, the colonel's daughter, enters the stable and is knocked down by a horse. In saving her from being trampled upon, Tom also is injured. Thereafter the young fellow becomes the family pet with all but Edith, who snubs him continually though she really loves him.

When Tom becomes a little older and more experienced, Colonel Standish makes him his jockey and he is entered in all the races. His skill and judgment soon make an invaluable mount to the colonel and when the day of the Derby arrives, Tom is announced as the rider on King Gallop, the colonel's favorite horse.

Trainer Maloney turns traitor to his employer and attempts to bribe Tom to "pull" the horse in the race, but without success. Determined that King Gallop shall not win, Maloney takes another course and decides to poison the horse's bit by pouring upon it a fluid that will not show its effect outwardly but will weaken the horse's powers of speed and endurance.

Colonel Standish stakes his entire fortune, or rather what is left of it, for he has suffered severe losses, on King Gallop to win and takes Tom into his confidence. Edith, also, begs the jockey to do his best. At the finish of the race King Gallop is found among the stragglers. His employer openly accuses Tom of treachery and takes the case before the turf commission. Maloney testifies that the horse was in perfect condition when it left the stables. As a result of the investigation Tom is ruled off of the track and disheartedly leaves for England, but finds that his reputation has preceded him.

The colonel and his two daughters visit Lord Blyncourt in England and while inspecting his stables discover Tom, who is employed there to break colts. The colonel hurries to his host with the information that the boy is crooked, and Tom is summoned to meet the accusation. The lord is struck by the resemblance between Tom and his boy Frank who disappeared a number of years before. Surprises now happen in quick succession. An article is found in one of the late papers in which Maloney confesses his share in King Gallop's failure at the Derby. Almost on top of this good news, Blyncourt's lawyer enters with the startling information that the queen of a band of gypsies located on the lord's estate has told him the whole story of Frank's abduction and identified the table-boy, Tom, as the lord's son. Blyncourt is overjoyed at the returne of his boy, Colonel Standish apologizes for his rash judgment, and Edith consents to be "Tom's" wife when the young man proposes to her.

California Head in Europe

Among the many American tourists who have suffered on account of the European war is Herbert Payne, executive head of the California Motion Picture Corporation, who left New York during the month of June for a motor tour of Europe.

For five weeks after war had been declared no word was received from him but finally he cabled that he was safe in Holland but that his car was far from so fortunate, as it had been taken from him and pressed into military service, despite his protestations of neutrality.

Mr. Payne and wife have arranged for passage to this country and will arrive next month. It had originally been planned to send Mr. Payne the initial positive print of "Salomy Jane" that he might give a private exhibit of the picture to social London, but this novel undertaking is now impossible.

The Importance of Good Posters

An Artistic Advertisement

THE poster question is receiving more and more attention from film manufacturers, and the standards today are considerably higher than they were even twelve months ago. It is not so long since every manufacturer was content to spend thousands of dollars upon the production of a fine feature, advertise it extensively in the trade papers and then when it came to posters, trust to film cuttings and an overworked or indifferent lithographer to visualize the production with show paper. A collection of such crude, inartistic posters would make a very fine pictorial chamber of horrors.

Gradually it has come to be recognized that if you want good paper you must pay for it, both in money and careful attention, and that in no one department of the publicity end of the business is the expenditure of that care and attention better repaid than in the production of strictly first class paper.

Unfortunately the attainment of a high standard in poster art is just as difficult as the attainment of a high standard in anything—perhaps even more so. In the first place, to get high class posters, the services of a first-class artist are absolutely essential and only those who have tried, realize how difficult it is to find an artist who has the "poster sense."

There are plenty of good illustrators in the United States—the different magazines all bear witness to that, but try out the best of them on posters and you will find a surprisingly small number who can make good poster sketches. One of the main reasons for this is the lack on the part of most artists of a proper conception of the colors required to make a sketch "carry." It does not lie in using brilliant, glaring colors—they will effectually kill the finest drawing, but rather in that expert treatment of tones, a touch of color here and another there, that make the sketch stand out and attract the attention without being harsh, crude or gaudy.

After you have found the few artists who can handle color effectively, your field will again be narrowed, for the second great essential in a good poster is action ably expressed. There are many artists who can make a first class portait but when it comes to interpreting that action which is the saving grace of a poster, they fall down, and hard, too.

The Pathe American Company was one of the very first to realize the need of having first class posters to advertise first class productions and a year and a half ago secured the services of an artist who, by reason of his great ability, stands at the very top of his profession. At first the prices he asked for his sketches seemed out of all reason, but he was tried out and at once there was a marked difference in Pathe posters. As production of feature films increased, it became necessary to find other competent artists to keep up to the standard set by the new posters. To illustrate the difficulty of finding such men, it is only necessary to state that in less than three months thirty-nine artists were tried out and of that number, the work of only five was considered acceptable.

Inasmuch as it seems to be difficult for most artists to select the best poster situations from a film, it is usually necessary to show them the picture and then instruct them as to the different situations best adapted for the different size posters.

After the sketches have been accepted it is up to the lithographers to do them justice. The house of Pathe expects and requires that the sketches be followed faithfully in every detail. A fine sketch may be positively killed by poor lithography, and nothing is more exasperating than to see a costly sketch indifferently lithographed. No process treatment has yet reached the efficiency of stone work in bringing out the fine points in a sketch. There has been some good zinc printing done, but it rarely, if ever, equals the genuine lithograph. Take a well executed lithographed poster and compare it with the original sketch, line by line and color by color. The skill shown is astonishing and if the original sketch was a good one, the poster will be a real work of art.

In Europe good posters are more common than in the United States and considerably cheaper. For one thing, there are always plenty of good artists over there who are only too glad to do posters "on the side" and pick up what to them is "easy money." Their fee for this service is considerably less than that on this side of the water and the artistic value of the sketches averages higher. Then again the best European lithography, particularly the German, is wonderfully fine. It must be admitted, however, that there has been a rapid improvement in American lithography, and samples of the best American work will compare favorably with the best foreign product. The improvement in American show paper is a direct result of the growing knowledge on the part of the producers as to what constitutes good paper and the enforcement of their demands upon the lithographers for constantly better work.

To get the best in any line of merchandise, a sufficiently liberal price must be paid—that is axiomatic. It is folly for a film manufacturer to expect first quality paper at a price but little higher than he would pay for ordinary black and white printing. With each additional color in the poster comes additional cost, and, up to a certain point, additional beauty in the paper. Today four colors in a one-sheet and five in a three and six sheets are required by the larger manufacturers for their best feature paper. Eclectic has even gone further than this, and on some big features has had paper in six and even seven colors. Such posters, if done by a really good artist and well lithographed, show plainly the greater cost and are correspondingly more effective. It is probable that the time will come when such six-color paper will be the rule and not the exception.

In closing it is well to repeat what has already been said—that the importance of good paper to both manufacturer and the exhibitor can hardly be overestimated; to the manufacturer because both exhibitors and public are apt to judge a production by the quality of its paper and to condemn a fine production because of crudely sensational and cheaply made paper; to the exhibitor because fine paper induces curiosity and attention in the passing public; it brings the people inside and that is what posters are for. And finally, in order to get good paper the matter should not be left to the lithographer, but given the personal attention of the manufacturer; it is this latter personal attention that has caused so much favorable comment on the Pathe and Eclectic posters.

Booking "After the Ball"

Several issues ago Motography briefly reviewed the startling multiple-reel feature, "After the Ball," which was exhibited to feature buyers and representatives of the trade press. Since that time the Illinois rights on this picture have been secured by A. M. Gollos, president of the Photoplay Productions Releasing Company of Chicago, and the film is meeting with a big demand on the part of exhibitors.

It will be recalled that Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon, two celebrated stars of stageland, were specially engaged to enact the leading roles in this production, which is said to contain more sensational, death-defying thrills than any other feature film now on the market. The picture contains such incidents as a daring escape over a clothesline, four stories above the street; a slide from the top of a six-story building; a fall from a fire escape; a leap to the back of a runaway horse; a spectacular leap from High Bridge to the Harlem River, one hundred and thirty-six feet below; a jump to a train going at tremendous speed, with the man who made the leap pursued by a motorcycle cop, who pounds along over the railroad ties on his machine and ends by grasping the rail on the last car of the speeding train and swinging himself aboard.

Aside from the sensational element of the picture the work of Kelcey and Shannon with its pretty light comedy moments, heart-rending pathos and vivid dramatic bits, tends to make "After the Ball" a feature out of the ordinary. Bookings on this feature can be obtained from the Photoplay Productions Releasing Company, Powers building, Wabash avenue, Chicago.

Renfax Demonstrations

John Curren, Chicago manager of the Renfax Film Company, Inc., is giving daily demonstrations of the Renfax films at the Fulton exhibition room on Lake street, and expects within a week or ten days to open a Chicago office for the company he represents.

The Renfax Film Company, Inc., as Motography's readers already know, offers exhibitors a weekly program of four musical motion pictures, the Renfax pictures being a combination of an electric attachment synchronizing a phonographic reproduction of the voice and orchestration with a motion picture film.

The demonstration at Fulton's proves the simplicity of the operation of the Renfax equipment and the synchronization of the pronograph with the film, and Mr. Curren expects, as soon as his permanent office is established, to close numerous contracts with exhibitors for Renfax service.

At last a motion picture man is to have a chance to occupy public office. At the primaries on September 9, Robert R. Levy, the popular president of the Illinois State Branch of the International Motion Picture Association and president of the Revelry Theater Company was nominated on the Republican ticket for clerk of the criminal court by a plurality of over 10,000. Mr. Levy lays his success largely to the splendid co-operation of his fellow exhibitors who displayed his slides in more than four hundred of the largest and best theaters in the city of Chicago, the slides going on the screens of many theaters which under ordinary conditions never use slides of any sort. Certainly his selection at the primaries looks like a wonderful demonstration of the power of the picture screen, and proves conclusively that if they will only pull together and work in harmony the exhibitors of the country can get anything they go after. Much credit is due Messrs. Fred Hartman, William J. Sweeney, and Samuel Katz, who looked after Mr. Levy's interests early and late during the campaign, and also to the managers of many of the film exchanges and prominent exhibitors of the association who ably assisted in furthering Mr. Levy's candidacy. The office to which Mr. Levy aspires is an important one, as in the clerk's office are kept all the records of Cook county's criminal courts, and more than one hundred employees will be under the supervision of the clerk. It pays a salary of $10,000 per year and so in every way is decidedly worth while. Mr. Levy was pleased, also, over being named as a committeeman from the third ward, in which he resides, there being no contest over his selection, which demonstrates clearly his standing in the community and the confidence placed in him by his friends and neighbors. This is the first real opportunity the motion picture interests have had to demonstrate their power and now that Mr. Levy's nomination has been secured every loyal exhibitor, exchangeman and manufacturer should put his shoulder to the wheel and see that the great industry, of which they are a part, is given an opportunity of being represented in the city government.

Claud Erby, well known throughout middle west picture circles, left Chicago last Saturday to take charge of George Kleine's Dallas office. He succeeds W. G. Todd, resigned.

Grace Cunard has won another popularity competition, this time in the Moving Picture Stories which follows close on the heels of her success in a Cleveland paper and she is naturally very delighted. The first she heard of her Cleveland success was in a letter from England.

Irene Hunt, the attractive Reliance-Mutual star, had her hands severely blistered while playing the role of the sob sister in the newspaper story, "For the Last Edition," produced by Fred A. Kelsey, at the Reliance studios.

With the avowed purpose in mind of giving young King Baggot, Jr., every opportunity of developing a sturdy physique and constitution, the Baggot family has moved to Brighton Beach with headquarters at the Shelbourne Hotel. Here the little family will remain for some time with Father King faithfully making the long tramp to the Imp studio every night and morning.

Master Harold Richardson, the young son of Jack Richardson of the American Film Manufacturing Company, says that later on he will follow in the footsteps of dad, but says he would rather be a "lead," as if he undertook the part of "heavy" his father would lose prestige.

Clear grit to the backbone is required of every member of Wilfred Lucas' Gold Seal Company in the production of Louis Joseph Vance's "Trey O' Hearts" series. With the author and his imagination on the ground and with director Lucas lying awake nights thinking up new and unheard-of "stunts" for the cast to perform, no one but a seasoned picture actor would be equal to the task.

The first play to be directed and played in by Ben Wilson, recent acquisition of the Imp Company, is the "Great Hotel Mystery," a detective play in two reels. Mr. Wilson has already acquired considerable fame in detective roles, having created "Cleek" of the "Cleek Detective Series" produced by the Edison Company.

George Kleine's latest success, "Vendetta," from the novel by Marie Corelli, threatens to become a second "Quo Vadis?," if the demand for the subject continues to be as heavy during the next two months as it has during the past week. General Film offices everywhere report a big demand and steady bookings.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Lang Cobb, Jr., recently motored into the Berkshires for a few days vacation.

S. Dembrow, Jr., has returned from a short stay at Syracuse, N. Y., where he equipped a new exchange for the Box Office Attractions Company.

William Sadler has left the Edison company and hopes his next film affiliation will offer nothing but comedy roles. Meanwhile, Sadler says he can always get "two bits" from his mother —Josie Sadler—so until such necessity arises, "watchful waiting" finds him in his characteristic happy frame of mind.

Pauline Bush has been playing in two photoplays written by members of the company. "Her Escape" by Lon Chaney is one, and the other by Tom Forman, "The Measure of a Man," a Canadian Northwest play.

Edward Coxen, leading man for Thomas Ricketts' "Flying A" company, when questioned recently about his buying an automobile, remarked that one good horse is worthy of a dozen autos. Edward is one of the best horsemen at the studio and his remark is quite apropos.

Victor Potel, "Slippery Slim of Snakeville" fame, added to his popularity last week when he campaigned in behalf of the constable of Niles, Cal., who is now assured the office.

Leon Victor, formerly Cohan & Harris, is making several innovations in his new theater, Keith's, New York City, where he has installed a surprise night on Thursday and vaudeville concerts on Sunday.

Al E. Christie, the Nestor comedy director, had a special Pullman car built for his two reeler "All Aboard," which shows how much really can happen in a Pullman car.

All Kleine offices are now booking "The Naked Truth," the five-part subject made from the sensational French novel, "La Femme Nue" by Henry Batille. This was the Kleine success which opened the doors of the New Candler Theater, New York. The picture features the famous European actress, Mlle. Lyda Borelli.

Marc Edmund Jones and F. A. Wall, scenario editor, made the trip through the tunnel to the north portal this week to write a two reel play around the present Gibraltar dam operations. To Santa Barbara such a picture will have a high educational value, as many persons can thus become more familiar with the great project.

Ralph Ince, Vitagraph director, Lucille Lee (Mrs. Ince) and Albert Roccardi, Vitagraph player, have formed a fishing club called "The Vitagraph Trio Fishing Association," and may be seen early any morning, cruising the waters of Great South Bay, N. Y., in quest of members of the finny tribe.

Stella Razeto is appearing in a one reel department store drama entitled "Her Sister." The property man has been busy for some time getting together the "goods" for the interiors of the department store.

Margaret Joslin, who in private life is Mrs. Harry Todd, is the magnet for members of the western Essanay company whose favorite breakfast dish is waffles. They all declare she is "some cook."

Edna Maison of Universal is being featured in an Italian story "The Padrone's Ward." Lloyd Ingraham, her director, takes a strong character part and Joe King, Bert Hadley and Francis Macdonald all play prominent roles.

Charles Ray of the New York Motion Picture Corporation is taking the lead in the photoplay "Not of the Flock" being produced by Scott Sydney, and Enid Markey is playing opposite him.

Sydney Ayres' American company is working on a two reel subject which will be called "Galahad of Twilight." Miss Vivian Rich is a little French-Canadian girl who, though married to the man who is the choice of her father, meets later on her "Galahad" with true fidelity clings to her husband.

Exhausted from the tremendous work of producing three such great photoplays as "The Littlest Rebel," "Northern Lights" and "Captain Swift," all in a very short period, Edgar Lewis suffered a severe nervous breakdown despite his rugged physique and is now recuperating rapidly after a thorough rest in the Berkshire Hills. He will return to New York next week.

John J. Coleman, late studio manager and director for the Gene Gauntier Feature Players, attended a meeting of the Supreme Council of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite Masons, in Chicago last week. Mr. Coleman is one of the three theatrical men in the world who has ever attained the high honor of the thirty-third degree in Masonry. Having resigned his position as studio manager and director for the Gene Gauntier Feature Players, Mr. Coleman will devote all of his time to looking after his chain of theaters throughout the South, pending an offer to reenter filmland as a director.

Grace Cunard says that she thinks she gave the best performance of her career in "The Phantom Violin" and Francis Ford certainly made the crazy violinist a weird character.

James Corbett recently paid a visit to the Worlds Film Corporation's studio to see the picture version of "The Burglar and the Lady," in which he played the stellar role under Herbert Blache's direction. Gentleman Jim is about to open his vaudeville season in the West and has signed contracts which call for his presence in Australia early in February.

Edwin, August and Bennie Zeidman of the newly formed Eaco Films recently discovered, a so-called "school of acting" on Broadway, New York, and while investigating it the "professor" offered to teach Mr. August, who is the leading man of the organization, the fine points of the silent drama, and, showing him a picture of himself on the wall, told him he bore a strong resemblance to an actor named Mr. August and that he would undoubtedly photograph excellently. The case was turned over to the authorities.

For nearly five months the beautiful sea phantasy, "Neptune's Daughter," has exhibited the varied graces of Annette Kellerman on the Fine Arts screen in Chicago, and there is every indication that it will continue during the entire fall.

Fred Thompson, who was with the Vitagraph Company a short time ago is with the same company again. He returned to the fold Monday, August 31, took up his work where he left off, and in less time than it takes to tell it, it seemed as though he had never been away.

ROLL OF STATES.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The West End Amusement Company, of which Fegley Brothers are the proprietors, who are erecting a motion picture theater at 1335-37 Chew street, Allentown, have the building under roof and expect to open it to the public in a very short time. The building is fire proof throughout, with the latest approved heating and ventilating system and is modern in every respect.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The Majestic and Lion, moving picture theaters of Charleston, both renewed their licenses on Saturday.

A modern moving picture theater is to be fitted up in the Bethea building, 1428 Main street, Columbia, recently vacated by the Lion Furniture Company.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Work on the Lyric building is progressing nicely. When completed Ellendale will have one of the best picture shows in the state.

TENNESSEE.

The Belmont theater, one of the prettiest little suburban motion picture theaters in the South, opened at the corner of Sixteenth and Grand avenue, Nashville, Monday night.

The contract for the construction of a motion picture theater on Chelsea avenue, near Sixth street, Memphis, by the American Photoplay Theater Company has been let. The house will cost approximately $35,000.

The building formerly occupied by Skalowski, at 217 Fifth avenue, north, Nashville, is being remodeled for the installation of a new motion picture theater by the Crescent Amusement Company. The new theater will have all modern fixtures and appliances and will be remodeled at a cost of $20,000.

TEXAS.

Distinctly unique in the realm of filmdom is the Fort Worth-made film just completed, entitled, "Does It Pay to Advertise," as the entire story hinges on newspaper advertising.

The two-story building on Alamo plaza, San Antonio, now occupied by the Frank Brothers clothing firm, has been leased for a period of 15 years by Fort Worth business men and will be converted into a motion picture theater.

By a deal just consummated the moving picture theater at San Benito was purchased from G. W. Becker by Drs. Seiser and Vinsant of Galveston.

WASHINGTON.

Seattle now has a branch office of Sawyer, Inc., who are trying out the scheme of booking direct, instead of disposing of the state rights for pictures. The office opened for business August 24, and takes care of Washington, Oregon and Idaho.

Because of their competition with the churches, moving picture theaters of Tacoma will have to remain closed on Sundays until 1 p. m. in the future.

The new Centralia theater in Centralia has been formally opened. It has a seating capacity of 582 and is trimmed throughout in old ivory. The theater is owned by S. H. Bloomer and managed by J. C. Schumacher of Seattle.

Eugene Levy closed a deal whereby the Melbourne theater at Second avenue and University street, Seattle, passed from his management and control to J. S. Shortley, a photoplay theater man who recently arrived from Sioux City, Ia. Mr. Shortley has purchased all of the Levy interests in the property and assumed personal management. The Melbourne theater is one of the oldest established houses in Seattle devoted to the photodrama.

Announcement has been made recently that the Moore Amusement Company, which has just filed articles of incorporation, will take over the new C street theater in Tacoma, and that the house will be opened in about six weeks as a high class moving picture theater.

The new picture theater being erected in Spokane is to be known as the Clemmer, according to announcement made recently by Dr. H. S. Clemmer, who has taken a ten-year lease on the building.

WISCONSIN.

The contract for the new moving picture house to be erected on Broadway, Racine, was let to the Farrell Building Company recently and work will be started on the foundation in the near future.

A moving picture outfit, the latest, most approved machine, equipped with a double dissolving stereopticon, has been added to the entertainment facilities at the Auditorium in Milwaukee.

The Princess theater on Wisconsin street, Kenosha, recently leased to T. H. Blaise and Charles Weeks of Chicago, reopened to the public on August 22.

The Waukesha Auditorium, built and managed by the Frellson Amusement Co., of which Gustav Frellson and George B. Frellson are officers, is nearly completed. Its cost is said to be $30,000.

The People's theater of Superior has been taken over by the People's Theater Company, a corporation, composed of Superior business men.

E. C. Peto of Chicago has been appointed manager of the Gem theater in Beloit.

The Dixie theater in Beloit, under the management of Frank McCarthy for some time, has been sold to Charles M. Spray of Indiana and E. J. Van Patten of Rockford.

A picture theater is being built on Third street and North avenue, Milwaukee, to seat about 562. It will cost about $8,000.

H. H. Hile has plans prepared for the erection of a new opera house for motion pictures on his lot west of the Central House, Janesville. The building will be 40x80.

Plans for a $20,000 moving picture theater at Thirty-fifth street and North avenue, Milwaukee, are being prepared. The building will seat 900.

WYOMING.

Carl Ray, a theater magnate of Los Angeles, Calif., is contemplating erecting a motion picture theater in Cheyenne. Mr. Ray has a Sixteenth street location under advisement.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors. Synopses of current films are not printed in MOTOGRAPHY as they may be obtained of the manufacturers.

The Perils of Pauline

When newspapers want to whoop up their circulation they engage some famous writer that everybody knows and likes—but they have to pay him a high salary. You can do the same for your moving picture theatre without the high salary. Pauline is known and liked by everybody—she's whooped up many a photoplay attendance. Today she is enjoying her greatest popularity. Book her now.

Pauline always pays because her perils are always real. She pays both ways.

A Prince of India

A modern American Arabian Night's tale in four parts with scenes laid in the United States. Made by the Whartons. Absorbing yet plausible adventure wound into a pulsing story of Indian Rajahs, American crooks, a cub newspaper reporter, and an heirloom of enormous value. Every scene in this great adventure story begins and ends unexpectedly and registers a punch. Among the thrills are a trolley car run wild which plunges off a high trestle into a deep ravine below. A tense film throughout and a big attraction for street display. 1—3—6 sheet posters.

In Soak

A Hartigan American Comedy in 1 reel. Very funny complications arising from a woman's attempt to deceive her husband. Her husband is so fully deceived that she is sorry she ever tried. Real laughable humor.

Max Has the Boxing Fever and Picturesque Lake Dhal

(British India)

Max Linder again gets the laugh on the first half of this reel, followed by natural color scenic views of picturesque Lake Dhal in British India—perfect photography.

Heiress Finds a Worthy Lover

Other Essanay Pictures

"THE REAL AGATHA," the two-part release of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company on Friday, October 9, presents a charming little romance with a living background of pretty girls. It is an adaptation from a novel of the same title by Edith Huntington Mason and features Ruth Stonehouse and Richard C. Travers, the latter also being the director of the production.

The plot is filled with quiet humor and its charm lies in its subtle appeal. The exteriors are chosen with care and are artistically photographed and the interior sets are well arranged. Although the outcome of the story is a little obvious it is satisfying and is sure to please any audience. It is a film worthy of a place on every exhibitor's program.

The story opens with a trip to the country, taken by young Lord Vincent, who is known to his friends as Freddie, and several companions, among whom is Archibald Terhune. While driving along a country road their automobile becomes disabled and while the chauffeur is repairing it Freddie and Terhune stroll away from the road toward some golf links. The automobile is put in shape by the driver, and the other members of the party drive off without Freddie and Terhune, deserting them as a practical joke.

The two men stroll across the fields and stop at a castle to inquire the location of the next town, and, much to their surprise, are taken in and treated royally. There are six girls at the supper table that evening, together with a chaperon and her secretary, Miss Marsh. After the meal the secretary explains to the two men that it is the home of the Lady Agatha and that every suitor for her hand is allowed to remain four weeks. She also explains that in order to protect the real Agatha each of the six girls pose as the heiress and that the man who marries her must do so for love and not for her money.

Freddie falls in love with the secretary, "The Real Agatha."

While Freddie and Terhune do not exactly like the idea they decide to stay and enjoy the adventure. Soon, however, each finds that he would not consider leaving, as Freddie falls in love with the secretary and Terhune decides that Lady Agatha's fortune would support him nicely for the remainder of his life.

Archibald is puzzled as to which of the girls is the real Agatha.

Terhune's efforts to pick the real Agatha from among the six girls are very amusing and, although the other girls admire him, Freddie continues his attentions to Miss Marsh. The last day of their four-weeks' stay arrives and Terhune is still undecided as to his choice. When he finds Freddie making love to the secretary he rebukes him, as Miss Marsh has told the fortune seeker that she is a married woman in order to rid herself of his attentions. Freddie, however, proposes to Miss Marsh and to his and Terhune's surprise learns that she is the real Agatha.

The cast is as follows:

Lord Vincent, known as Freddie.....Richard C. Travers
Archibald Terhune, his older companion....Oscar G. Briggs
Miss Marsh .....Ruth Stonehouse
Miss Armistead, chaperon and protector....Helen Dunbar

FILLED with slap-stick action that is typical of the "Sweedie" series the Essanay release of Monday, October 5, entitled "The Fickleness of Sweedie," is certain to produce laughs in the average house. Much footage is given to drills and adventures of the police. Wallace Beery, Leo White, Robert Bolder and Ben Turpin are the chief fun-makers.

Sweedie has a fat and a slim lover and the rivals enjoy mussing each other up. One day the slim lover sees Sweedie reading a letter and, believing it to be from his rival, hides in a mattress to watch. The fat lover comes to see Sweedie and the mattress starts to perform tricks. The police are called and a chase of the mattress follows, which leads to the police station. Here the slim lover is removed from the mattress and the three are arrested. When Sweedies tells her slim lover that the letter was only a notice that her rent is due they are reconciled and, after a rough and tumble fight with the police, make their escape with their arms around each other.

WITH every scene enclosed in a wreath of flowers and with acting that is very appealing in its human interest, the two-part picture to be released by the Essanay Company on October 6 entitled "The Verdict" is a most unconventional offering.

It was adapted from the Munsey Magazines and deals with the eternal triangle in a refreshing manner. Only three characters appear, the man, the girl, and the woman, and these are portrayed by Bryant Washburn, Beverly Bayne and Gerda Holmes.

The man meets and falls in love with the girl, who is much younger than himself, and breaks his engagement to the woman, who is his own age. He tells the girl she is the only one he ever loved but later she learns of the engagement of the man and the woman. The woman tells the girl to test the love of the man and the next time she meets him she does. The verdict is in favor of the man and the two are happy together.

MISS GERDA HOLMES gives a splendid humorous character portrayal as a cook in the latest George Ade comedy entitled "The Fable of the Family That Did Too Much for Nellie," which is booked for release by the Essanay Company on October 7.

The Todd family have an awful time getting a good cook, but after firing their thirteenth they secure Nellie, a real jewel. All goes well and to show their appreciation the Todd family fit Nellie out in a beautiful new frock, whereupon Nellie captures the butcher's heart and they are married. Again the Todd family are forced to eat poorly cooked food. The moral is: Give them books to read.

VICTOR POTEL and Margaret Joslin have the leads in the Essanay release of Thursday, October 8, entitled "When Slippery Slim Met the Champion."

A scene from Essanay's "Broncho Billy and the Greaser."

It is another of the Snakeville comedies and is a sure-fire laugh producer.

Snakeville is all excited as the world's champion has arrived in town and offers $100 to anyone who can stay three rounds with him. Slim is backed by his friends to try for the money. Sophie secures a ringside seat and, because she has a toothache, brings a bottle of chloroform with her. Slim is badly beaten during the first two rounds, but with the aid of Sophie's chloroform comes back in the last round and puts the champion out.

"BRONCHO BILLY AND THE GREASER," an exciting western picture, will be released by Essanay on October 10. It features G. M. Anderson and Marguerite Clayton, supported by Lee Willard, a character actor whose work shows great promise. A thrilling climax is worked up, the suspense of which will hold the most critical audience.

Broncho Billy, the mail carrier, chastises a half-breed who insults a girl in the post office. On his way home he helps a sick man and drops his mail bag. The girl finds it and brings it to Broncho Billy's cabin. The half-breed creeps to the cabin and is about to kill the carrier as he sleeps but the sick man stops him. The half-breed ties Broncho Billy and struggles with the sick man. The girl sees the danger of the two men and rides for help. She gets several cowboys and they reach the cabin just in time to save the men.

Essanay Foreign Sales Unaffected

Up to the present time the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company has done a record business in Europe despite the war. The shipping department of the company has been operating as usual and the average Essanay sales abroad compare favorably with the business done before the declaration of hostilities. Harry A. Spoor, manager of Essanay's European office, in a recent letter says: "Your promptness in shipping prints is one of the most remarkable incidents in connection with the present war. We have not been held up on a single film and are doing just as big a business as ever."

Thrills Vie With Laughs In Odd Film

Meritorious Selig Program

The hero tells his tale of bravery.

IN THE two-part release of the Selig Polyscope Company on October 5, entitled "The Moving Picture Cowboy," Tom Mix exhibits all the "57 varieties" of thrills known to the lovers of western pictures and incidentally introduces a few new "stunts" which have thus far been untried before the camera.

There is little or no story in the production, but the interest is well sustained. The first reel is one thrill after another, while the second part of the film is devoted to comedy action. The only fault to be found is the repetition of falls and the sameness of action in the last reel, but even this is excusable, as each of the tumbles is made humorous by Mr. Mix. It is a most unusual film and with its odd mingling of comedy and thrills will fit into a program of any variety.

As it really happened.

The action of the story takes place on a western ranch. The owner receives a letter from his nephew, Luke Barns, stating that he has resigned from the motion picture company for whom he has been working and is going to spend the rest of his life in the West. The cowboys await the coming of Luke with great anticipation.

At last he arrives. The cowboys gather around him and he tells them stories of the wonderful feats he performed before the motion picture camera. Roping and tying a steer in record time, riding bucking bronchos, bull-dogging steers, jumping from the saddle to a train and fighting bloody battles with Indians and outlaws were all "in a day's work," according to the story he tells, and the honest westerners acknowledge he is a hero.

The second reel, however, shows how the things he has related really happened. The ferocious bulls prove to be easy-going jersey cows, the bucking bronchos are ordinary horses, his gallant riding consists entirely of trying to remain in the sadle while the gentle horse trots along, and the bloody battles with Indians and outlaws were staged before the camera, with "supers" in the roles of the desperate men and savages. The reason for his visit to the West is also shown when the director of his company becomes disgusted and discharges him.

"THE WAY OF THE REDMAN," the single reel release of the Selig Company on October 6, is filled with dramatic action and introduces a character that is rather new as far as screen portrayals go—a civilized, full blooded Indian. Tom Mix wrote the scenario and directed the production and appears to advantage as the Indian. Leo D. Maloney and Goldie Colwell do good work in the supporting roles. The interest is sustained throughout and the close is very dramatic.

A redman, civilized and living happily on his farm with his wife Bounding Fawn, and their child, is at peace with all the world. The gambler is shot by the sheriff, while making his escape, and is sheltered by the redman. The gambler shows his gratitude by making love to Bounding Fawn. The redman finds them in each other's arms and sends them from his cabin, telling them never to return.

Years pass and the gambler has tired of Bounding Fawn and abuses her. A friend of the redman's sees how unhappy she is and tells her formed husband. The savage blood of his fathers rises within the redman and he takes their primitive way of avenging the wrong. He captures and tortures the gambler and when the latter seeks to escape forces him into a death grapple, from which he emerges victorious, the body of the gambler having been hurled over a cliff.

A scene from "The Way of the Redman."

AN INTERESTING, but rather gloomy picture entitled "The Reparation," written by Cyrus Townsend Brady and touching upon the Civil War, will be released by Selig on October 7. The acting and settings are of the best and the photography is clear. It is a well handled tragedy. Stella Razeto, Ada Gleason and Lamar Johnstone appear in the leading roles.

Two sisters, Philippa and Abigail Herondine, are the belles of the little southern town in which they live. The latter, who is the older of the pair, is sought by many of the well-to-do gentlemen of the South, while the former, a carefree girl of twenty and much more beautiful than her sister, flirts with many but loves none. David Graham meets them and falls in love with Philippa, but his pride forces him to make love to Abigail, to show the other men the power he can influence over women. Abigail grows to love Graham and, fearing this will prove embarrassing, he elopes with Philippa.

A short time later he tires of married life and deserts his wife. She returns home, her mind a blank, and is cared for by her sister. Graham joins the Confederate army, but deserts in battle. He flees to the girls' home, where Abigail protects him from the soldiers that follow him, in order to kill him herself, but she finds she cannot do it. Graham witnesses the death of Philippa and becomes a man. He surrenders to the troops and is shot as a deserter.

EUGENIE BESSERER does some very clever emotional acting in "Her Victory Eternal," a single reel subject scheduled for release by the Selig Company on October 10, her portrayal of a mother being very sympathetic. The theme—the love of a mother for her son that is so intense it borders on jealousy when he becomes engaged to a girl—is a very strong one and much feeling is infused into the scene near the climax by the players. The last scene has a tendency to weaken the film, however, and appears superfluous, but this single defect cannot detract from the general high quality of the production.

Mr. and Mrs. Tabor and their young man son, Will, devote all their lives to each other. Mr. Tabor is killed in an accident and only her love for Will saves Mrs. Tabor's life. In time Will becomes engaged to a beautiful girl and Mrs. Tabor struggles to conquer her desire to keep her boy for herself alone. On the eve of his wedding the boy is drowned and the mother realizes that her son will be her's alone—forever.

"JIMMY, THE PORTER," is one of the most amusing "quiet" comedies this reviewer has been privileged to witness for some time. It abounds in amusing situations, which the players take full advantage of, and is entirely void of slap-stick features. Sid Smith, Elsie Greeson and William Scott appear in the leading roles.

Old man Duncan objects to Jimmie as a suitor for his daughter's hand and takes the girl and Jimmie's rival on a western trip. Jimmie disguises himself as a negro porter and, much to his dismay, finds himself waiting on his rival. Near the end of the trip the father discovers his daughter kissing the "porter" and flies into a rage. Things are explained and all ends well.

On the same reel with the above are a series of comical movie cartoons, showing the adventures of "Doc Yak," the cartoon character created by Sidney Smith. They are under the general title of "Doc Yak's Bottle" and abound in funny incidents.

Wisconsin Exhibitors Unite

The Wisconsin motion picture exhibitors met in Milwaukee on Tuesday, September 15, and decided that they would hereafter be known as the Wisconsin Photoplay Association. A state organization was perfected, the purpose of which shall be to organize motion picture men in order that they may raise the standards of the business and co-operate with each other against any unfair local ordinances. Officers elected were: J. W. Sherwood, Madison, president; A. Sheibe, Plymouth, vice-president; R. G. Nuss, Madison, secretary, and George Pfister, Milwaukee, treasurer.

Director Favors Real War Films

Edgar Lewis, producing director of two multi-reel war photoplays now being exhibited in New York, while approving the attitude of the German-American Chamber of Commerce with respect to the production and exhibition of "faked" scenes of "atrocities" on the screens, insists that it is the right of film manufacturers and the National Board of Censorship to determine what may be distasteful to motion picture audiences.

"If the newspapers are permitted to print pictures showing war or alleged war scenes, and I do not deny their right to go as far as they think best," said Mr. Lewis recently, "why should moving pictures of the war be barred when pains are taken to offend none of the belligerent nations."

"Fortune Hunter" a Lubin Masterpiece

William Elliott Featured

ANOTHER of the Lubin masterpieces made its appearance in Chicago this week and, if such a thing is possible, this latest one—"The Fortune Hunter"—is a bit better than any of the previous offerings, good as they have been.

The film follows very closely the Winchell Smith play of the same title, only the picture goes farther back than did the play and shows on the screen many events that in the play had to be put over purely by means of dialogue. William Elliott appears in the role of Nat Duncan and, despite his unfamiliarity with motion picture work, does even better on the screen than he did on the speaking stage in the same role. In fact he appears like a veteran of the studio and is easily entitled to first honors in the production.

Ethel Clayton, as Betty Graham, and Rosetta Brice, as Josie Lockwood, each make the most of the roles assigned them and by their acting add much to the enjoyment of the drama. Charles Brandt does some of the best character work of his entire career in the part of Sam Graham, the father of Betty, and George Soule Spencer as Harry Kellogg, Nat's college chum, capably supports William Elliott throughout the six reels necessary to tell the story.

Betty is snubbed by the village belle, at the post office

Nat meets Josie Lockwood after the services.

Many, familiar with the stage version of "The Fortune Hunter" and recalling the dependence of many of the scenes upon the dialogue, will doubtless wonder how it is possible to put the story across in pictures, but for them a most pleasant surprise is in store, for the photoplay will undoubtedly get all the laughs the play did and even more, while there is absolutely nothing lacking in the film story that appeared in the staged version.

The one criticism this reviewer would make lies in the speed with which Nat becomes engaged to Josie Lockwood. A sub-title calling attention to the fact that months elapse between his meeting the banker's daughter and his engagement to her would easily remedy this trifling fault. The same sub-title would doubtless more fully explain the prosperity of the Graham drug store, following Nat's arrival.

Betty's triumphant return from college.

The first view the film gives us of Nat shows him as a college student, the host at lavish entertainments and with all his time free to devote to amusements and good times instead of to study or athletics. His particular pal at college is Harry Kellogg, studious and in medium circumstances, but loyal through thick and thin to Nat.

The sudden death of Duncan, Sr., calls Nat home from college and effects a tremendous change in his life, for the reading of his father's will shows Nat that he is well nigh penniless. Harry Kellogg, who by now is a member of the mercantile firm of Bartlett & Co., learns of Nat's ill fortune and secures him a job as a road salesman for his firm. Nat fails to make good, however, his expense accounts running into three figures for wines, cigars, midnight suppers and other entertainment, while his sales amount to little or nothing.

The senior member of the firm summons him home and discharges him, despite Kellogg's request that he be given another chance. Nat, in despair, drifts from one occupation to another, failing in each case, until at last he winds up in the gutter, after having been discharged from the humble position of waiter in a cheap hashery. One night his old friend Kellogg rescues him from a park bench and takes him to his own apartments. After a consultation with other college friends, Nat is furnished with funds and sent into a little backwoods village to find employment. His instructions are to avoid cigars, wine and fast company, but to attend church regularly, join the choir and devote himself to the belle of the town. In other words, he is to become a fortune hunter and arrange all his affairs with the sole aim in view of marrying the daughter of some rural capitalist. With a fervent "God help the future Mrs. Duncan," Nat agrees to the proposition and leaves for Radville, the scene of his future activities.

All his promises to Kellogg are religiously kept and Nat soon causes real excitement in Radville by his abstemious habits, his studious nights and his regular attendance at church. The position of importance he had hoped to chance upon in his new surroundings does not materialize and so Nat applies to Sam Graham, an old druggist and inventor. Graham has been so busy with an invention he is working on that he has allowed the drug business to fall into decay. Graham's daughter, Betty, has grown up in poverty, a household drudge, with no hopes for the future and every day growing more wretched. Graham explains to Nat that he cannot afford to keep a clerk, but Nat offers to work for nothing if the old man will teach him the drug business by way of payment.

Nat immediately takes hold and orders new stock, slicks up the store, installs a soda fountain which does a thriving business, and develops a wonderful business ability. Ultimately the old prestige of the store is revived, it is filled with customers and Nat has to secure assistants to help him in caring for the business. Ere now Nat has met and begun to pay attention to Josie Lockwood, the village banker's daughter, and within a few weeks the fortune hunter finds himself engaged to Josie. Nat's engagement shows Betty that she cares for Nat herself and then begins a heartache which grows keener with the passing months.

With the passage of time Nat buys a home for Sam Graham and his daughter, sends Betty away to college, fixes up quarters in which old Sam can work on his invention and all the while continues his attentions to Josie. His attentions to the banker's daughter have aroused the jealousy of Roland Barnette, Josie's former suitor, and that young man hires a detective to expose Nat's past.

Betty's return from college brings home such a pretty and bewitching girl that Nat realizes instantly that it is Betty he really loves and not Josie. In desperation he writes Kellogg that the deal is off, and his former college chum arrives on the next train. Kellogg not only refuses to permit Nat to back out of his bargain, but falls in love with Betty himself. Nat then devotes his time to helping old Sam on the great invention and manages to so improve and perfect it that a great corporation agrees to send its representative to look it over, with the possibility of buying it.

Nat prevents old Sam from selling his invention for a song.

Roland has, meanwhile, heard from his detective that Nat may be an escaped bank embezzler and the jealous youth immediately runs to Josie and her father with his message. The Lockwoods hunt Nat up and declare the engagement ended. Nat merely smiles and neither admits nor denies the charges against him.

Meanwhile the corporation's representative calls, inspects the invention and offers old Sam and Nat a small fortune for the exclusive rights to the wonderful machine. Finding himself now wealthy enough to ignore his agreement to marry rich, Nat hunts Betty up and tells her of his love. The film ends with a pretty love scene in which it is clearly proven that the fortune hunter has found both capital and love in abundance. The cast is as follows:

Yellowstone Park in Pictures

The first expedition of motion picture actors to be granted governmental permission to take pictures in Yellowstone National Park has returned to the Thanhouser studio. Previous to this time there have been permits granted for the use in the park of motion picture cameras, but never before has a company of actors been allowed to actually work out a picture.

By these pictures, which will soon be released by the Thanhouser Company, the scenic wonders of the nation's first playground will be brought to the millions of people in the United States who are unable to visit the park. The company which went to Yellowstone Park was headed by Mignon Anderson and Morris Foster. John Lehnberg appeared in the character parts.

Growing Menace of Chicago Censors

More Films Cut

IN its issue of August 1, Motography summarized the work of the Chicago Board of Censorship for the first fifteen days of July, showing that between July 1 and 16 there were 10 rejections and 102 cutouts ordered by the censor board. Since this covered but twelve working days, the daily average amounted to almost one rejection per day and approximately 8½ cutouts per day. If this average were to be maintained, it was pointed out that during the 313 working days of the year the manufacturers of the country might expect to have more than 260 subjects completely rejected and cutouts made in more than 2,660 subjects.

Just by way of comparison, Motography has compiled a similar record for the first fifteen days of September, the figures being based upon daily reports of the work of the censor board, which have been published in the Chicago Tribune. The September record shows that out of eleven working days for the censor board, between September 1 and September 16, there have been 10 subjects totally rejected and cutouts made in 122 subjects. This daily average, if maintained throughout the 313 working days in the year, would result in 290 subjects being killed and approximately 3,472 other subjects being cut. It is seen at a glance, therefore, that the Chicago Censor Board is growing to be more of a menace, and that instead of being less harsh in its rulings it is more drastic than ever before.

Dividing the subjects viewed by the censor board into four classes, as was done in the previous report, these being films released through the General Film Company's program, those through the Mutual Film Corporation, those through the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's program, and those released through various feature programs or independent exchanges, one obtains a summary of the rejections as follows:

General Film program	2
Mutual program	2
Universal program	2
Miscellaneous program	4

The cutouts, arranged according to the same divisions, line up as follows:

General Film program	55
Miscellaneous program	30
Mutual program	26
Universal program	11

By way of comparison, the tables corresponding to the above, for the first fifteen days of July, are reproduced below:

Rejections.

General Film program	4
Mutual program	2
Universal program	2
Miscellaneous program	2

Cutouts.

General Film program	35
Miscellaneous program	28
Universal program	20
Mutual program	18

It will be noted that the number of rejections is identical in both the July and the September records, though in September the Miscellaneous program suffers the most, while in July it was the General Film program. As relates to cutouts the General Film program heads both lists and all programs have suffered worse, with the single exception of Universal.

In numbers of cutouts Biograph heads the September list, there having been 11 Biograph films cut, while Vitagraph and Selig come second with 8 cutouts apiece. Lubin, Kalem and Essanay are tied for third place with 7 cutouts apiece, while Reliance, Thanhouser and Warner's Features each suffered 5 cutouts.

Surely, the film manufacturers of the country, after realizing the awful havoc being wrought in their films by the Chicago Board of Censorship, will combine in some manner to end this promiscuous cutting and trimming of the product which they have spent weeks of time and thousands of dollars to produce. Alone, it would be hard for any manufacturer to attack the legality of the board, but by combining, much could undoubtedly be accomplished.

The detailed Tribune reports from which the above data was compiled run as follows:

Entire Centaur Plant in Use

The opening of the new wing of the Centaur Film Company building at Bayonne took place last Wednesday. The Centaur buildings now cover a solid acre of ground, and are of the most modern and improved type, equipped throughout with new machinery. There are twenty-one departments, each of which has equipment that lacks no single device, little or big, that might be required for absolute completeness. There are several devices and improvements on older machine patents which were invented by Mr. Horsley.

The new carpenter shop, which is in charge of genial Jim Horsley, is capable of turning out any kind of prop that can be made of wood or papier mache. The tinting department, with the old and new room combined, modeled after a famous German laboratory. is very spacious and some remarkable tone effects are now being obtained. The perforation department has been doubled in size and re-equipped.

Harry Horsley is superintendent of the laboratories and positive assembling departments, the last of which, with the new addition, engages the constant services of sixty-one employees. The shipping room now occupies new quarters and is one of the busiest in the plant. The "old" part of the Centaur plant, which is really less than a year old, includes a colossal glass covered studio, equipped with the Cooper-Hewitt lighting system so that seven directors are able to work at one time, night or day.

dozens of developing and printing rooms, laboratories, a title department equipped with a linotype machine and job presses, twelve huge drying drums in an air filtered room, fire and burglar proof film storage vaults, filtering and heating plants, property rooms, publicity department, directors' offices and Mr. Horsley's private office are among the other features of the buildings.

The entire Centaur plant has a capacity of one million and a quarter feet of film a week, and is busy at the present time with the seven one-reel comedies that David Horsley is turning out and about 150,000 feet of positive and titles for outside concerns.

Newman's Lacquer

The Newman Lacquer Company, 3346 Bonaparte avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio, is putting on the market something very new. It is transparent lacquer, which is applied with a brush, similar to varnishing, to brass railings, brass poster frames, and all metal ware, and keeps and preserves the metal in a bright, beautiful and lasting luster for years. Thus, it is not necessary to polish the brass rails, poster frames, or metal work, once this lacquer has been applied.

All theater managers will read this information with considerable pleasure, as the majority of them object to the trouble connected with polishing brass goods, and this lacquer will save them that necessity.

The Newman Lacquer Company is placing this lacquer on the market at a very nominal price, and will be glad to forward additional information to any interested parties.

Englishman Upsets Duke's Plans

Other Edison Productions

IT IS quite a while since Marc MacDermott has appeared on the screen in a comedy role. Rough-and-tumble comedy he neither likes nor fits into, but in parts such as he plays in "On the Isle of Sarne," he is afforded a splendid opportunity to display his versatility, put personality into his work, and still be humorous.

The picture is in two reels and is to be the Edison release of October 16. H. B. Marriott Pearson is the author of the play, which is an adaptation from "The Picaroon." Mistaken identity forms the foundation of the plot and all the humorous turns and situations which such circumstances can bring about are played up to their fullest value without overstepping the bounds of logic.

Marc MacDermott in "On the Isle of Sarne."

Playing opposite Mr. MacDermott, whose part is that of Peter Seabrooke, is Miriam Nesbitt in the role of the Countess Dorothea Vallhausen, the girl whose aunt, the baroness (Mrs. William Bechtel), sanctions, and even assists Seabrooke's suit with her believing him to be the expected Count Sigismund. The latter part is taken by Duncan McRae, and interpreted with his usual completeness in handling heavy characters.

Brilliant photography brings out the objects and characters clearly without having a hard or glaring effect in the close-ups. The arrangement and choice of the interior settings in the Sarne castle scenes denote skill and careful attention to details on the director's part.

Peter Seabrooke, a young adventurous Englishman, runs out of food while on an extended pleasure cruise, and is weak from hunger when he finally sights the Isle of Sarne, a small island off the coast of England. He visits the castle, which is the only dwelling on the island, and is received in royal fashion. He is naturally surprised at this, but in his hungry state he does not even try to think of an explanation and disregards its significance entirely when dinner is announced.

Seabrooke is overjoyed as well as surprised to see that he, a perfect stranger, is given over to the mistress' beautiful niece to be entertained. Later, while strolling in the garden with her, he learns the reason for his royal reception.

She is the Countess Dorothea Vallhausen and some time before her father, the Duke of Vallhausen, insisted on her marrying Count Sigismund Von Sulzen, whom neither she nor her aunt had ever seen. On her refusal to do so she was sent to the Isle of Sarne to stay until she could see things in a different light. Just previous to Seabrooke's arrival a message had been received from the duke, stating that Count Sigismund would visit the island to press his suit personally, and when Seabrooke's yacht is seen at anchor off shore the castle's occupants jumpd to the conclusion that it is the expected count.

The countess is glad to learn Seabrooke's true identity, but makes him promise to live out the deception. In the days that follow Seabrooke and the countess are constant companions, much to their own and the baroness' delight, the latter thinking that Sigismund's suit is getting on famously. One day while out sailing the young Englishman discovers another yacht heading for the island. Closer scrutiny reveals it to be the property of Count Sigismund.

to escort the count to the castle. Instead he leads him into the thickest part of the woods, seizes him and binds him to a tree, an easy task considering the count's half-drunken condition. A few of Sigismund's men find him and set him free. When the count and his party arrive at the castle they are met at the door by Seabrooke and in attempting to force an entrance are met by a stream of water at the hands of Dorothea.

Wringing wet and disgusted with the result of their visit, the count and his men set out to return to the yacht and on the way meet Dorothea's father, who has just landed. The duke is enraged at the treatment dealt his favorite and induces the count to return to the castle with him. But they arrive too late, for Seabrooke and Dorothea have taken a short cut to the boat landing and are already on their way to England to be married.

"A FRAGMENT OF ASH," to be released by the Edison Company on October 10, is a one-reel society drama in which Robert Conness and Duncan McRae play the leading parts. The theme contains some of the essentials of a detective story, but differs from one inasmuch as the spectator is let into the secret of the necklace theft instead of seeing things from the detective's point of view and being kept in suspense as to the thief's identity.

The solving of the mystery hinges on the finding of ashes dropped from the thief's cigarette, and the determining his identity by comparing them with the ashes dropped from the several kinds of cigarettes used by the club members. This may sound like a rather weak hinge upon which to base a drama, but close-ups through a magnifying glass show that there is a difference in the ashes of different kinds of tobacco and for further proof we have an A. Conan Doyle story in which he goes into the subject thoroughly and which story is based on the same hypothesis.

Algy Brooks, a wealthy young clubman, proposes to Jacyntha Carnforth and is accepted, but is told by Lady Carnforth that he cannot marry her daughter until he has been successful in business.

A young nobleman, Sir Hickson Fipps, is introduced to Algy at the club and offers him one of his cigarettes which, he says, are of Russian make, prepared especially for him. Fipps is also introduced to the Carnforths and makes a favorable impression on them. He notes Lady Carnforth's beautiful necklace and has a paste duplicate of it made. After several calls he becomes acquainted with the arrangement and location of the rooms in the house and one night makes his way to Lady Carnforth's room and secures her necklace.

He replaces the jewels with a paste imitation and drops the case into an old dry well. When the theft becomes known Fipps offers his sympathies and attempts to throw suspicion upon the maid by remarking that he has seen Hortense make several trips to the old well. His plan is to pass off the imitation on them until he can make his getaway.

The theory seems plausible to Lady Carnforth, but Algy discovers the deception. At the same time he discovers something else that is even more important. It is a little pile of ashes in one corner of the case.

Closer scrutiny reveals the fact that they are not from an ordinary cigarette. He takes the case to the club and compares the ashes with those on the trays at the card table. They differ from all but the ashes at Fipps' place. Algy confronts Fipps with the proofs, forces him to confess and takes the necklace from him. He returns the jewels to Lady Carnforth and is rewarded by her permission to marry Jacyntha.

ASIDE from being an oriental drama, and therefore unique, Edison's "Greater Love Hath No Man" possesses the distinct charm of having an uncommon story and unusually fine settings. Add to this splendid acting and excellent photography and the result is a production well worth anyone's attention. It is in one reel and will be released on October 6.

Mabel Trunnelle is cute and dainty in her characterization of the little Japanese girl, Foomi San. Edward Earle plays the lead opposite her as Lieutenant Paul, and makes an excellent type for his part.. T. Tomamato can work without a make-up in this picture, while William West's make-up is so clever that it is scarcely discernible. Richard Ridgely, the director, is entitled to a large share of the credit for the picture's success.

While stationed in the orient, Lieutenant Paul falls in love with Foomi San and calls upon her frequently, arousing the hatred of Oshimo, who is also in love with her. One day Paul tells Foomi of his love, but says that they cannot be married, as the time is approaching when he is to return to the United States, where he will probably marry a girl of his own race.

Oshimo sends Paul a note signed with Foomi's name and asks him to meet her that night. One of the other soldiers intercepts the messenger, follows the note's instructions and is found lying dead the next day by Lieutenant Paul. Circumstantial evidence points to him as the guilty one and he is court-martialed. Foomi bursts in at the trial and claims that it was she who committed the murder. She is cast into prison to await execution.

Oshimo becomes frightened one day when he hears that a group of soldiers are approaching his house; he commits suicide, leaving a written confession which clears Foomi. The soldiers find Oshimo's body and the letter. Foomi's sister interprets it and Paul starts off in haste to prevent the execution. He hurries to Foomi's cell with the good news and arrives just in time to prevent her from taking her own life with a knife which, in some way, has been slipped into the cell to her.

Pauline's Perils Increase in Number

Other Eclectic Features

THE fourteenth episode of "The Perils of Pauline" is now finished and ready for booking. Photographically, this release is one of the best which has yet been turned out. There is not a blur or flicker in the entire two thousand feet. It contains few close-ups, but more are not necessary, as this episode, even more than the others, depends upon its quick action rather than emotional expression to "put over" its climaxes.

The big sensation of the picture is the real enactment of a stunt that has been the thriller in many "melodrammers." It is the cutting of a wire extend- across a chasm on which the pursued are attempting to escape, allowing them to fall to certain death below. In this case the certain death is averted by the victims' falling into a narrow river. More than plain nerve is necessary to attempt this feat and accomplish it without serious injury. The least error in judgment as to just how far out the pursued should be before the wire is cut would mean that they would fall on either side of the narrow stream, which, in all probability, would result in a fatality, considering the great height at which the wire is stretched.

In the last few episodes Clifford Bruce, in the role of the gypsy chief, Balthaza, has served as Paul Panzer's confederate, a place formerly occupied by Francis Carlyle.

Owen and Balthaza confer as to the best way of putting both Harry and Pauline out of the way, and decide upon decoying them into their power. This accomplished it will be an easy task to imprison them in the cellar of an old mill where they will drown like rats when a section of the wall is blown away.

The trap is laid and the victims fall into it readily. At home Harry receives a telephone call telling him of the fire at the Marvin factory. He hurries to the scene, accompanied by Pauline, and is met by Balthaza and his men disguised as firemen. Their struggles against such large numbers are useless, and they are carried to the old mill and thrown into the cellar. After some time Harry manages to loosen his bonds and then frees Pauline.

They attempt to raise the trap-door, but find that it is secured. In the meantime Balthaza has planted a bomb just above the water mark on the outside of the wall. It explodes, allowing the water to flow into the cellar. Foot by foot it rises until the prisoners are forced to elevate themselves by holding onto a ring fastened high up on the wall, in order to keep their heads above water.

Remembering an old fireplace at the other side of the cellar Harry dives under water, swims to it, and finds that it offers some hope as an avenue of escape. He swims back, tells Pauline of his find, and together they take a chance on its being open. Should the chimney prove to be closed their chances of even getting back to their former position are small, but luckily they find it easy to ascend and open at the top.

Balthaza calls up Owen and informs him of the success of the plan. The villain rejoices, believing that Harry and Pauline are dead, and starts about rearranging the household to suit his own fancy. The butler is discharged, and the maid ordered to rid Pauline's room of all its decorations. Her refusal to follows Owen's instructions results in her discharge. Balthaza rejoins his men and is about to return for his reward when he discovers Harry and Pauline on the roof of the mill. The gypsies start in pursuit, forcing their former prisoners to attempt to escape by means of a heavy telegraph wire that is stretched across to the other side of the river which flows alongside the mill.

wards by seeing their victims fall into the river, instead of being killed by landing on the hard ground as they had hoped. Pursuit is useless as Harry and Pauline reach the auto and are nearly out of sight before the gypsies descend to the road.

The lovers hurry back to the Marvin mansion and surprise Owen as he gleefully pores over the ledgers and accounts of the estate. At sight of them he flees terror-stricken, believing them ghosts returned to haunt him.

"WHEN Honor Calls" is a four-part drama featuring Henny Porten, one of the two most noted actresses in Germany, and is now being released by the Eclectic Film Company. Miss Porten's work is always good whether in comedy or drama, but it is easy to see that strong emotional parts are her forte. As Marietta in this picture she has probably one of the best roles in which the American theater-goer has yet seen her.

There are many strong climaxes and tense, dramatic situations. The settings are magnificent, and the photography of the best. There are several immense mob scenes in the picture, each person of which seems to put his heart and soul into the work. The result is realistic and impressing.

Marietta's love for Thurston is awakened.

A PRODUCT of the German studio, "The Colonel's Wife," is one of the Eclectic company's latest releases. It is a three-reel picture of the better class, and one which should appeal to any lover of stirring drama and good, punchy situations. It is not a picture in which the action in the second and third reels can be forecasted from the developments in the first. It is tensely interesting throughout because it offers something new and startling in every crisis. The complications are puzzling only as to their outcome. The story, itself, is easy to follow.

Reporter in Hydroplane Rescues Heiress

A race between a speedy motor boat and a hydroplane furnishes a thrill that contains more than the ordinary amount of suspense in Episode 15 of Thanhouser's "The Million Dollar Mystery." The speed attained by the crafts of the water and air is amazing, for is some of the scenes they seem to hurl themselves through space.

The conspirators again secure Florence by a ruse and this time hurry her into a motor boat and turn the craft toward the open sea, intending to take her to a neighboring port. Through Susan, Florence's companion, Jim learns of his sweetheart's abduction and at once sets out to rescue her. He learns that she has been taken to the boat landing and hurries there, only to find that the motor boat is already far out at sea.

A hydroplane has been giving exhibitions on the beach and Jim seeks the driver and asks him to pursue the motor boat but the man refuses to have anything to do with the case. Jim, therefore, borrows the hy-droplane without the driver's permission and pilots it himself. It requires but a short time to overtake the motor boat and, flying close to the craft, he calls to Florence to jump into the sea.

The girl pluckily leaps from the boat and Jim lands his machine before the conspirators can turn the motor boat about. He picks Florence up and flies to shore, replacing the machine before the driver reports the loss of his machine to the police. The lovers return home and arrive just in time to help Jones, who has been attacked by two of the conspirators who try to force him to show them where the Hargreaves' fortune is concealed. Jim rushes to the butler's assistance and when two policemen arrive the conspirators are arrested despite their desperate attempt to escape. Florence is exhausted by the nerve-racking experience, but finds comfort in Jim's arms.

MORE CHICAGO VANDALISM.

A COUPLE of months ago we found occasion to publish a list of the depredations committed by the Chicago censor board on motion picture films which had already been approved by the National Board of Censorship. This list covered two weeks; and it is possible that some of our readers jumped to the conclusion that these particular weeks were selected because of some extraordinary activity of the censors during that period. That is not true; the particular period covered was taken at random. And in this issue we are printing more of the same material, which shows that during the last month the Chicago censors have made still greater inroads and destroyed still more approved pictures.

We have not attempted to estimate in dollars the value of the films so ruthlessly annihilated or despoiled; but it obviously runs into a great deal of money. And it seems to us to be high time for the film manufacturers to concentrate their heaviest legal guns on the Chicago system of censorship. For it is the manufacturers who suffer directly; the exhibitor still gets his program and the people stand for its curtailments and incoherencies much as they stand for inefficient and corrupt political service. But they do not have to accept emasculated pictures; when they tire of them, as they will, they can stay home. Then the Chicago exhibitor will begin to suffer. In the meantime the art in Chicago is standing still or going backward.

It is not essential that we draw attention to any specific examples in this remarkable collection of mutilated films. Each one speaks for itself; and for all of them speaks the disregarded badge of honor and integrity that each carries: Passed by the National Board of Censorship. You manufacturers who believe in and respect the National Board, can you view with indifference these constant attacks on your reputation, your judgment and your pocketbook? Or if you do not believe in the National Board, then abolish it, and let the local censors have their way without further argument. But there is no consistency in submitting to both.

Chicago is only one point in a country-wide distribution of films, it is true, but it is the biggest point you have outside of New York City. And Chicago's attitude influences the whole Middle West, if it does not affect the Pacific Coast. Chicago's censorship is a direct charge against you. In effect you are accused of trying constantly to put over something sly—and not getting away with it. Do you enjoy that sort of regard?

So menacing has the Chicago censorship become that we are almost tempted to hope it will become still more drastic—exert itself in one extraordinary devastating attack that will finally bring down upon it the combined forces of the film producers. Then—and it seems only then—will we discover whether or not there is as much freedom in America as there is in Russia.

WHAT DO EXHIBITORS LIKE?

WE are accustomed to relying on the ballot as revealing the will of the people in political matters. Ahead of any important election it is not unusual for newspapers and public-spirited societies to take "straw votes" and depend upon the result to predict the outcome of the election itself. On pure mathematical theory the vote of a group of one hundred should reflect the vote of ten thousand from whom the hundred group was taken. Still, the straw vote does not always run true to mathematics, and we present the following figures for what interest they may have for our readers, without guaranty that they represent the sentiments of the great body of exhibitors.

A straw vote was taken of seventy-eight picture theaters in the vicinity of Chicago to determine, if possible, the attitude of their owners or responsible managers toward the feature film and especially the serial feature. On this question of serials nine of the seventy-eight exhibitors did not commit themselves. Of the remainder, fifty-five, or over seventy per cent. voted against the serial film, compared with fourteen exhibitors, or eighteen per cent of the total, in its favor.

On the question of features twenty-four of the seventy-eight did not report in sufficient detail to make their preferences clear. Fifty of the seventy-eight, which is sixty-four per cent, declared themselves in favor of features. Only four of the seventy-eight, or five per cent, voted against features.

And of these seventy-eight exhibitors, thirty-seven were using at the time a certain well known serial feature, and seven were using another similar serial. Twenty-four were not using any serial feature at all.

This means that over fifty-six per cent of the voting exhibitors were using a serial, and over seventy per cent of them did not favor serials. Obviously a large proportion of those running it must have wished they were not, while some who were not using any serial were glad of their freedom.

We have never been able to see any important place for the typical serial film, for reasons which we have set forth in these columns more than once. That our expressed opinion should be borne out by fifty-five out of sixty-nine who actually committed themselves on the question (over eighty per cent) is, however, quite surprising. It is almost as interesting to observe that over ninety per cent of those voting on features reported in their favor.

Straw votes, as we remarked in the opening paragraph, are not always reliable. It may be that a ballot of ten thousand exhibitors, instead of less than a hundred, would reveal a different view. But the results we have indicated are at least worth careful consideration by manufacturers who may be tempted to produce more serials.

FILM SHOWN TO DISTINGUISHED AUDIENCE.

Before a distinguished invited audience, "Money," the massive multiple reel production of the United Keanograph Film Company of Fairfax, California, was given its first official presentation in San Francisco on September 2. D. J. Grauman and Sid Grauman, proprietors of the Savoy Theater of that city, placed the theater at Mr. Keane's disposal for the morning exhibition.

The spectators were composed of representative people, including Judge William P. Lawlor, the famous jurist who conducted the San Francisco graft trials; Andrew J. Gallagher, president of the San Francisco labor council; Ned Simmons, painter of the mural panels at the Pan-American fair grounds, and Sol Lesser, the widely known exchange man.

ANN DERSON, who plays heavies in the Eaco Films with Edwin August, is an English actress. Mr. August, while touring abroad, attended a performance at a repertoire theater, where Miss Derson was enacting a very dramatic role. Mr. August admired her work, but his activities prevented him from meeting her. While securing players for the Eaco stock company he recognized her name on a nicely engraved card which was presented him. She was ushered into the office and explained that this was her first visit to this country and that she was desirous of becoming a photoplay actress. She was immediately engaged. Miss Derson is of a retiring disposition and is an enthusiastic suffragette. She insists upon showing all her friends photographs of her pet dog, which is a pomeranean named "Romeo." A brilliant career appears to be in store for her.

Ann Derson.

EDWIN AUGUST, late Universal star, who is to be featured in all forthcoming Eaco releases, is one of the officers of the concern. In addition to writing and producing the two-reel pictures in which he will appear, he will supervise the production of the other comedy and dramatic companies. Mr. August's experience in motion pictures dates back to the old Biograph days, where he played leads opposite Blanch Sweet and Mary Pickford. He left Biograph to be featured with the Universal and later organized the Edwin August Universal company at the west coast studio. He is now at the head of his own organization, where he can experiment with the many new ideas of photoplay production which have made him one of the leading exponents of the new art. His first production under the Eaco banner is "Below the Dead Line.

Edwin August.

CHARLES B. ROSS forsook the "legit" to become a picture actor. As a legitimate player, Mr. Ross has appeared in a number of successful Broadway attractions, his last two engagements being in "The Traveling Salesman," and "Within the Law." Several years of stock experience as juvenile and character man has enabled Ross to play parts of any description in the Eaco Films, by whom he is now engaged. His first success as a character man in motion pictures was achieved in the initial release of this company, "Below the Dead Line." Photoplay patrons throughout the country will soon have the pleasure of seeing him in a number of forthcoming Eaco releases. He is still of the opinion that the "Giants" will win the National League pennant despite the fact that the "Braves" are playing incomparable baseball.

Charles B. Ross.

HAL AUGUST, who for two years was a member of the Universal west coast studio, was one of the first players to enlist under the Eaco Film's banner. He has within the past year achieved a constantly increasing reputation for versatility as a photoplay actor, being first employed by the Universal Company to do light comedy parts. He starred in these roles for nearly a year and was then transferred to the Edwin August Universal company. It remained for Director August to discover the real value of Hal August—a portrayer of emotional dramatic parts. In this latter class of work the young player, who is still in his twenties, continued to improve with every role. When Edwin August resigned from the Universal to form his own producing company he immediately signed Hal August and placed him among his leading players.

Spectacular Five Reel Feature

The Kinetophote Corporation is now releasing "Markia," or "The Destruction of Carthage," a five-reel Ambrosio production from the Turin, Italy, studio.

As the title suggests, the picture is a reproduction of the struggle between Rome and Carthage in ancient times. It is spectacular, containing some immense and realistic battle scenes, but it is not upon that that it relies to hold the spectator's interest. A strong romance forms the backbone of the story, relegating Cato, Scipio, Astrubal, and other historic characters to the background as vital but not necessarily interesting people.

The principal characters in "Markia or the Destruction of Carthage."

The photography is not of the best in a portion of the first reel, but this disadvantage is more than overcome by the perfect photography in the remaining four reels. The fire scenes are tinted beautifully and the subdued light effects in some of the other scenes also deserve special mention.

The first few scenes are in the nature of a prologue, giving the spectator an insight into the characters of Markia, the pretty, wholesome daughter of Astrubal, the governor of Carthage, and a man whose fiendishness in obtaining his ends is equalled only by his great love for his daughter; and Zamah, Markia's stepmother who hates her intensely, and loves Astrubal only for the luxuries with which he can provide her.

The action really begins when Astrubal's spy, Mobi, reports that the Romans are advancing steadily, forcing back the Carthaginian army under General Annon. Astrubal's aspirations to become dictator prompt him to denounce Annon in the Senate as being a traitor. His words are heeded and the general is assassinated. Shortly after this Markia is abducted by some of Annon's warriors, but Sirabas, his lieutenant, releases and escorts her to the city.

At Astrubal's request the mercenary troops are barred from entering the city. They become angered at this and threaten revolt, but are calmed by the governor's promise to hear their grievances if they send a delegation to present them. Sirabas and a body of soldiers are sent and Astrubal yields to their requests. This, however, is only a ruse, for he has arranged that the men be entertained in the banquet hall, and set upon by his bodyguard.

Zamah falls in love with Sirabas at first sight, and saves him from the slaughter by summoning him to her room. He gladly follows the messenger, thinking that it is Markia who has sent for him, but on seeing Zamah he rushes from the room. It happens that Markia, aroused from slumber by the cries of the men, discovers her lover coming out of her stepmother's room. Losing faith in him at this she seeks seclusion among the priestesses.

Sirabas is captured by the Romans, but the governor releases him on his daughter's plea. She repulses the young soldier's advances after saving his life and he determines to seek an explanation. He makes his way into the sacred gardens, meets her, and convinces her of the truth. He is captured while trying to escape and this time, through Zamah's influence, is sentenced to galley slavery and chained in the hold of a ship.

The Romans attack the city and conquer it. Astrubal deserts his men and flees to his galleys with his daughter. The Roman fleet pursues them and the governor is killed in the melee. Markia finds Sirabas imprisoned in the hold, and assists him in breaking his chains. They jump overboard, the galley now being all ablaze, and swim to shore.

Zamah, the wicked stepmother, remains in the conquered city and perishes with it.

Oppose Tax on Amusement Tickets

Marion S. Pearce, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, upon hearing that Congress contemplated levying a war tax upon all amusement tickets, forwarded the following letter to the various state presidents of the organization:

Dear Sir: "I thought it well to write you at this time regarding the fact that Congress is now considering placing a war tax on amusement tickets, and as you realize that at the present time the exhibitors have a greater burden than they can bear without this additional taxation, and if you will get in touch with every member possible of your branch and request them to write their representatives at Washington, opposing this taxation in as strong terms as possible, it will be a big help in preventing same from being included in the taxation list.

I have every reason to believe that if this tax is placed upon the moving picture exhibitor it will be a long time before it will be removed, and I cannot urge you too strongly to get every member possible in your state to act on this matter promptly.

Several Novel American Offerings

Themes Differ Widely

"A MODERN RIP VAN WINKLE," the two-reel offering of the American Film Manufacturing Company on Monday, September 28, is a decided novelty in which Vivian Rich and Harry Von Meter play the leading roles. The theme of the play hinges upon the wonderful improvements that have been made in transportation, modern conveniences of life and modes of living within the past twenty-five years.

Mr. Von Meter does an excellent bit of character work in the role of Steve Hogan, and Miss Rich and the other members of the cast give him capable support throughout the two reels taken for the telling of the story.

Convict 1617, serving a life term in the state penitentiary for the killing of a man in a saloon brawl, has his sentence commuted on account of good behavior, twenty-five years after entering the prison, and finds himself once more a free man. With his new suit of clothes, five dollars in currency and the railroad ticket to his native town, all the gift of the state, Convict 1617 leaves the penitentiary and again becomes plain Steve Hogan.

Steve Hogan is spotted for an ex-convict by Gentleman Dick.

Arrived in his native town, he is amazed to behold the busy streets, alive with traffic, the tall buildings, which have replaced the frame structures that lined it when he went away, and stands open-mouthed in the middle of the street to gaze at the first street car he has ever beheld. Rescued by a traffic copper, he is conducted safely to the sidewalk and stands leaning against an imposing building while he recollects the scenes of his youth with their joys and sorrows.

He pictured himself again in conversation with the little widow.

He sees, in fancy, the stage coach that used to come dashing up the main street of the settlement, the rough cowpunchers arriving in town for a gay night at the gambling halls and saloons, and pictures himself again in conversation with Vivian Moore, the "little widow" with whom he had been in love at the time of the shooting affair which ended in his imprisonment.

The old man is spotted for an ex-convict by Gentleman Dick and Slick Jones, two crooks, and approached with a proposition to join them in a "job." The arrival of the police and the arrest of the two crooks results in the exposure of a dictaphone, concealed behind a picture in the room, and Steve Hogan learns something of the wonderful instrument which has come into use for the detection of crime during the period when he was confined in prison.

The ex-convict can find none of his old friends in the city other than Tom Dayton, a former cattle buyer who is now living in style with his grandchildren in the city. Hogan is invited to make his home with Dayton, but after a time wearies of the bewildering things he sees in the great city and voluntarily returns to the prison and asks for his old cell again. The warden explains how impossible it is for him to seek lodgings again in the penitentiary, and the parent of a former cellmate of Hogan's appearing at that moment Hogan's cellmate suggests that the two ex-prisoners go home together. Hogan, therefore, accompanies his cellmate to his humble home on a farm and the story ends with a pretty view of the ex-convict plowing in a field, as the sun is sinking behind the distant hills.

TUESDAY, September 29, will see the release of a Beauty subject entitled "The Legend of Black Rock," which is as pretty a fantasy as has appeared on a picture screen in a long, long time. Margarita Fischer is the featured member of the cast, though all the others do splendid work in the support of Miss Fischer.

A remarkably realistic rain storm effect serves as an introduction for the sad little tale which is told by an old fisherman to his children as they are about to retire for the night. As the legend runs, once upon a time Joe Thornton, a young fisherman, found on the shore, one morning after a severe storm, a bit of wreckage to which was fastened the body of a beautiful girl. When found the girl was unconscious and all but dead from exposure, but after she had been warmed and dried in the home of Joe's mother she revived and consented to stay with the good friends who had taken her in.

The girl was a Spaniard and unable to speak a word of English, but Joe remedied that defect, for he bought her simple text books and as the weeks went by taught her to speak and write his language. The girl unconsciously learned to love her teacher as the weeks grew into months and he cared a great deal for her, too, but more as a sister than as a sweetheart, for he was engaged to a city girl.

One day Joe's fiance came to visit him and then the Spanish girl for the first time learned that she was not first in his affections. Insanely jealous of her rival, the girl tried to stab Joe's sweetheart and was surprised in the act by Joe himself. Though she tried again and again to win his love, Joe never looked at or acted toward her as he had done before.

Joe interfered to protect his sweetheart.

Finally the date for Joe's wedding was set and the Spanish girl with an aching heart stood outside the little cottage she had learned to call home and watched Joe made the husband of another woman. She crept out on Black Rock, which overlooks the sea, and from that vantage point watched the newlyweds sail away on their honeymoon. Then, as twilight deepened into night she sat and gazed far out to sea in the direction taken by Joe and his bride. When morning came the rock was bare and the Spanish girl was missing. None knew whence she came, nor where she went, but always before a storm the fishermen declare, she can be seen on Black Rock, with her arms stretched out toward the sea as a warning against the coming storm.

The children, much impressed by the story, dash over the window to gaze out into the storm wracked night and as they look a flash of lightning gives them a glimpse of Black Rock and the ghostlike figure that sits thereon. Frightened and impressed by what they have seen, they scamper off to bed as the picture ends.

ANOTHER seacoast story, entitled "The Ingrate," will be released by American on Wednesday, September 30. In this Chick Morrison, Harry Wulze and Winnifred Greenwood have the leading roles and appear to splendid advantage. The fisherman's life is one long round of drudgery, unbroken from one week to another. His wife labors untiringly under the handicap of an inebriated husband and a baby which demands her constant attention. An unsuccessful day at sea brings the husband home in such a temper that he drives his younger brother and aged mother from his roof and drinks himself into a drunken stupor. The wife awakens him to inform him that his child is dying and that he must get medical aid immediately. Still in a drunken daze he staggers forth into the night, stumbles while making his way along the cliffs, and goes crashing down to his death on the rocks below.

With the dawn the brother and mother return to the humble cabin to collect a few possessions and then discover that death has crept into the home during their absence and stolen away the baby. The child's death almost destroys the wife's reason, but when the mother goes on about her usual household tasks and the younger brother prepares to catch the day's supply of fish, the wife rallies, accepts the situation as inevitable and once more takes up life's dreary routine.

Peerless Studio Nearing Completion

A large and complete motion picture studio, 200 feet long and eighty feet wide, is just being completed for the Peerless Features Producing Company at Fort Le, New Jersey, adjoining the old premises of the Eclair Film Company.

The World Film Corporation will control the output of this enormous plant, which will largely consist of the filmed productions of best known Schubert, Wm. A. Brady and Blaney plays, already made famous on the legitimate stage.

"Human Hearts," the famous old melodama by Hal Reid, has been rejuvenated and adapted for the screen in two reels, and King Baggot, the Imp star, is to be featured in it.

Fulton Company Begins Fifth Year

Enjoys Splendid Reputation

WITHIN a few weeks exhibitors the country over will receive copies of the fifth edition of Fulton's A to Z list, containing descriptions, illustrations and prices on articles of every description that are used in or about a theater. This year's edition of the Fulton list, which is already familiar to every exhibitor, is greatly enlarged and has been revised from cover to cover, bringing it right up to the minute of going to press.

The new catalogue reflects in a measure the rapid growth and advancement of the great supply house of which E. E. Fulton is the head. The business was begun, as most exhibitors remember, back in May 1910, in comparatively small quarters in the Northwestern building, at Lake street and Fifth avenue, Chicago. It was an individual enterprise and its employees could be numbered on the fingers of one hand. However quality and service were two words that were not only chosen as a motto for the business, but were exactly lived up to during every hour of the day. Exhibitors throughout the land began to wake up to the fact that E. E. Fulton could be depended upon to supply them with the goods they needed, and that his service was not only prompt and effective, but that the goods were in all cases exactly as represented.

Times were none too good, but in spite of such handicaps the business grew and prospered. More help was necessary. Carl and Ralph Fulton took their places at their father's side and their combined energy, geniality and business ability resulted in many new customers being added during the next few months.

In November of 1911 the Fulton business had increased to such an extent that the quarters it then occupied were proving far too small to accommodate the sales force and to properly display the goods. Mr. Fulton, Sr., therefore took advantage of an opportunity which then offered itself, to secure the second and third floors of the building on the northwest corner of Lake and La Salle streets, the present home of the Fulton Company.

In October of 1912 Frank McMillan left the Enterprise Optical Company to become general manager of the business established by Mr Fulton. Under his skillful management and with the hearty co-operation of the rest of the sales force the following months broke all records. Many new lines were added, business from old customers was almost doubled and hundreds of new accounts were opened.

In its new quarters the Fulton Company—for today the business is no longer an individual enterprise but a corporation—has not only roomy offices, tasty display counters, and ample floor space in which to exhibit lobby frames, ticket choppers, projection machines, etc., but opening directly off the main display room a cozy theater for the exhibition of films, which is used regularly by several of the leading manufacturers for displaying their advance releases to Chicago exhibitors, and on the third floor a thoroughly equipped shop for the repairing of projection machines and other apparatus and supplies used in picture houses.

The projection room Mr. Fulton frequently rents to feature film representatives, who are seeking a place in which to show their features to the state rights buyers or the members of the trade press, while it also serves Mr. Fulton as an excellent display room for the theater accessories which he handles. By taking a customer into this miniature theater Mr. Fulton is able to demonstrate to him exactly how this or that bit of apparatus will look and act when erected in his own house, and firms whose goods Mr. Fulton handles are thus able to obtain the best possible showing of their product.

The entire business of the Fulton Company is undoubtedly founded upon an extablished reputation for dependability, integrity and efficiency, and each executive, being an expert in his particular line, is able to place at the service of the customer a wealth of experience and a store of information which is of inestimable value. What the Fulton Company terms "Fulco Service" is offered each customer in studying his peculiar problems—technical or otherwise—and in recommending such equipment, accessories or supplies as seem best suited to his particular needs.

On account of the care given to the prompt and proper filling of every order received, on account of the dependable reputation it has already established, and in view of the fact that it is better equipped today than ever before to care for the needs of its customers, the Fulton Company looks forward to the coming year as being the biggest in its history.

"Luna-Lite" Company Formed

The "Luna-Lite" screen, mention of which has been made in this magazine, has been delayed in its introduction for many months pending the issue of patent litigation. This litigation has been brought to an end by the mutual agreement of the several contestants and has resulted in the formation of the "Luna-Lite" Screen Patents Company with a capital of $50,000. The new company will control the name "Luna-Lite," the use of the material, and the United States and Canadian patents.

The parties involved in the contest were Thomas L. Willson of Ottawa, Canada; Robert J. Nicholson of Chicago; Lewis G. Reynolds of Richmond, Indiana; Arthur Wright of New York City, Carl Hering of Philadelphia and J. Pogolski of Washington, D. C. Mr. Willson is the original inventor of calcium carbide, the base of all acetylene gas.

While the material, "Luna-Lite," is a foreign made product, the new company is fortunate in having a large quantity of it in bond at the customs house in New York. The headquarters of the company is in Richmond, Indiana, the western territory being in charge of Robert J. Nicholson, 1911 Fulton street, Chicago.

Lottie Briscoe Stars in Role of "Betty"

Delightful as Miss Lottie Briscoe has been in many Johnson-Lubin productions, she has never been more charming than she is as "Betty, the girl from the West," in the fifteen-part serial, "The Beloved Adventurer." This is partially due to her magnetic and appealing personality and partly to the fact that as "Betty," a part created especially for her, she is given every opportunity to demonstrate her ability as an actress in a role perfectly adapted to her particular characteristics and talents. In the course of the story the lovable little "Betty" moves the spectator from smiles to tears, and from sympathetic heart-ache to laughter as she passes through the strange experiences that change her from a wistful-eyed waif and gambler's decoy to the wife of an earl and heiress to the vast estates of a noble house. Although the series has only advanced to the third installment, Miss Briscoe has already added thousands of new followers to her already long list of admirers.

Lottie Briscoe.

In order that she might have jurisdiction in the Hollywood, Cal., studios of the Universal plant as well as within the confines of Universal City, itself, Miss Laura Oakley, recently was sworn in by the Los Angeles city clerk, and is now known as "Officer 99."

Sans Grease Paint and Wig

By Mabel Condon

Boyd Marshall.

FOR weeks Boyd Marshall had been in proverbial "hot water" and all because he was made the victim of a perfectly good press story. At least the man who "pressed" the story said it was a perfectly good one and the picture magazines that published it thought it perfectly good. The only one who disagreed with this general verdict was Mr. Marshall. Rather selfish, of course, but then—!

The story had to do with a mothers' Club meeting and Boyd Marshall himself.

As far as Boyd was concerned, there was no such club, no such meeting and he has proof that on the day in question he was working in a sweater and five-degrees-below-zero weather in a Princess picture. As far as Boyd's reputation was concerned, however, he was there. And both Boyd and his reputation have been feeling the effects of his imaginary presence ever since.

For Boyd made an address, so the press story goes, and he did not choose the topic of "Mother-Love as Applied to a Child," "The Value of Mothers Versus Fathers," or any such prosaic subject. Nor did he tell "How Motion Pictures Are Made" nor relate "The Narrow Escapes I Have Had Before the Camera."

No indeed, Boyd would be original or nothing. The press agent chose the former path of duty and valiantly Boyd trod it (in print).

Boldly he announced to the listening club that "The picture houses of New Rochelle should be closed on Sunday!" The club gasped. So did Boyd (when he read it). But, in print, he hesitated not. He took advantage of the gasp and forced the statement home. Then he shook hands with all the mothers, declined the tea and the all but invisible sugar wafer that is the inevitable finish of a mother's club meeting, and went victoriously on his way. Then came the reckoning.

The Boyd Marshall who had worked all day in the Princess picture found that evening that somehow his presence at New Rochelle's best photo-play house did not seem as complimentary to the management as it had formerly been. At the theater in the next block the manager forgot to wish him "good evening," and his visit to the third house brought no smile of welcome even from the man who sold him a ticket.

It was not until the press agent triumphantly showed him the account of his day-before's speech that light dawned upon the bewildered Mr. Marshall. It not only dawned, it grew; so also did his indignation and when it reached its greatest height it did so to the accompaniment of a promise that the speech, which he had unconsciously made, should be modified; that his boldly proclaimed statement should retreat before the one of less violence—"Sunday programs, educational in nature, are desirable, also procurable."

"And now," concluded Mr. Marshall from the shade of a sheltering oak—or maybe it was a maple—anyway it's the tree that stands at the entrance to the private road that runs past the Thanhouser-Princess studio and that overlooks Thanhouser park, Thanhouser road and the street car tracks. It's a little tree, but it throws a big shade, and that's where Mr. Marshall was waiting for the auto he expected would "whizz 'long" any minute and pick him up to later deposit him at a stone quarry where the Princess players were to "put on" one of Phil Lonergan's scripts.

"And now," Mr. Marshall began for the second time, then stopped and concentrated his attention upon a black speck far down the street. The speck developed into an auto truck and he of the Princess leads faced the opposite direction and resumed, "peace is the quality that prevails and I, for one, am enjoying the calm." That last is a word that especially fits Boyd Marshall for nobody could ever possibly accuse him of being un-calm. He takes himself and his work seriously, but he does not always give them out to you, on the screen seriously.

But he was characteristically serious that day under the shade of the sheltering oak-maple tree. Maybe it was the view of Thanhouser park with the trees and grass and things that go to make a park a park that brought him memories of home, which he said was Port Clinton, Ohio.

"There," he stated with no sign of apprehension as to the non-appearance of the players' auto, "there are lots of good times and homey folks, but not much opportunity; in this line, anyway," he added, removing his hat to let the New Rochelle breezes play with his smooth, dark pompadour.

"At that, though," he continued as the breeze and the pompadour made friends, "the stage was not my aim when I left Port Clinton."

"No?" I asked, noting a street car stop for a prospective passenger.

"No," Mr. Marshall answered, "my ambition was to be a professor of Latin and Greek. I probably would have become one eventually if, in my second year at Ann Arbor, they hadn't elected me a member of the Glee Club."

"Latin and Greek and the Glee Club," I marveled.

"Yes," went on Mr. Marshall, "they didn't agree so I gave up the Latin and Greek and the folks at home very nearly gave me up. It took some time before they would consent to my attending the Michigan Conservatory of Music; their consent was quite necessary as it meant their assuming the expense."

"Well, I vocalized through a course that seemed to satisfy everybody and then I decided to try for the stage. I did and attained it through a Lasky act. Then there were others of Lasky's vaudeville engagements and then I obtained a singing and dancing partner and toured in an act of my own entitled 'The Wall Between.' Then I went to the Coast and played in stock. My next ventures were with Della Fox in 'Delightful Dolly,' and with Fritzi Scheff in 'Mlle. Modiste.' After that I played musical stock in Elmira.

"Elmira," commented Mr. Marshall, with his gaze as far away as that town, "is a perfectly good place to rest; but I didn't care about resting indefinitely, so I came to New York and because I had been in the habit of patronizing the picture theaters all my spare time while on tour, the thought of applying for a position in a picture company fascinated me so I came to the Thanhouser studio. The Princess company was just being formed and I seemed to fill the requirement of the youthful lead, so here I've been ever since."

I remembered that Mr. Marshall with his sleek black hair, his brown eyes and well rounded frame that wears well the newest mandates of fashion, had been rushed into a "Friday the Thirteenth" film as his try-out (and the first Princess release) and that the result was a flood of inquiry as to the identity of the nice-looking young lead.

"Of course," Mr. Marshall resumed, "my voice is getting a rest though I use it for my own amusement and whenever else I am asked to."

Remember that program and dance last January out at the Thanhouser studio? Then you remember hearing Boyd's singing voice, for it was a feature of the program; it's a baritone and Boyd seemed to enjoy using it as much as his audience enjoyed hearing it.

"By the way," began Boyd, putting on his hat and bringing his gaze back from Elmira. And when a person starts out to tell you something by beginning "By the way," you can be sure it is going to be something interesting. But I never heard whatever the tidings was, for just then the waited-for auto came from the direction from which it was not expected and Boyd had only time to shout "Good-bye" as he jumped onto the running board of the car that merely slowed up, and as it turned the first corner, instead of being considerate enough to wait till it got to the second one, the abducted Princess lead hadn't even a chance to call out "Tell you later!"

Rose Gardens Open

It was a night of roses, that of the opening on Sept. 14, of the Broadway Rose Gardens at Fifty-third street. Electric roses dropped in showers from the extended hands of the gay Pierrette topping the perpendicular sign which beckons to Broadway for blocks on either side of the theater, and when the baskets at the base of this sign are flowing over with roses—lo! the baskets empty themselves and the shower starts all over again.

The booklet issued as a souvenir of the evening of September 14, is an important one, in that it makes the initial announcement of Dr. Wilbert Shallenberger's election to the presidency, of not only the Broadway Rose Gardens, but also to the Thanhouser Film Corporation. In both offices he succeeds the late Charles Jackson Hite, who was known and respected throughout the motion picture industry as a man of loyalty and honor.

Others to whom the booklet gives tribute are George F. Kerr, who is general manager and vice-prseident of the Gardens corporation and who is favorably known to the theatrical and newspaper world, and to Mrs. A. McIver Kerr, who is the hostess of the Gardens and credited with the origin of the Gardens' idea. As a professional hostess, she has attained a reputation that, alone, vouches for the refinement and safety which unchaperoned women will always find at the Rose Gardens. Her's is a responsible position in the Gardens' organization, but her ability bespeaks her certain success.

The likeable face of Dr. Addison E. Jones looks out from another of the booklet's pages. One feels that whatever Dr. Jones would sponsor would be worthy of confidence, and as vice-president and general manager of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, he continues to lend his strong personality to the directorate of this corporation and that of the Gardens.

W. Ray Johnston has taken but a short time to come into the notice of the film public and now he qualifies for this notice as treasurer and director of the Gardens, auditor of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, treasurer of the "Beating Back Film Corporation," assistant treasurer of the Syndicate Film Corporation and president of the North Avenue Theater Corporation of New Rochelle. His marriage to Violet Hite, sister of the late C. J. Hite, was an unpretentious event of last spring.

And of course, the Gardens has to have a mascot and the general choice was little Helen Badgley, the "Thanhouser Kidlet." Helen is an animated copy of the Gardens' chosen flower, the rose.

Ann Clover Morgan and Clarence Gaynor will be the court of appeals as to dancing at the Gardens and the aim will be a change of dance specialties each week.

The tiled floor of the lobby blooms roses and within the theater the repose of its gray and white fittings is fired with the rose of the stage curtain and the old rose of the decorations where the "Thirty Leagues Under the Sea" pictures make their premier New York appearance and start the Gardens on their rose-paved way.

From the theater a corridor leads into the rose ball-room. It is called the Danse De Pierrette, this ball-room of roses, and here two orchestras, one Orientally costumed, provide the music to the gay measures of which the gayer Pierrots and Pierrettes frolic for the entertainment of the Gardens' patrons.

It is this Danse De Pierrette that particularly answers to the name "Gardens," for its roof is one trellised with roses and roses climb over the railing of the balcony; and roses, huge bunches of them, are everywhere that room can be spared for them.

Canadian Rights Sold

The Equitable Film Exchange of Montreal, Canada, has purchased the exclusive Canadian rights to all of the Life Photo Film Corporation productions. Mr. David Roskam, the president of the Equitable Exchange, made a flying trip to New York City in order to close this deal, which gives him the exclusive selling and booking rights to all the Life photo productions in Canada. Mr. Roskam has just opened a pretentious suite of offices at 591 St. Catherine street West, Montreal.

Camp fire scenes taken in outdoor places at night by the continuously-blazing light of a wonderful new invention of chemicals, have successfully been filmed by the cinema experts of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company's studios in Long Beach, California.

X-Ray Pictures of Stomach Diseases

By Herbert T. Wade*

AMONG the recent advances of medical science none has been more marked and conspicuous than progress in treating the various diseases of the digestive tract, particularly those of the stomach and the intestines. This has been made possible in great measure by modern methods of diagnosis in which quantitative and positive results have been secured in various ways, one and not the least of which has been the study of the digestive tract by means of the Roentgen rays. With the development of improved Roentgen ray tubes and a better understanding of methods for their use and application, it was realized that by filling the stomach or digestive tract with material opaque to these rays and making a radiograph or shadow picture of such a fluid cast in relation to the adjoining organs, the progress of digestion could be studied. This accordingly was done, and today in diseases of the stomach and intestines it is quite usual to secure a radiograph or plate on which is recorded such a fluid cast of the stomach and intestines filled with the opaque substance, and then make a Roentgenographic diagnosis.

Apparatus for taking motion pictures of the stomach.

This opacity is obtained by a mixture of bismuth or barium and buttermilk administered to the patient under examination, and the progress of this material, as it passes from the œsophagus into the stomach and is acted upon by the stomach and then passes out into the intestines, can be studied. Hitherto it has been feasible to take such a radiograph only at various stages of the process, although since the development of motion pictures and motion picture apparatus the desirability of Roentgenokinematographs, or X-ray moving pictures of the stomach, made to demonstrate and record not only the condition, but its actual movements or gastric motor phenomena, has been appreciated and attempts at its realization made. As early as 1909 a series of successive Roentgenograms of the stomach were made by Doctors Kaestle, Rieder, and Rosenthal. Inasmuch as only thirteen of these pictures were made in 22 seconds, it was apparent that while a beginning had been made, with such slow speed true kinematography hardly could be attained, and the results were little more than an improvement on an ordinary series of Roentgenograms.

Recently, as the result of working on apparatus to make serial radiographs of the stomach and intestines, a special apparatus has been devised by a distinguished Roentgenologist, with which it is now possible to secure true moving pictures on an ordinary sensitized film at various stages of the digestive process at the rate of at least four exposures a second. Thus the churning effect in the stomach and the peristaltic or muscular action in the intestines by which the contents of the alimentary tract are advanced, after being duly acted upon, can be studied by means of motion pictures, which, when reproduced, graphically show by the movement of the silhouetted image the action that is taking place.

This new method has ben made possible in large part by the new Coolidge Roentgen ray tube described in the Scientific American of February 21st, 1914, which secures in its operation greater stability and evenness of penetration as well as susceptibility to more accurate regulation, thus giving more even radiographs.

The apparatus for making the moving pictures consists of the usual lead-lined table in a dark booth with the Roentgen ray tube above in the usual position and the customary rotary transformer, or other devices, for its exciting, along with the special mechanism for securing the movement of the film and the periodic exposures. The patient is placed on the table, face downward, with the Roentgen ray tube directly above the stomach. There is a square opening in the table beneath, across which, through suitable guides, the film passes, being wound from one spool to another, as in an ordinary film camera. This film is eight inches in width and is supplied on spools which, as at present constructed, are capable of 25 or 50 exposures. Directly beneath the film is located an intensifying screen coated on its upper side with calcium tungstate, a fluorescent material that glows brilliantly when excited by the Roentgen rays striking its surface. Naturally, when the rays from the tube in their passage through the body encounter any body or substance opaque to them, as a bone, there will be a corresponding shadow on the fluorescent screen, and the variation in intensity of the shadows of different organs, or material, of course is the basis of the whole operation. The actual effect of the intensifying screen is to emit actinic light under the influence of the Roentgen rays from the tube above. The film itself is not acted upon directly by the Roentgen rays, but by the rays which are sent out from the fluorescent screen. A second fluorescent screen, with its lower surface coated, located directly beneath the first, may be observed by the operator either directly or by means of an inclined mirror. In this way the position of the patient can be arranged so that the stomach can be centered on the film, and, at the same time, the action of the apparatus observed. The operator or the diagnostician can observe the process fluoroscopically and need not start the film in motion until the desired stage is reached.

The film has at its edges regular perforations to engage studs correspondingly placed on the circumference of sectors connected with the driving mechanism so that it may be moved regularly, but intermittently, across the opening where the shadow falls. The apparatus is arranged so that six exposures a second may be made, and the exposure takes place automatically when a fresh section of the film is placed at the opening. The mechanism operates by means of shafts and appropriate gearing, and there is arranged in connection an electric switch that works automatically in conjunction with the advance of the film, closing the circuit of the transformer supplying the alternating current, and lighting up the tube instanteously as each fresh surface of the film is brought in position. Accordingly, there is a regular series of exposures of the shadows produced on fresh surfaces of the film and the phenomena occurring in the stomach and intestines can be observed and recorded. In this way, when the film is developed a series of pictures is obtained where the various exposures can be studied both individually and collectively in connection with one another, or they may be reduced by ordinary photographic methods for reproduction in the usual motion picture projection apparatus. The time of the passage of the film can be controlled by the operator and other adjustments made so that the exposures following each other in regular succession make possible a study of the peristaltic action, which is a regular and involuntary muscular contraction of the stomach, or intestines, with a period of from 15 to 20 seconds in the case of the stomach. Not only do these motion pictures enable some definite idea to be formed of the peristaltic action taking place in the stomach, but they promise in the future to put at the disposal of the diagnostician, or investigator, additional information regarding peristalis in the pylorus, or lower opening of the stomach, as well as in the upper part of the small intestine, or duodenum. Some twenty-five exposures can be made of a single antrum, and sharp and interesting pictures can be obtained.

The mechanical arrangement is indicated in the accompanying illustration, which shows the apparatus as arranged in a modern Roentgen ray laboratory. The operation is practically automatic. Once the patient is in position and the instrument adjusted, a fluoroscopic observation first is made visually, and the film can be rapidly unreeled and the exposures made. After development the diagnostician has a record of the condition of the gastro-duodenal tract, or the film may be reproduced reduced in size and made available in an ordinary motion picture projection apparatus, so that the record may be thrown upon a screen and the actual motion studied, synchronized to the original time of occurrence. Moving pictures have been applied to a greater or less extent in the study of disease and diagnosis, but this is believed to be the first satisfactory attempt at using them in connection with the Roentgen rays and with a special and efficient form of apparatus.

Wireless Telephone Shown in Film

The wireless telephone, one of the recent inventions, is the chief feature around which the plot of "The Wireless Voice," a Reliance-Mutual picture, scheduled for release on October 3, revolves. Director Fred Kelsey utilized an entire wireless telephone plant while making the film, and the members of the company were instructed in the use of the instrument by J. P. McCarthy, the inventor.

The story tells how a crooked financier attempts to secure the invention of a poor electrician, who has perfected a telephone without wires. When he is foiled in his attempt to do this, he tries to take the electrician's life by throwing on the switch while he is away from his workshop. The financier's daughter, who is the electrician's sweetheart, is the one who first approaches the danger, however, and in trying to save her from death the financier is himself electrocuted.

After five weeks steady work at the studio of the Life Photo Film Corporation, "The Ordeal," the next five-part feature release of that company, has been completed. The production has raised a storm of comment by the German Chamber of Commerce, because of the fact that the picture presents, with too much realism, the cruelties alleged to have been committed by the German soldiers in Belgium.

While the picture depicts war scenes between the French and the Germans, it has no reference to the present troubles in Europe. The picture revolves about the Franco-Prussian war of 1870.

Mr. Frank Kugler, the head camera man of the Life Photo Film Corporation, at the conclusion of the picture, was in such an exhausted condition that the company insisted that he take a two weeks' vacation in order to recuperate, before starting on their next production, "Springtime," by Booth Tarkington.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, Motography has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors. Synopses of current films are not printed in Motography as they may be obtained of the manufacturers.

Brevities of the Business

Louise Glaum is playing in a comedy produced by Harry Edwards which shows her in a constant state of mystery, said mystery being caused by her husband being tracked by two men who make up like him.

Friends of Arthur Roussel, vice-president of Pathé, will be pleased to learn that the crisis of his illness has been passed and that he is now on the road to recovery after an eight weeks' confinement in bed.

The latest acquisition to the Eaco forces is Alice Learn, whose theatrical career dates back to about twenty years ago. She has served under a great number of stars, some of the most prominent being Annie Russell, David Warfield, and Edward Davis.

Bess Meredyth tried to return to work last week, but was forced to go home again, as she is still under the influence of the treatment she took to prevent possible infection from rabies.

William Garwood, of the "Flying A," has been signally honored by a jeweler in Santa Barbara, who has made a display of his portraits in the window. The collection gives an idea of the many parts he has played, as an old man, a boy, a clergyman, a crook, and many other dramatic and comedy roles.

Carlyle Blackwell starts upon his second photoplay for the "Favorite Players" in a few days' time. This is "The Man Who Could Not Lose," by Richard Harding Davis, which has been put into scenario form by Bob Dillon. Ruth Hartman, who has been with the Vitagraph and Kalem companies, will play opposite Mr. Blackwell. J. Francis Dillon will direct.

"The Virginian," the splendid western production of the Lasky Company, was the feature attraction at the Studebaker theater, Chicago, last week, and played to capacity houses during its stay. One big film a week is the policy of this theater.

Anna Little, the brilliant Universal actress, who has been ill, hopes to return to work next week.

"Her Career," by Will Ritchie, is the photoplay now being produced for the "Usona" brand by Burton King. It is the story of a wife who tries to go on the stage and of the way in which her husband wins her back.

Pauline Bush has just returned from "Follows Camp," where Joe De Grasse, her director, and company went to take scenes in "The Measure of a Man," by Tom Forman. Miss Bush says they all had a glorious time making the journey on horseback, stage and canoe.

Margarita Fischer's arms are scratched and so are her ankles and toes, for Harry Pollard has been putting on a one-reeler, "Neida," in which Margareta is a child of the rocky waste.

Edna Maison, with her hair all plastered back and tied in a pigtail, is an unusual sight. Edna is the heroine of "Sis Dobbins, Oil Magnate," a light comedy being produced by Lloyd Ingraham.

Paul Gulick is now taking the place of Mr. Stevenson in the Universal's New York publicity office, where, with the able assistance of Harvey H. Gates, he will edit the Universal Weekly and distribute publicity under the supervision of department manager Joe Brandt.

Glen White, who takes the part of Captain Moray in the Colonial production, "The Seats of the Mighty," escaped serious injury last week while rehearsing a scene for that play under T. Hayes Hunter at Fort Schuyler, N. Y. Mr. White slipped on the ramparts of the old fort, and fell a distance of some twenty feet, but fortunately he landed on soft earth and received nothing more serious than a turned ankle and sprained ligaments of the instep.

The Portola theater, on Market street, San Francisco, did not make a mistake in bringing "The Spoilers" back. The Selig masterpiece again has "cleaned up" for that big, house, which played to 100,000 people during the first run, earlier in the season.

Since the Edison Company has made the offer of $100 in cash for the best motion picture scenario submitted by a college student, many intelligent scenarios have been received and accepted. The prize will be awarded January 1, 1915.

Sydney Ayres, a "Flying A" producer, is directing a photoplay that will take in the racing events at the driving park, Santa Barbara, California.

George U. Stevenson has been transferred from the Universal's New York office, and will hereafter be heard from through the Trans-Atlantic Weekly, which is the Universal house organ across the water. Mr. Stevenson's headquarters will be in London.

Miss Gerda Holmes, of the Essanay Company, is receiving the congratulations of her friends who were fortunate enough to be invited to a demonstration of her domestic ability. Miss Holmes has a cozy apartment overlooking Lake Michigan and last week invited seventeen of her co-workers to a dinner she prepared herself.

Miss Dorothy Kingdon, who has been with the Balboa Features of Long Beach, postcards that she has left that company and will return to New York by boat, passing through the Panama Canal.

J. Charles Groshut, formerly sales manager for the Ambrosia Company, is now acting as advertising and publicity man for the Kinetophote Corporation, at 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York.

John Gray, who has been connected with the advertising department of the Universal company for some time, has severed his connection with that company and is now in the advertising department of the Mutual company.

Alice Joyce, of the Kalem company, was one of the guests at the invitation opening of the Broadway Rose Gardens.

Flo La Badie, James and Marguerite (Snow) Cruze, Harry and Edyth (Cooke) Benham, the Farringtons, the Bracys and Muriel Ostriche were those of the Thanhouser players most in prominence at the Rose Gardens opening.

Phil Lonergan, scenario editor of the Thanhouser studio, was host to a party of nine at the same affair, and Edward Earle of the Edison Company, Bill Russell, late of the Biograph Company, Oaray L. Hastings, a Thanhouserite, and Peggy Bourke, also were seen among the evening dancers.

Mary Fuller, under the direction of Walter Edwin, is working on the production of a three-reel sensational play especially written for her by Miss M. B. Havey, entitled "The Girl of the People."

Great interest is being taken these days by the members of the Edison Company Athletic Association in the tennis tournament which is now being played on the court adjoining the studio. As Richard Neill and Edward Earle have been victors in the elimination sets, the final contest will probably be played between them.

Francis X. Bushman, E. H. Calvert, Ruth Stonehouse and Wallace Beery left last week for the East to take scenes for the four-reel Essanay production, "The Slim Princess," written by George Ade. Scenes will be taken in the New York harbor, Old Point Comfort and Washington.

Isadore Bernstein, general manager of the west coast Universal studios, has just finished a story, "Foundlings of Father Time," which will undoubtedly set him as high in the ranks of scenario writers as his active efficiency has set him in the ranks of business men.

Director E. A. Martin, after producing his first animal picture, became very disdainful of the caged inhabitants of the Selig Jungle-Zoo. While jauntily promenading close to the cages, Martin scorned the protruding paw of a playful lioness. The latter took a saucy slap at Martin's hand and raked his finger. He now is directing with one hand.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Marston and a party of first-nighters attended the premiere of Mr. Marston's screen version of Robert Browning's 21,000-line poem, "The Ring and the Book," at a private exhibition on September 22. In "The Ring and the Book" Mrs. Marston plays Violante. Mr. Marston announces that he has just finished the filmatizing of George Eliot's famous novel, "Daniel Deronda."

An interested observer of T. Hayes Hunter's allied forces at war for the screen last Saturday in Jersey was Mr. Hudson Maxim, the famous inventor of machine guns and high-power explosives.

Free instructions in the art of writing moving picture plays via a printed slip of criticism will be given by the Balboa Amusement Producing Company of Long Beach, California, to all amateur scenario authors who submit photoplays during the remaining months of 1914.

As the players in Louis Joseph Vance's "Trey O' Hearts" series draw closer to the thirteenth installment, a nervous tension that does not admit of explanation is beginning to make itself plainly felt. Each member of Mr. Lucas' Gold Seal Company insists that he or she is not superstitious, but as the ill-omened number approaches, the feeling of uneasiness steadily becomes more evident. There seems to be a presentiment that if they can pass that chapter without serious mishap, all will be well.

Kathlyn Williams' reputation as a writer continues to spread. A London magazine has requested an article from the eminent Selig leading woman.

While rehearsing a scene directed by John H. Collins, Gertrude McCoy, the leading lady of the Edison Company, received a very painful injury to her left hand. In making her exit from a room, Miss McCoy had reached for the half-opened door, when suddenly it slammed, crushing two of her fingers between the edge of the door and the woodwork.

After a two weeks' visit among his friends in New York, Otis Turner, director of the Turner special feature company, has returned again to Hollywood, Calif. He does not intend to return to the direction of his company at once, however, but instead will spend the remaining three weeks of his vacation among his friends in and around Los Angeles.

Thomas Ricketts, one of the "Flying A" producers, will soon begin production of "The Making Good of Manley." The scenes will be laid around the destruction of the pigeon farm in Los Angeles during the storm of last January. A splendid story has been woven around this incident and will certainly be welcomed by anyone who ever visited the "million pigeon farm" as it once existed.

Roy S. Hanford, editor of Photoplay Magazine and Movie Pictorial, surprised his many Chicago friends this week by informing them that ill health compelled him to seek an indefinite leave of absence from the Cloud Publishing Company's offices. Mr. Hanford has not exactly decided upon the location in which he will seek renewed health, but it will probably be in the South or West. For some months he has been under a heavy and continuous strain, but he was at his desk early and late and his work never suffered, as the various issues of the publications of which he was the editor conclusively prove. Mr. Hanford takes with him the best wishes of a host of friends and it is to be hoped that the near future will find him back in Chicago again and in the best of health. It is understood that A. D. Cloud will in the future give the editorial department a great deal of his personal attention, and undoubtedly the coming of A. W. Thomas to the Photoplay offices will result in his being assigned a great deal of the editorial labor.

George Kleine's "Vendetta" which is now booking through the special feature department of the General Film Company is being advertised heavily by exhibitors throughout America. The novel by Marie Corelli has been translated into the German, French, Russian, Greek, Italian, Persian and Hindustani. Many wide awake exhibitors have prevailed upon local bookstores to put in a supply of the novel and allow them the use of valuable window space for a three and six-sheet.

Thomas Commerford, the veteran actor with the Essanay Company, who always affects styles in clothes of a half century ago, surprised everybody by appearing at the studio one morning last week wearing one of the latest cut suits and a Balmacan top coat.

The first company of the American Film Manufacturing Company at Santa Barbara has been delayed in putting on its present picture, owing to a recent accident to Jack Richardson, who was injured in an automobile smash-up. Sydney Ayres, the director, is leaving the company.

Max Figman and Lolita Robertson are at work on "The Hoosier Schoolmaster" with M. De La Parelle directing, assisted by E. J. Clawson. Mr. Figman and Miss Robertson both love the picture work and will probably appear in a series of eight pictures for this company.

Harry Pollard and Margarita Fischer have been visiting in Los Angeles for a few days. Both have been working hard and continuously on the well known "Beauty" brand for many months and the short holiday is very welcome.

George Kleine announces that his various branch offices are now ready to book "The Naked Truth," the five-part modern drama which opened the doors of the New Candler Theater last summer. The film features Lyda Borelli, the actress who proved such a sensation recently, in the Italian version of Fannie Ward's "Madam President."

Reina Valdez, who is doing notable work with the Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company formerly played leads at the Essanay at Niles and was under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham.

Flora Foster, sixteen-year-old daughter of Conrad Foster, the Chicago exhibitor, and for several seasons a talented member of the Biograph stock company, where, with her sister, "Billy," she was one of the "Biograph Twins," passed away at the home of her parents in Chicago on Monday, September 21. Miss Foster, in her brief studio career, attained exceptional popularity, and gave promise of big things in the years to come. Her loss will be keenly felt, not only by her relatives and intimate friends, but also by film fans the country over. MOTOGRAPHY joins with thousands of others in extending sincere sympathy to the sorrow-stricken home in its hour of bereavement.

Richward W. Tucker, whose work for more than a year and a half in Edison pictures has received public commendation, has taken leave of absence from that company in favor of the American Theater Stock Company of Philadelphia, where he will play leads. The film public will miss "Dick" Tucker, and it is thought he will return to the screen eventually.

Duncan McRae is also lost to Edison for a while, as he has accepted the role opposite Grace George in the play in which she will star this season.

Edward Earl, whose hobby is eccentric photography, has had printed some character photographs of himself on celluloid. To be discerned, the photograph has to be held toward the light. The result is a softness of tones and clarity of features and costume that does full justice to this clever leading man.

Fred Burns, Majestic and Reliance ropist, is addicted to writing poetry while off duty. He is not a "grinder," but writes whenever an inspiration makes itself felt. Sometimes he unloosens an idea while jolting around the ranch on his horse, Ripper, gets down, takes out the ever-ready note paper, and jots down his thoughts.

Word has reached Chicago that Don Meaney, former publicity manager of a Chicago film concern and more recently press representative of a New York feature film maker, has accepted a position as geenral press representative of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in its west coast studios, and is already en route to California, the scene of his new activities.

Harold Lockwood, the popular leading man of the Famous Players, is now supporting Marguerite Clark in "The Crucible," in which Miss Clark is being featured. In Mr. Lockwood, Miss Clark has a valuable asset, as his artistic work opposite Mary Pickford in "Tess of the Storm Country" and "Hearts Adrift" have won him a host of admirers throughout the country and he bids fair in a short time to become one of the most popular favorites now appearing on the screen.

ROLL OF STATES.

ARKANSAS.

Work on the Grand theater, 221 Main street, Argenta, which has recently been purchased by the American Photoplay Theaters Company, has been started under direction of J. H. Excellent progress is now being made on the new Judith theater building, adjoining the Bank of Fergus County, and with favorable weather conditions, the house should be ready for occupancy by November 1. The new Slater block, also on Main street, where the Myrtle theater, to be managed by John B. Ritch, will be located, is also going up rapidly now, after considerable delay owing to the delay in the arrival of material. With these new houses opened, Lewistown will have six theaters.

NEBRASKA.

John W. Glenn has leased the Lyric moving picture theater in Fremont, and after undergoing extensive improvements, it has been opened to the public. Mr. Glenn will show pictures and vaudeville.

The opera house in Ord will now show motion pictures under the management of J. J. Bastian of Shelton.

The Temple theater in McCook is now operated as a motion picture theater.

Schwartz & Swan, owners of the Crescent theater in Kearney, are erecting a picture theater to seat 700 persons at a cost of about $20,000. It will be opened this month.

F. C. Largen is now owner of the Lyric theater in Creighton, having purchased same from Messrs. Winters & Londergan.

F. D. Greene is now manager of the Lyric theater in Grand Island. It was formerly managed by Mr. Kennedy.

NEW JERSEY.

To solve the servant question, housewives of Maplewood have opened a moving picture show, because the absence of such facilities of pleasure has caused available help to go to other cities.

A new picture theater will be built on Witherspoon street, near Spring, Princeton. The structure will cost $75,000. The equipment will cost $25,000, and the seating capacity downstairs will be 1,000. Wilmont Goodwin, of the United Motion Picture Company, of New York, is supervising the construction.

The Regent, Paterson's $100,000 motion picture theater and incidentally the finest and most modern in the state, opened August 24. Charles L. Dooley is manager.

Ground has been broken for a picture theater to be erected at 25 and 27 Kearney avenue, Kearney, by D. Rentschler. It will be 42x100 feet and will cost approximately $20,000.

NEW YORK.

Alco Film Corporation, Manhattan. Motion pictures and theatricals; capital, $1,500,000. Incorporators: W. H. Seely, Suffern; A. Lichtman, New York City; W. Sievers, St. Louis, Mo.

The new Regent theater at East Genesee street and Irving avenue, Syracuse, has been opened. From a decorative and architectural standpoint the Regent is one of the finest of its kind. The interior has been carried out in a most attractive scheme of chinoise blue and Butler's silver. The stage will be hung with large blue velvet curtains. The boxes are arranged around a mezzanine floor following the London style. The Regent will be managed by Merton H. Schwartz, and is under the control of the University Theaters, Inc., of which Mr. Schwartz, Mr. Edel and Mr. Straus are the foremost factors.

The Cold Spring Realty Company, Buffalo, has filed papers, its capital stock being $50,000. Its directors are George Morton Wolfe, Charles Wolfe and Dorothy Wolfe, and it will conduct a general moving picture and theatrical business.

Genesee Film Company, Rochester; $15,000; J. P. Willard, 62 State street, Rochester; G. L. Deyo and C. M. Rowe, Rochester.

The finishing touches on the new Lincoln theater, Albany street and Brandywine avenue, Schenectady, are being made and all will be in readiness for the opening in a few days.

Religious Pictures Corporation, Manhattan; $50,000; A. W. Britton, F. D. Stoba and W. P. Powell, New York.

The theater formerly known as the Fitzhugh Hall, in Rochester, has been transformed into a moving picture theater known as the Winter Garden. The house will be under the management of Buffalo interests, with Harry Rodgers as local manager. The theater was opened August 31.

EDISON

ON THE ISLE OF SARNE

A Comedy-Drama adapted from "The Picaroon" by H. B. Mariott Watson

Countess Dorothea was plunged into the depths of despair on learning that her uncle, the Duke, was determined upon her acceptance of Count Sigimund. She and her tutor were taken to the Isle of Sarne until she should submit. One day a yacht approached supposed to have on board the dreaded Sigimund; but instead it brought a stranger, Peter Seabrooke, with whom the Countess eventually fell in love and with whom she fled to England. Meanwhile, however, Seabrooke impersonated Sigimund so well that the Duke never suspected he was anyone else until the very last. An exciting well-planned film.

"Adventures of Kitty Cobb" Filmed

Human Interest Abounds

THERE is a something "different" about "The Adventures of Kitty Cobb," which makes it possible for a person to see the film a number of times without tiring of this charming girl and her romance. With anyone but Marian Swayne running Kitty Cobb's gauntlet of exciting experiences, the picture might have become a dull string of events lacking individuality, but hers is a personality which fascinates, and convinces, and injects a pleasing freshness into every scene.

Kitty Cobb is a girl of James Montgomery Flagg's creation, and his drawings of her and her adventures have been run in the New York World and syndicated in the leading newspapers throughout the country. The film is in four reels and is being released by Bob asks Kitty to marry him.

Warner's Features, Inc. Its popularity is a certainty for it is a picture that will appeal to anyone with a taste for wholesome adventure and good character portrayal.

The story contains more narrative than finished plot. As the title suggests it concerns Kitty Cobb's adventures, and carries threads of action only so far as they are tangent to them. Consequently the marriage which ends Kitty's adventures and which, by the way, is preceded by the frank sub-title "It was bound to end that way," leaves several counter-plots suspended in mid-air.

Kitty is a pretty, vivacious country girl who does not quite appreciate the comforts of her rural home because she has never been exposed to the hard knocks of the world. She is fired with an ambition to visit the great city by the stories told her by a young tourist, Bob Caldecott, an exponent of the city type.

Bill overtakes his partner in "God, Man and the Devil."

She leaves for the city and, after a long siege of hardship and privation, while in search of employment, she obtains a position as usher in a theater.

One night after the performance Kitty meets Bob Caldecott and his mother, and is offered a position as Mrs. Caldecott's secretary. She accepts and is happy in her new home until she meets the fiance of Bob's sister, Rose. He is the treacherous Count Pulaski, a foreigner secretly employed in securing the plans of the government coast defense. Kitty and he have met before in the country, the result being the frustration of one of Pulaski's attempts to perform his mission.

He kidnaps Kitty and imprisons her in a room at his headquarters, the rendezvous for him and his accomplices. An old friend of Kitty's visits the city, and, while looking for the Caldecott residence witnesses the abduction. He notifies Bob and they rescue the girl after a hard fight. The last and most important event in Kitty Cobb's adventures is her marriage to Bob Caldecott.

WARNERS FEATURES, INC., places its new Mittenhall-made film at a disadvantage by giving it so sensational a name as "God, Man, and the Devil." It is a five-reel drama and contains a strong moral, parading at their worst the evils of drink and high life. The impression one receives from the title is that of a cheap melodramatic production while the picture is not that in any sense. It has a few flaws in the construction of its theme, and there are times when the cast's work drifts into convention and time-honored style, but the picture is not cheaply put on.

The interior settings and exterior scenes are excellent in themselves, and afford a strong foundation for the players to work upon. The main fault in the film is that the action is allowed to drag, not in movement but in the accomplishment. It could easily have been condensed into four reels without losing anything of importance. Some of the details can stand retouching. One, for instance, is where a man is discharged for eating a sandwich during working hours. Some time afterwards, presumably a half hour or more, the man is seen again with a portion of the sandwich in his hand, still eating.

The title is derived from comparing the characters of the three principal men. The patience of Mr. Moore, a lumber magnate, is likened to that of God. Harry, his son, resembles Satan in his tendency to fight off the influence of pleasant, moral environment, and in his utter disregard for parents or friends in satisfying the cravings of his selfish nature. Man receives a true impersonation in the stalwart, generous, whole-souled Bill Cooper.

The smuggler and his daughter cross the Canadian border line.

The discharged lumberman holds up Harry.

Harry Moore's nickname of "Champagne Harry" expresses plainly how and where his time is spent. After a long period of fast-living he finally forges his father's name to pay his cafe bill. Mr. Moore is greatly discouraged in his only son, and is at a loss where to send him to be cured of his habits. He decides on the northern woods and sends Harry, much to his disgust, to a former employe, Bill Cooper.

For Mr. Moore's sake, Bill takes Harry into partnership, but regrets it later when the stubborn youth nearly causes a strike among the men. The last straw comes when Harry insults the girl with whom Bill is in love. A quarrel follows and young Moore knocks his partner down and flees. Bill pursues him and Harry, his gun plugged with snow and no way of escape open, jumps from a high cliff and is killed instantly by the fall.

Essanay Stars Return From East

Francis X. Bushman, E. H. Calvert, Ruth Stonehouse and Wallace Beery, stars of the Essanay company, returned to Chicago from a trip to New York and Washington on Monday, where they spent a week in taking scenes for George Ade's "Slim Princess," the new four-act feature which will be released by the Essanay company in the near future.

The company spent two days in the capitol and scenes were taken at the White House and on the steps of the executive building. A number of high officials of the government were among the spectators in several of the pictures. Following their work in Washington, the comany went to New York, where the remainder of the week was spent in making "Slim Princess" scenes.

Grace Goodall, who will be remembered as the "head waitress" in the Cohan and Harris "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," is now being featured by the Edison Company as "Fantasma" in the well known play of that name.

Three Strong "Flying A" Offerings

Convincing Character Portrayals

"DAPHNIA," the two-part production booked for release by the American Film Manufacturing Company on Monday, October 5, is a cleverly plotted story which works up to a powerful climax and which holds the interest so firmly that the two thousand feet are projected without one who views it experiencing a single dull moment.

The players deserve much credit for the splendid character portrayals they give, each of the people in the story appearing to be a real, living person. George Field and Winnifred Greenwood share the leading honors, the former as a secret service officer and the latter as the girl whose one ambition in life was to even her score against the man who wronged her. In the scene where her ambition is realized and the secret service man is crushed, both do some clever and restrained dramatic acting. Ed Coxen, John Steppling and King Clark in the supporting roles are not given much to do but make use of every situation in which they are placed.

The exterior backgrounds in the early part of the story are wonderfully rugged and beautiful, and the interior sets representing the society club are well furnished and artistically arranged. The story has an introduction which grips attention and explains the existing circumstances at the same time. The vision is used to good advantage and the photography is up to the high standard maintained by this company.

George Baxter, a secret service officer of the United States, is sent to the Kentucky mountains to investigate the workings of a band of supposed counterfeiters. He arrives in the hills and meets Julia Matthews, her father, and James Goodwin, her sweetheart. Julia at once is attracted by Baxter and begs her father to let him remain with them. The old man finally agrees, saying, however, that he will hold his daughter responsible for the stranger.

As the days pass, James finds that Julia no longer desires his company, as she is with Baxter continually. Then suddenly her dream is shattered when the revenue officers raid the counterfeiting den and arrest her father and James. She is surprised that the officers do not take Baxter, but realizes that he is one of them when he gathers the tools as evidence to convict the prisoners. As he starts to leave she begs him not to desert her, as her father has renounced her for bringing the trouble upon him. Baxter tells her that he does not care for her as he has a son fourteen years old, and that love-making was only part of his scheme. He leaves her brokenhearted.

Ten years later the simple little mountain girl has become the owner of one of the largest and richest society clubs in the middle west. She is known as Daphnia and never appears in person in the club rooms, but has apartments overlooking them, where she can watch all that goes on. James and old Matthews are released from jail after serving their term and are given a card telling them to call on Daphnia at the society club. They go to her, but when they recognize her they refuse to have anything to do with her and return to their mountain home.

Daphnia discovers that Baxter's son, now a young man, is passing counterfeit bills at her club and knows that the opportunity to avenge the wrong the secret service man did her is at hand. She carefully plans to trap the boy and has his father on hand to arrest him. In the mountains James and Matthews find that their desire for the woman they both love is greater than their hate and return to the city.

Daphnio confronts Baxter with evidence of his son's guilt.

Baxter is confronted with evidence which proves that his son is guilty and he bravely does his duty and has him arrested. He then recognizes in Daphnia the girl whose heart he broke and she tells him the debt has been paid. James and her father return to her and all find happiness together.

The cast is as follows:

Julia Matthews, later Daphnia.....Winnifred Greenwood
John Matthews, a counterfeiter.....John Steppling
James Goodwin, in love with Julia.....Ed Coxen
George Baxter, U. S. secret service.....George Field
George Baxter, Jr., son of George Baxter.....King Clark

A DELIGHTFUL one-reel comedy-drama is to be released by the American Film Manufacturing Company on Wednesday, October 7, entitled "Billy's Rival." The chief charm of the production lies in the acting, William Garwood, Vivian Rich, Harry Von Meter, Charlotte Burton, Jack Richardson and Louise Lester all doing excellent work in their respective roles.

Billy Manning, and Mary, his wife, are devoted to each other, so much so that if anyone else occupies Mary's attention for a moment Billy becomes jealous. As Billy spends eight hours a day at his office, Mary, who is forced to stay at home during that period, becomes lonesome. She can find nothing to do to pass the time away until a poor family moves in next door with a little baby, who is not very well.

Mary at first helps the mother through sympathy, but when the baby's health has been restored she finds that she desires the child for company, so she asks the mother if she can take care of it during the day. The mother gladly agrees and all is well until one evening when Billy comes home he hears cooing and kissing and at once prepares to slaughter the man who is with his wife. His jealous rage is suddenly curbed, however, when he sees the object of his wife's affections—the baby.

AN interesting idea, excellently developed, is presented in "Nieda," the "Beauty" release of October 6. The acting of Margarita Fisher, Joseph Harris and Harry Pollard keeps the interest alive throughout, Miss Fisher's work being especially effective near the climax. The settings are well chosen and some are very appealing.

After the death of her mother in the insane asylum, Nieda Graham is taken into the forest by her father in compliance with the request of the family physician. The doctor fears that the child will be affected with the terrible malady, but advances the theory that if she is kept away from all humans until she is twenty years old she will be free from all danger.

Mary becomes lonesome in "Billy's Rival."

Fifteen years later Nieda is a child of the wild, living alone with her father and having only the animals and flowers for her companions. She is perfectly normal and happy and her father plans to return to civilization the next year. One day Jean, a trapper, happens to come upon Nieda and falls in love with her. He comes to see her often after that despite Graham's threats that he will kill him unless he keeps away.

As they are walking along at the edge of a cliff Nieda asks Graham to get a flower for her and in trying to secure it he loses his balance and is dashed to death. Graham finds and buries his body and tells Nieda that he was not hurt, but that he has gone away. The effect upon the girl is noticed at once, and day by day her mind grows weaker and the taint of insanity appears. Graham is heartbroken and knows that the doctor's theory has been correct and that if he could have kept Nieda from seeing a human for another year all would have been well. At last her mind becomes a blank and one day she believes she hears Jean calling her from below the cliff and walks over the edge and to her death.

Preparing Program for Coming Year

Alfred Hamburger, president of the Celebrated Players Film Company of Chicago, accompanied by Felix F. Feist, general manager, spent the past week in New York buying feature pictures for the weekly release program recently launched by that concern through its middle west territory.

A string of newspapers throughout this section will carry a serial story of each of these releases operating in conjunction with the local theaters playing the Celebrated Program of weekly features, and this unusual publicity will greatly strengthen their drawing power.

Nicholas Dunaew, one of the Vitagraph players, was quietly married to Edith Donnerberg on Saturday, September 19.

Heiress Saved From Quicksand by Lover

Conspirators Again Fail

JAMES CRUZE and Florence LaBadie furnish the chief thrill in episode 16 of Thanhouser's "The Million Dollar Mystery," entitled "Drawn Into the Quicksand," when the former hangs by one arm and one leg from a telephone wire and rescues the latter from a bed of quicksand by means of a rope. The production is, as are all of the series, in two reels and has just been released.

While the plot of the story does not advance as much in this installment as it has in several of the episodes which have directly preceded it, the acting of the players, who have by this time become well known to the public through their characters, is especially praiseworthy. Miss La Badie and Mr. Cruze share honors in this respect with Miss Lila Chester, who is given more to do in this installment than in any of the previous ones. Marguerite Snow and Frank Farrington again are pleasing as the leaders of the plotting conspirators.

The scenes showing the expanse of quicksand are well chosen and carry the desired impression splendidly. The photography is clear throughout, with the exception of the scenes taken in a hotel, which are naturally rather indistinct.

The story opens with a visit of Countess Olga to the home of Florence. As the countess and Florence talk, Susan, the companion of the heiress, is suddenly taken ill. While Florence seeks to revive her friend the countess suddenly strikes upon a plan to make use of the incident for the benefit of the conspirators.

She offers to call a doctor and Florence gladly gives her consent. Olga calls Braine, her co-worker by telephone and a few words from her give him his cue. The countess then hands the phone to Florence and the heiress believes she is talking to a real doctor. She explains her companion's illness to him and he tells her he will call at once.

As soon as Susan has been taken to her room Olga pleads an important engagement and returns to her apartments. Here Braine awaits her, disguised as a physician. She briefly outlines her plan to him and he agrees to carry out his part of it. He then leaves for Florence's home, while Olga gets in touch with the other conspirators to tell them of the scheme.

Jim rescues Florence from the quicksand.

The reporter arrives to spend the week-end.

The supposed doctor arrives at Hargreave's home and after learning the particulars of the case says that Susan must have a change of air and suggests that she go to the seaside. Florence is pleased with the prospect and agrees that she will take her companion away from the city as soon as she is able to travel. Jim, Florence's sweetheart, arrives to see her just as Braine is leaving, but he is so wrapped up in the heiress that he does not notice the deception the leader of the conspirators has engineered.

About a week later Susan and Florence go to the seaside and register at one of the large hotels. Florence enjoys the waves while Susan, who is now much better, sits on the beach and reads. Braine, still playing the role of doctor, comes to see them and pronounces Susan well but exhibits great fear as to Florence's condition. He sends Susan from the room and prepares a liquid which Florence, in good faith, drinks.

Braine then hurries downstairs and tells the owner of the hotel that Florence is suffering from smallpox and that no one must be allowed to enter her room. A man is stationed at the door and Susan is refused admittance. Inside the room Florence is slowly overcome by the drug which Braine gave her and falls into a stupor.

Jim arrives at the hotel to spend the week end. Susan appeals to him to do something as she fears foul play. The reporter and Susan climb the fire escape to Florence's room and, while Jim carries Florence to the roof the building Susan takes the place of the heiress on the cot. Braine returns with several conspirators, prepared to take the heiress away. When they find Susan in her place they become enraged and determine to avenge themselves on her. They bind and gag her and, when Braine finds it is no use to pursue Jim and Florence who have climbed to another building, they take Susan from the hotel and place her in the wagon in which they had hoped to kidnap Florence.

Jim and Florence reach the ground and follow a road which runs close to a bed of quicksand, the reporter hoping to get the heiress out of range of all danger. Braine and the other conspirators leave one of their number to drive the wagon containing Susan and leave for the city in an automobile.

As they walk along the road Florence and Jim suddenly meet the wagon, driven by the conspirator, and the reporter at once realizes what has happened. He stops the horse and drags the driver from his seat. Fearing that in the fight which he knows is sure to follow Florence may be hurt, Jim tells her to run a short distance down a nearby side road.

Jim fails to recognize Braine.

While he struggles with the conspirator Florence runs down the road and suddenly finds herself in the quicksand. Slowly she feels herself sinking and calls to Jim for help. Jim has knocked the conspirator unconscious and has just released Susan when he hears his sweetheart's cries. He hurries down the road toward her but finds that she is too far into the quicksand for him to help her while he is on the ground.

A telephone wire runs through the field of quicksand and Jim, without hesitating, climbs the nearest pole and crawls along the wire, hand over hand until he is directly above Florence. Then he drops a rope to her, which he has taken from the conspirator's wagon and rescues her from the awful death which has threatened her.

Florence, Susan and Jim then get into the wagon and drive away toward the city and when the conspirator, who acted as driver, recovers consciousness they are far beyond his reach and he has a long walk to the nearest railroad before him.

Hepworth Establishes American Office

The Hepworth Company of London is to be congratulated on being the first English firm to have its own company in America to handle its film and look after its interests generally. During Albert Blinkhorn's recent trip to London, when he had an interview with the directors of the Hepworth Company, he explained to them his views with reference to the renting business in America and stated that he had decided to devote his whole energies to renting. He handed in his resignation as president of the American company, as he had in view the formation of another corporation which was to be devoted to renting only, with a chain of offices in the U. S. A. Following this the Hepworth Company held a directors' meeting, when Mr. Blinkhorn made a proposition for handling its product in America and it was decided to send a representative to New York for the purpose of making inquiries as to the probability of the proposition being accepted. With this end in view, Mr. C. Parfrey, one of the directors, came to this country and, after going into the matter thoroughly, has successfully negotiated a satisfactory arrangement with Mr. Blinkhorn, who has formed the Blinkhorn Photoplays Corporation, of which he is president, whereby the latter corporation has agreed to take a large proportion of all Hepworth, Florence Turner and Ivy Close releases for this country, and we may safely look forward to something big coming from this combination, as the Hepworth Company has in contemplation the production of a number of exceptionally good releases. We understand the Hepworth Company will still continue to sell on the open market and is continuing to release its regular output in spite of the European disturbance.

P. Parfey.

Where to Book Kleine Films

That a good deal of confusion exists in the minds of the average exhibitor as to what Kleine pictures are being handled through the special feature department of the General Film Company and those booking direct through the various Kleine offices, is evidenced by the misdirected letters received by both institutions. The special feature department of the General Film Company is handling "Anne Boleyn," "A Kingdom at Stake," "Othello," "The Secret of the Ring," "The Song of the Soul," "Vendetta" and "The Golden Beetle." Inquiries for those pictures should be addressed to the General Film Company. The various Kleine offices are handling, "Quo Vadis?", "The Last Days of Pompeii," "Antony and Cleopatra," "Between Savage and Tiger," "Spartacus," "The Lion of Venice," "European Armies in Action" and a number of two, three and four reel special releases.

Eight stone elephants, of life size, will adorn the massive concrete entrance of the Selig Jungle-Zoo at Los Angeles.

By Mabel Condon

Robert Warwick.

He was on time to the minute of eleven o'clock, though J. Wilk, at five minutes before the hour, had apologized for his non-arrival. And then he came; tall, smiling, dark-haired and dark-eyed. And one knew that with Robert Warwick as "The Man of the Hour," that film would have to be a success.

"You can have my office," offered M. E. Hoffman and led the way through a room where Lewis J. Selznick, president of the World Film Corporation held a conference with several men seated about an oval table.

"Good morning," Mr. Selznick stopped conferring long enough to say. And "Good morning," we in Mr. Hoffman's wake returned. Then we came to the latter's office and with a sweep of his hand, Mr. Hoffman accorded us the big swivel chair in front of his desk.

"But Mr. Warwick would fit it so much better," I deprecated.

"But no!" The tall Mr. Warwick gallantly and untruthfully declined. So I lost myself in a corner of the chair and he of the tallness, and darkness, and the perfect grooming, and the polished walking stick settled onto a small chair and smiled; then he waited, I smiled; also, I waited.

"Of course," I began, feeling responsible for the wait, "it's about pictures."

"Of course," agreed Mr. Warwick, with an emphatic nod of his head and a shifting of the polished stick.

"But first," I went on, "am I or am I not pronouncing your name correctly, it is 'Warick,' isn't it?"

"Yes, that's how. But I'm generally given the benefit of that second 'w'."

"And now, pictures please, Mr. Warwick," I requested from the corner of the swivel, and Mr. Warwick told me, like this:

"It was through William Brady, of course, when he made this big arrangement with the World Film Corporation to have his plays filmed and released by them. And I've worked all summer in the two plays 'The Dollar Mark' and 'The Man of the Hour'—By George! that reminds me that they're going to run that picture sometime today and I haven't seen a foot of it!"

"Come in at two then, Warwick, and you'll see it," invited Mr. Hoffman as he hurried in, hurried through some papers on his desk and started to hurry out.

"But" Mr. Warwick restrained him, "I can't come at two. I have a tennis engagement at Van Courtland —and I'd hate to disappoint the chap."

"Wait a minute," there was a promise of something in Mr. Hoffman's voice as he accomplished his hurried exit.

"I expect this picture will be better than 'The Dollar Mark'," Mr. Warwick said. "But," he added, "for a flyer in motion pictures, 'The Dollar Mark' gave me all the sensations that a score of others might have done. My initiation was a violent one; it meant going down a steep incline by means of a rope and overturning a raft on myself and Miss Tennant and then having to right the raft and save both of us—and you know," he commented, "for a person who isn't used to that reality stuff, it must have been a startler."

"Certainly," I agreed and he continued.

"But I thought if others could do that sort of thing and live I could too, so I proved it."

"In fifteen minutes," came the voice of Mr. Hoffman from the doorway, "you can see 'The Man of the Hour'."

"Fine!" thanked Mr. Warwick, and the head that had been in the doorway was there no longer.

"Director Tourneur," resumed Mr. Warwick, but with a fresh thought, "I think must be a very efficient man. His first direction to me was, 'be natural; put yourself in the place of the man you impersonate and do exactly as you think you'd do under the same conditions.' And it seems to me," added Mr. Warwick "that that should be the basic rule in the art of the silent drama.

"I believe too," he went on, "that the object should be to project thought, in making a meaning clear instead of gesticulating. These are simple methods, but simplicity always scores strongest," he concluded in summing up his ideas of the qualities that go toward making perfect work before the camera. camera.

"But of course, I'm new to it," Mr. Warwick allowed, "But I think my introduction to the camera by means of a perilous descent into a miners' camp, gives me the right to make these two comments. The out-of-door work is what would appeal most to me. And coming after my long season with Frances Starr in 'The Secret' it was most welcome. But just as a change," he added, "for I couldn't help but feel the loss of something, it's hard to explain what, that a person from the legitimate stage misses in the silent drama. It's a kind of sixth sense, something psychological—I don't know just how to explain it, but I can feel it. So my next work will be on the stage; on the road for a while with 'The Secret' and then back into New York and open in a new play about Christmas time.

"When I left Sacramento, Cal. when I was eighteen, and Sacramento was where I was born," Mr. Warwick told me, "my intention was to become an opera singer. So I went to Paris and studied for two years. Geraldine Farrar was one of the people I knew there and there were others, who are all big successes now on the operatic stage. Then I decided my voice wasn't meant for opera, so came to New York and tried for work on the stage. My debut was as extra man in Wilton Lackaye's 'The Pit.' And ever since then I've been busy. That was ten years ago. Sometimes," he smiled, "I'm sorry I didn't keep on good terms with my voice. But one thing I never regretted," and he laughed at the recollection, "and that was my boxing instruction received from James J. Corbett. He taught me when he had to sit on a chair to be even with me."

"And tennis?" I asked, deserting the swivel as I heard Mr. Hoffman's voice and guessed that the fifteen minutes had passed.

"Play it every possible chance," answered Mr. Warwick, also rising. And then we went into the projection room and whispered comments on the perfectly enjoyable film, "The Man of the Hour"—with Mr. Warwick making a splendid "Man."

Horsley Enters General Film

David Horsley has been taken into the licensed fold, and, for the first time in the history of that powerful organization, a new brand of film has been added to the regular program of the General Film Company.

David Horsley.

Ever since the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Company in 1908, efforts have been made by the powers of the film world, both in and out of the company, to add to the list of licensed manufacturers, but in spite of the great pressure that has so frequently been brought to bear, the original ten manufacturers held the lineup unchanged until the present year. Quite recently Pathe Freres severed its relations with the General Film Company and it is in effect to fill this void that another manufacturer has been taken in.

The fact that David Horsley has been chosen for this honor which has been sought by almost every manufacturer in the motion picture industry is a distinct and signal tribute to his genius.

His struggle from a meagre beginning, his steady advance through the successive trying conditions of the fast growing industry and final triumph as the possessor the largest commercial plant in America and admission to the General Film program of his productions, makes him loom up as a real marvel in a line of endeavor, the records of which, in their inconceivably rapid development, are replete with signal achievements and remarkable men.

For the present Mr. Horsley will release three one-reel comedies a week. These comedies will be known under the new brand name of "Ace" and will probably be procurable from the various offices of the General Film Company about the middle of October, although no definite date has yet been set.

The productions will, for the next three months, be made in the Centaur studios at Bayonne. Later, as the winter sets in, two companies will be sent to California, probably near Los Angeles, where Mr. Horsley is considering the erection of a new studio. At least two companies will, in any event, continue to work in the Bayonne studios all winter.

O. W. Biarmer, who was Mr. Horsley's valuable aide in his negotioations with the General Film Company, has been rewarded by an appointment as general sales manager of the Centaur Film Company.

Milton H. Fahrney continues as director-in-chief. Mr. Fahrney's comedies are said to be the finest works that this consistent and long experienced director has ever staged.

Tommie Mullens is directing a new style of slapstick comedy of high promise. Two other directors of special selection of a demonstrated ability to produce laugh-makers—one for cartoon and the other for "polite" comedies—are hard at work and their names are being withheld from publication to aid Mr. Horsley in springing a surprise when the releases are made.

The acting forces include some really great performers, such as Mlle. Valkyrien, the Danish star who is rated as one of the most popular actresses of all Europe. Nettie Noges is another star of international repute, she having occupied a position in Russia, comparable to Mary Pickford or Blanche Sweet in this country. Elaine Ivans heads the native contingent, and in this remarkably beautiful and talented young miss—she has just turned eighteen—Mr. Horsley expects to develop an American favorite who will outrank the winner of present day popularity contests. Harry La Pearl, many years producing clown of the Barnum & Bailey and Ringling circuses and recognized as the greatest American pantomimist and ten other leading clowns are under contract.

Chester Beecroft, advertising and publicity manager of the Motion Picture Patents Company, and who until recently occupied the same position with the General Film Company, is also associated with Mr. Horsley in a general capacity of broad scope. Big things are expected of the Ace comedies, and their appearance on the General Film program will be watched with eager interest.

Siegmund Lubin Gives Optimistic Views

That the present state of affairs in Europe is not bothering the established manufacturers is the opinion of Siegmund Lubin. "It is rather hard to give an intelligent forecast of the coming few months in the moving picture or any other amusement business," he said in a recent interview. "This senseless war has toppled all arts and industries throughout the world up-side down, but we are not indulging in a pessimistic viewpoint, neither are we relaxing our efforts to continually achieve greater things. On the contrary, we are working the cameras full time and spending more money than ever in securing great scripts and talented players. This will readily be seen from the ads of our productions to be released in the near future.

"Money would have to be tight indeed if it interfered with the very enjoyable and cheap recreation that the picture house affords to distract the more serious thoughts of the present unfortunate condition of the civilized world. Here peace is giving up happiness and we can enjoy our labor without let or hindrance. Still in this cosmopolitan country there are many heart-strings pulling at the thought of misery now prevailing among dear ones in the mother lands. However, the camera is dispensing more happiness than guns and will be an institution when the Krupp is silenced and the ships of the nations are free to dance over the waters again to foreign lands."

Artist Finds Girl of His Dreams

Some Selig Comedies

"THE DREAM GIRL", a sea drama from the pen of James Oliver Curwood, will be the Selig two-reel offering of October 12. Its scenes are laid on the Pacific coast and the island of Saint Marc in Haiti, and the settings are quite convincing. Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton and Harry Lonsdale have the leading roles and make the characters real flesh and blood people.

Santschi has the role of Steward, an artist, who has visions of a beautiful face which haunts his dreams, and later he transfers his dream face to canvas. He is so enamored of the painted face that he proclaims his intention to marry the lady, if he shall ever be so fortunate as to encounter the face in real life.

One day Captain Sparks, an old friend of Steward's, arrives from one of his filibustering expeditions and, after being wined and dined by his artist friend, is taken to the latter's apartments. There, Steward unveils the portrait of his dream girl and is amazed to have Captain Sparks declare the picture is an excellent likeness of a real girl, whom he has seen kidnapped some years before. The captain describes at length the exciting happening of years gone by and Steward decides to accompany him back to Saint Marc in Haiti, the scene of the kidnapping, in hope of discovering the lady herself.

Steward receives the captain's gift.

The Mexican quarrels with his foreman.

After days of search the two are on the point of giving up in despair, when Captain Sparks suddenly sights a bearded man, whom he identifies as one of the kidnappers. Steward at once sets out to trail the man, in hope of being led to the girl's hiding place. He tracks him to the residence of the Costillo's, reputed to be one of the island's wealthiest families. Through a window he sees the bearded man handed a roll of bills by Costillo, and instantly decides that something of importance is at last about to transpire.

Captain Sparks aboard his boat with Delores.

Steward follows the bearded man to the seashore, where he sees him embark on a small sailboat. Throwing off his coat, Steward plunges in and, by grasping a ring-bolt in the stern of the craft, is towed along to the shores of a small jungle covered island, where the bearded man lands and approaches a tiny cabin concealed in the dense shrubbery.

By careful maneuvering Steward is able to reach a small grated window, through which he can see the interior of the cabin. Within is the girl of his dreams. Listening, he hears the bearded man in conversation with the girl and learns that she has been kept a prisoner in the cabin for a long period. When the bearded man disappears in an inner room, Steward makes his presence known to the fair prisoner and is planning a means of escape when the two are surprised by the guardian of the cabin.

As the bearded man rushes forth to do battle with Steward in the small cleared space in front of the cabin, Delores, the girl, picks up the revolver which Steward has dropped and ends the battle by a well aimed shot which kills the bearded man. Before dying, the bearded man confesses that he has been hired for $10,000 by Costillo to kill Delores, thus enabling Costillo to come into possession of her fortune. Instead of killing her, however, he has kept her a prisoner in the lonely cabin.

Upon the return of Steward and Delores to the mainland, a consultation is held in the cabin of Captain Sparks' craft, and the authorities are notified of what has happened. The whole party adjourns to the Costillo home, where the guilty ones are arrested and taken off to jail. Delores has learned to love her rescuer, and when he shows her the picture he has painted of his dream girl, and she recognizes it as a likeness of herself, she confesses her love.

A TOUCH of comedy is given the week's releases by "The Mysterious Beauty," a one-reel farce, written by Will M. Hough. William Scott and Elsie Greeson are the featured players and both are seen to advantage in the little playlet which tells how Harold Heath, a wealthy clubman, seeing a pretty girl passing the window of his club, declares her to be his ideal girl and sets out to become acquainted with her. He follows her about the city from one place to another, even going so far as to don a waiter's uniform in order to be near her, when she enters a restaurant with another man. Eventually Heath is foiled when she enters a ladies' turkish bath parlor, for he dare not follow her there.

Hours later, when she emerges, he again takes up the trail and pursues her to a dentist's office, where he has a tooth extracted before he can explain that he "only came with the lady." The chase leads aboard a Pullman car and winds up in an auto chase, at the end of which Heath sees the lady arrested by government sleuths for being a confidence woman. His faith in womankind is shaken at this experience and he declares "Never again!" though the closing scene of the picture shows him again in pursuit of a pretty girl.

IN "THE WOMAN OF IT," subtitled "A Vision of the Primitive," Kathlyn Williams, Wheeler Oakman and Charles Clary are seen in a primeval drama which proves in the end to have been only a dream after all. The woman is on the seashore with her sweetheart and a rough boatman. Falling asleep, she dreams that the three of them are wrecked on a desert island. The man is courageous, but has no knowledge of the practical things. The brute saves their lives, because he knows how to do things. The brute ultimately wins the woman, though at first she had imagined she loved her gentlemanly sweetheart. At last the gentleman signals a passing ship, but the brute and the woman conceal themselves in the jungle and refuse to be rescued, preferring to remain in the primitive without the conventionalities of civilization. As the picture ends the girl awakens to discover that it is all a dream, and that she is in reality asleep against her sweetheart's shoulder.

LILLIAN BROWN LEIGHTON in the role of the man hater in the one-reel release "The Woman Hater," does some good character work. Though believing that all men are worthless and the young man who is courting her pretty niece particularly so, she eventually discovers that Sam, a foreman on her brother's western ranch, who has considered all women "pizen", is one of nature's noblemen and that life as his wife is much to be desired. Happy at last in her new married bliss she wires her niece to go ahead and marry her sweetheart.

TOM MIX has staged an excellent Western drama entitled "The Mexican," which forms the Selig release of October 13, and in which Mr. Mix himself appears as the Mexican. Plenty of action, lots of spirited riding and a happy ending make the picture one that will meet with favor at the hands of the exhibitor.

As the story runs the Mexican leaves his wife and family to seek a job on the "Rocking Chair" ranch. Mexicans are not popular on the ranch and though he is put to work the new man is bullied and persecuted until he tries to kill his foreman and is then discharged. In revenge he plans to burn the ranch, but arrives to begin his vandalism just at a time when the ranch owner's wife is frantic over the knowledge that her baby daughter has been bitten by a rattlesnake. She appeals to the Mexican to ride to town for the doctor, but at first he is inclined to refuse, on account of the harsh way he was treated at the ranch. Eventually, however, he remembers his own papoose and taking the woman's horse sets off for the settlement. En route he is sighted by the ranch owner, who, noting that the horse is his wife's jumps to the conclusion that the Mexican has stolen the animal. Accordingly he takes a long distance shot at the supposed thief and the Mexican is severely wounded, but continues his ride to town. The doctor receives the message and arrives at the ranch in time to save the baby's life. In explaining the affair to her husband, the ranch owner's wife lauds the Mexican's kindness and her husband, realizing the great wrong he has done the Mexican arranges to care for the latter and to provide for his family for all time to come.

While playing the part of a lover imprisoned in a cabin in the forest, James Morrison of the Vitagraph players had a narrow escape from death, when a forest fire swept down upon the hut. Dorothy Kelly, the heroine of the photoplay, became a heroine in real life and released Mr. Morrison.

Essanay's Drama of the Steel Mills

Other Big Productions

POWERFUL acting, spectacular settings, splendid tinting and photography of the de luxe sort, all tend to make Essanay's three-reel special production, "In the Glare of the Lights," a most welcome offering. It combines the dramatic with the spectacular in a satisfying fashion, and gives Francis X. Bushman, Lillian Drew and Lester Cuneo a chance to display their talents.

Director Calvert undertook a difficult task when he attempted to put on a story necessitating the taking of many scenes in and about a big steel mill, with the glare of the huge blast furnaces as a background for much of the stirring action. The superb manner in which he has accomplished his object, however, undoubtedly adds to his laurels as a producer, so, probably, he considers the finished production as well worth all the care and effort on his part that it took.

Wanda and the stage are denounced by Duval.

As the tale unfolds we learn that Glen Duval (Francis Bushman), a worker in the steel mills, is fired with an ambition to become an actor. In his spare moments Duval reads a textbook entitled "How to Become an Actor," and practices heroic speeches on his aunt. Joe Brandigan (Lester Cuneo), who works in the mill with Glen, is insanely jealous of him because Martha Stedman (Beverly Bayne), whom Joe loves, appears to care for Duval, though in reality Glen cares for her only as a friend.

While matters are in this condition Wanda Dawson (Lillian Drew), leading woman in a traveling light opera troupe, is left behind when the train on which she is traveling with other members of the company, pauses to repair a broken driving rod on the engine, and then suddenly starts up while Wanda is picking flowers alongside the right of way. Wanda, in despair over being left alone, sinks down on the railroad embankment and falls asleep. There she is found by Glen while on his way to work the next morning.

Duval takes her to his home, has his aunt care for her and sends a telegram to the manager of the troupe, telling of his leading lady's whereabouts.

Before Wanda leaves to rejoin the troupe, Glen tells her of his ambition to become an actor and she not only encourages him in that desire, but helps him to secure an engagement from her manager. On the stage Glen finds himself falling in love with the beautiful leading woman, but hesitates to ask her to marry him because he considers himself so far beneath her.

One day his chance comes, however, and Glen, who has understudied Bland, the leading man of the troupe, is able to play the leading role opposite Wanda, when Bland is unable to appear. He scores a tremendous success. With the passing of time Glen rises to the rank of a star and believes the time has come when he can honorably ask Wanda to become his wife. He enters her dressing room to discuss the matter with her, and much to his surprise finds Bland there and Wanda in his arms. Wanda explains that Bland is ready to launch a new play and wants her for his leading woman. Glen, in a rage, denounces both Wanda and the stage and, heartbroken, returns home.

Back in the steel mill Joe Brandigan has become foreman. He gives Glen back his job when he asks for it, but has not yet succeeded in overcoming his hatred of the former, though by now Brandigan has married Martha, so he really has nothing to be jealous over. As the weeks pass Joe drives Glen harder and tacular struggle Glen gets the upper hand and is just about to throw the unconscious Brandigan into the blazing pit when Joe's little son appears. Like a flash it comes over Glen that he has been on the point of committing murder. Shamefaced, he tenderly lays down the body of Joe and takes the child in his arms.

Meanwhile, Wanda, the actress, has been searching for Glen, whom she really loves. Arriving in Glen's home town, she goes to the steel mills in search of her former leading man and reaches there just at the conclusion of Glen's battle with Joe. Looking up from the child, Glen sees Wanda standing there and, feeling all his old affection for her sweeping over him, he takes her again in his arms.

ON Friday, October 16, the Essanay two-reel release will be "The Other Man," a tremendously dramatic subject from the pen of Maibelle Heikes Justice. Francis X. Bushman, Lilian Drew, Lester Cuneo and Thomas Commerford are the leading players and they are all seen to splendid advantage. Mildred Braddon, wife of a millionaire, is called to the telephone of her home and over the wires hears the well remembered voice of Harry Ross, her first husband, from whom she was divorced. She tries to prevent his seeing her, but that afternoon he calls. He then learns that her father, now dead, had been deeply in debt and when Frederick Braddon, the millionaire, came to his aid he had given him his daughter as a reward, compelling her to divorce Ross, the husband she really loved.

The old love returns for them both and Ross insists that she must meet him that night and that they must go away together. Bleeker, the faithful old butler, has seen and understood and as Mildred that night, suitcase in hand, attempts to steal away from the house, the butler appears with her little son in his arms. The situation changes and the baby's appeal wins Mildred over to a sense of her present responsibilities. Hours later Ross, waiting in the hotel for Mildred to appear, receives from Bleeker, the butler, a letter, a locket and a picture of Mildred's little boy. He understands and, brokenhearted, goes silently away.

IN "Broncho Billy Rewarded," the release of October 17, the Essanay Company offers another of the popular Broncho Billy series, in which G. M. Anderson as the town good-for-nothing earns a reward of $500 for bringing in a much wanted outlaw. The method by which he traps the bandit, alone and unaided, will prove a decided surprise.

One of the popular "Sweedie" comedies and another of the famous George Ade fables, "The Author, the Dear Public and the Plate of Mush," will also be among the week's offerings. The latter, according to the synopsis furnished by the Essanay publicity bureau, tells the story of Ernest Coppie, an author who is trying to grind out something that could be sold for enough coin to buy himself a good square meal. He dashed off some sentimental guff called "When Willie Came to say Good-night," and it was punk. He threw it in the waste basket, but when his friend came in he discovered it and set out to sell it. He finally found a magazine editor who gave him a check for $500 and it was like picking money off a bush. The author, who was an old bachelor and a kid hater, was tickled to death to get the dough, but when the letters came flocking in congratulating him on his excellent poem and sympathizing with him, he was bored to death. Mr. Coppie found a Chinaman at last who had not heard the pathetic poem, so he nabbed him for a companion and retired to the northern woods where he hoped never to hear of his literary efforts again. Moral: When the nation weeps, the Johnstown flood isn't a marker.

Advertising Tailpieces

The light and power department of the Fort Wayne Northern Indiana Traction Company is now advertising electric service at Fort Wayne by attaching motion pictures directly to the end of regular reels used in the theaters about the city. These advertising film inserts were taken especially for the purpose and show outside views of the company's reconstructed power house, interior views of the turbine room, the switching gallery and one of the traveling cranes. Being attached to the regular films and thrown on the screen without interruption, following the regular pictures, the scenes are received by the public without the resentment generally found where advertising slides are shown. In addition, they are intrinsically interesting. M. V. Stagg, under whose direction this work has been carried out, says that the company expects a fair return from this general publicity.

Hutchinson Returns from War Zone

Tells of Experiences

ALL'S well with the film world, even though the war in Europe is raising hob with certain European markets and entirely preventing film shipments to some of the warring nations, thinks S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, who is just home from the war zone.

"Film sales in England have actually increased since the war began," declared Mr. Hutchinson in an interview with a MOTOGRAPHY representative at the La Salle Hotel, on Tuesday afternoon. "We are able to market the usual output in London and are even making satisfactory shipments to Russia. South America, now totally cut off from its usual supply of French and German made pictures, will undoubtedly prove a wonderful market place for American made films and, once we get a foothold, I expect to see the American product hold its own thereafter, even when the European manufacturers can resume shipments."

S. S. Hutchinson.

Mr. Hutchinson, with his wife and two sons, was in Basle, or Bale, Switzerland, when war was declared and underwent some trying and, in certain instances, highly exciting adventures in getting safely out of Europe. "At first we didn't take the war seriously," explained Mr. Hutchinson, "as we anticipated nothing more awful than a little brush between Austria and Servian forces, but when Germany, Russia and the other nations were dragged into the fracas we decided it was time to get out of the country."

The Hutchinsons attempted first to cross the Rhine into Germany, but quickly discovered that such a route was anything but feasible, so the entire party hurried to Berne to secure their passports from the American consul there. Before leaving Basle, which is within about three miles of Mulhausen, the roar of the guns on the firing line could be heard and refugees from there began to arrive. Finding it then impossible to escape through France, on account of the mobilization of the troops which was then in progress, Mr. Hutchinson and his family resigned themselves to wait until things were restored to more nearly normal conditions. He pays glowing tributes to the Swiss for their kindness in extending credit to the travelers stranded in their midst and declares that but for this attitude on the part of the natives of Switzerland many Americans would have suffered. Fortunately Mr. Hutchinson himself was well provided with funds, and generously helped others less fortunate in getting out of the country and to points where they could communicate with friends or relatives.

Before leaving Switzerland Mr. Hutchinson witnessed the rare sight of quite 400,000 troops assembled in Berne, some 150,000 of whom there took the oath of allegiance to their flag. "I have rarely seen a more impressive sight than this splendid body of men all standing at salute, with their hands raised to the visors of their caps as they took the oath and saluted their ruler," he commented. "Their determination to defend their frontier against any of the contending armies was strongly expressed and they are well equipped to do it."

At the first opportunity the Hutchinson party made its way to Geneva and from there entrained for Paris. "That railway journey," says the American's president, "was as tedious a thing as I ever want to experience. We would go a little ways and then be sidetracked until sometimes as many as a dozen troop trains would pass us. Frequent stops were made at which the passports and credentials of all aboard the train were examined, and then we would go on to the next stopping place. In this journey we passed scores of trains bearing French troops, cannon, arms and equipment, all going to the front, and once we saw a trainload of German wounded. Passing through Dijon we entered Paris and from there went by way of Boulogne to England. Crossing the English channel was one of our most trying experiences, as thousands were attempting to get aboard the boat, and everyone had to have his credentials examined as he went up the gangplank and the crush resulted in many women fainting and many parties being separated."

Crossing the channel, Mr. Hutchinson encountered Jack Johnson and party, who were en route to England, and laughingly declares "Jack now claims he is an American. He used to boast of being a Frenchman, you remember, but fearful of being sent to the front, he hastened across to England and now boasts of being an American. Needless to say none of the Americans aboard the boat had anything to do with him."

Arrived in London, Mr. Hutchinson found things more quiet and he passed some three weeks making an auto tour of the southern portion of "the tight little isle." At Stratford on Avon the Hutchinson party put up at the Red Horse Tavern and were assigned the same rooms that were once occupied by Washington Irving. Mr. Hutchinson declares the tavern boasts of no electric lights or even lamps, big wax candles forming the only illumination. They motored leisurely from one point of interest to another, viewing all the cathedrals of note, inspecting this and that old ruin, and tramping out to historical spots when occasion demanded. Mr. Hutchinson thinks this part of the trip the most enjoyable of all the weeks spent abroad, although he emphatically declares that he would not have missed the exciting events on the continent for a good deal.

Speaking of the picture industry in London, the head of the American Film Company declares that the people seem to crave amusement, anything to get their minds off the war, and accordingly all the theaters are running full blast and all seem to be making money. War films are not in particular demand, as most of the patrons realize the scenes are not photographs of real conflicts, so dramas and comedies are to be seen everywhere.

Asked as to whether there was anything to the rumors that have reached this country about the passage of Russian troops through England, Mr. Hutchinson declared that in Bristol, the day he was there, it was well known that long troop trains bearing hundreds of thousands of Russian soldiers had been passing through that point for several days. Some of the Russian troops were transported across the channel on the Aquatania, the famous Cunard liner, and Mr. Hutchinson himself saw this boat, later on, with a huge hole stove in one side, where it had evidently been in collision with some other transport.

The trip to New York was made as a passenger aboard the Olympic, on which W. N. Selig also was a traveler, and even here adventure pursued the party, as the Olympic was stopped en route by a warship and on another day the passengers had a fire scare, when a small blaze was discovered, which, however, was extinguished before much damage had been done.

Needless to say Mr. Hutchinson and his family were almost as glad to reach Chicago, as their many friends are to have them safely back, and the genial head of the American Company is already up to his ears in work pertaining to the making of Beauty and American productions, for the big market he is sure American film manufacturers are going to have in South America and abroad even in spite of the war.

Another Producing Company

Filmdom was startled this week to learn of the advent of another new producing company. The new concern is to be known as the Dryeda Art Film Corporation and boasts of the following officers: Frank L. Dyer, president; J. Parker Read, Jr., vice president and general manager; J. Searle Dawley, director of productions, and H. J. Redfield, treasurer.

Mr. Dyer, the president of the company, needs no introduction to Motography's readers, as he will instantly be recalled as the former president of the Edison Company and the General Film Company. It is certain that any concern with which he is associated can be relied upon to offer nothing but the best in the way of photoplay productions.

J. Parker Read, Jr., is known the country over as the man who produced the screen version of "The Garden of Allah", "Victory" and other notable feature productions. J. Searle Dawley, former Edison director, and more recently in charge of some of the Famous Players' productions, is recognized as one of the best directors in the country and the films that leave the studio are consequently bound to be of first-class quality. quality.

Miss Laura Sawyer, former leading lady at the Edison studio under Director Dawley, and more recently the star of several Famous Players' productions, has been engaged as the leading lady of the Dryeda Art Film Corporation's stock company, and opposite her will be seen Robert Broderick, an actor well known to the legitimate stage and with not a little photoplay experience.

The Dryeda Film Corporation has obtained the old Reliance studios at Yonkers, and already a mammoth production to be called "In the Name of the Prince of Peace," is said to have been completed. The channel through which the Dryeda productions will be released has not yet been revealed, but it is understood that already several offers have been received from various concerns now engaged in placing full programs on the market, one among them coming from the Paramont Film Corporation.

Marguerite Clark in "Wildflower"

Marguerite Clark, one of the more youthful idols of the contemporary stage, who has within an incredibly short time won a vast national following, makes her initial appearance in motion pictures in the Famous Players Film Company's four-part production, "Wildflower," an enchanting story by Mary Gormaino.

The story deals with the love of two brothers for the same woman, always a vitally interesting theme, but in the present instance magnified by the fortunate selection of Marguerite Clark for the portrayal of the principal character, the delicate little forest flower.

The plot presents a pleasant and dramatic contrast between the open spaces of the wilds, and the narrow streets and habits of the city. In both elements, Wildflower goes through an individual development, an advancement marked by stress and anguish and personal disaster, but lightened occasionally by the freedom and relief of her early environment, the woods.

The brothers that woo her are as different as the settings about which the story revolves. One is selfish, roguish, inconsiderate and evil, the other is splendidly straightforward and generous. The drama gains in suspense and climactic value by reason of the fact that the little untutored wildflower, in the ignorance and innocence of her ways, selects the worse man for her mate. But as good will triumph, in the final reckoning she spurns the evil brother, having at last discovered that his love is spurious, and marries the other.

"Wildflower" is a refreshing zephyr from the wooded hills that form the early abode of the little character. It transforms the screen into a mirror in which is reflected the purity of the great outdoors and the shallowness of human life. The production is mounted with splendid fidelity to the types and the places that the story describes; and the cast in support of Marguerite Clark is consistent and capable, including such well known photo-players as Harold Lockwood, James Cooley and E. L. Davenport. The production is in four reels.

Endanger Lives for Realistic Picture

Five Vitagraph players, including Earle Williams, narrowly escaped drowning when they attempted to stage a realistic water scene near Milltown, N. J., this week. A train was run off a bridge into a small lake and the actors dove into the water to give the effect that they were being rescued from the sinking coaches. The water proved deeper and colder than they had anticipated, however, and they were seized with cramps. Their rescue was effected with great diffculty. The scene will be used in a coming production "The Juggernaut."

N. Edward Milligan, head producer of the Liberty studio, is making preparations to leave for Newport, R. I., with a large company to film a number of stories amid naval atmosphere.

A WAR TAX

IT is proposed, in House Bill 18891, "To increase the internal revenue and for other purposes," to impose a tax on theaters and places of amusement as provided in the sixth section of the bill as follows:

Proprietors of theaters, museums and concert halls in cities having more than fifteen thousand population as shown by the last preceding United States census, shall pay $100. Every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays or performances, for admission to which entrance money is received, not including halls rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, shall be regarded as a theater.

Some of the internal revenue offices have talked to newspapers on this subject and have expressed the opinion that the motion picture theaters (which did not exist at the time of the Spanish-American war tax seventeen years ago) will increase the revenue of the government enormously. That in itself should be sufficient evidence that a flat $100 tax is unjust. And a flat tax seems to be the purpose of the bill.

The exemption of theaters in towns of less than 15,000 population would appear to indicate that the framers of the bill either had no thought of the picture theaters, or no knowledge of their peculiarities. There are hundreds of such theaters in New York and Chicago alone whose size, investment and income are smaller than those of some theaters in towns of 10,000. Seventeen years ago the theater tax did little harm, because there were no small theaters. Today a flat rate of $100 will work incalculable harm among the modest little picture houses with which the outlying districts of the large cities are so familiar.

The neighborhood picture theater, from the viewpoint of investment and income, is in the same class with the small restaurant, delicatessen, candy kitchen, or other local enterprise. It is just as hard a struggle to make the little theater profitable as it is any other little store serving the neighboring community. Just as many, or more, picture theater efforts are failures as in any other localized industry.

It is no more just to tax the small picture theater $100 than it would be to tax the neighborhood drug store, cigar stand, candy kitchen, shoe shop and delicatessen $100 each. The conditions of their custom and income are the same.

A man who is reputed to be wealthy sometimes finds the reputation embarrassing, especially when he is called upon to support some project with a donation which, while supposedly within his means, is really away beyond him. The motion picture business has acquired the name, among laymen, of being a get-rich-quick business. The average patron of a picture theater takes it for granted that the exhibitor is making a great deal of money. And this in spite of the fact that he sees at least one of the theaters in any neighborhood close up or change hands with tolerable frequency. The fact is that the average small theater, whose owner acts as manager, pays him only a fair salary for his time plus a few per cent on his small investment. A hundred dollar tax on such an institution is, to speak plainly, an outrage.

It should be thoroughly understood that the motion picture exhibitor has no wish to shirk his duty in the matter of a war tax. He is as ready as any—and more willing than some—to contribute his full share to meet the extra expense which his country has innocently incurred. All he asks is a just and equitable division of the tax, a sum that will not amount to confiscation of part of his property. Secretary Bry-lawski of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the District of Columbia, in a letter sent to every member of the United States Senate, offers the following example of a sliding scale of taxation, as an arrangement satisfactory to the exhibitors:

Theaters seating less than 300	$ 25
Theaters seating 300 to 500	50
Theaters seating 500 to 1,000	75
Theaters seating more than 1,000	100

Even this we consider a generous offer, and one which will bring an enormous revenue into the government treasury. And we have no doubt that this arrangement will be regarded with favor by the lawmakers, when they have been made sufficiently acquainted with picture theater conditions to realize the utter impossibility of a $100 flat tax. For only lack of information could have been responsible for such a proposal in the first place.

ENCOURAGING PANIC

EVERY city official has his own ideas on the improvement of the picture theater. One in Syracuse, N. Y., now comes forward with an interesting scheme for holding fire drills in the show houses of that town. The idea is to get the people in the theaters trained so that they can rush out into the street with neatness and celerity, and with the least possible number of broken limbs.

What a broad-minded idea this is! Now the irresponsible boys and the half-wits can have their innings. They can shout "fire!" to their heart's content, encouraged by the Syracuse Department of Public Safety, whose representative will stand by with a stop watch and a copy of "First Aid to the Injured" to check up the results for his annual report. The fact that each theater will have a different crowd every time the fire drill stunt is pulled off will make the event just that much more interesting. Most of them will not know what all the excitement is about and will take it for a real fire. The joke will be on them, especially if they break a leg without any occasion for it.

We never have any real fires in picture theaters any more, and the average show house is safer than a church. The Syracuse idea is to conceal that fact, and make the people believe that going to a picture theater is a dangerous adventure, to be undertaken only after due preparation and schooling in the art of the dexterous getaway. In effect the Department of Public Safety would say to the public: "Do not enter a picture theater until you have learned to skip out again instantaneously when it catches fire, as it will some of these days."

When there is a theater fire—not a picture theater, but any theater—the people are in no danger from the flames. They do not get burned; they get trampled, crushed, suffocated. A false alarm of fire will do as much for them in that line as a real one. A "fire drill" in a theater is just as dangerous as a cry of fire, and a thousand times more dangerous than any possibility of actual fire in a modern house.

One exhibitor in Syracuse has already called the fire drill scheme "preposterous." It is at least that.

Charlotte Burton of the "Flying A," usually visits the script editor's office about once a week. She is always welcome for she brings ideas that are usually taken advantage of.

Street Car Plunges into Ravine

Thrilling Eclectic Features

THE new four part Eclectic feature, "A Prince of India," leaves one awed by the sudden and terrible punishment visited upon a "gentleman" crook when the street car in which he is riding runs wild, crashes through a bridge railing, and is dashed to pieces in the bottom of the gorge two hundred feet below. The leap forms the climax of a series of exciting events and, though it is gradually led up to and strictly in line with the developments of the story, one is not prepared for anything quite so realistic and thrilling and cannot restrain a gasp as the trolley car is seen to leave the tracks and plunge through the side of the bridge.

The story is well balanced and sustains interest from the first scene. In retrospect one feels that he has seen four solid reels of well-regulated action interpreting a substantial plot. This picture is a feature. It is not reliant upon its overwhelming thrill to justify its existence. The trolley car's leap is a spectacular luxury as the climax merely calls for a strong ending in which the thief shall be bodily destroyed. But since the car was destroyed to satisfy this end it has a box office attractive power over and above that which the film would have without so awe-inspiring an ending.

The wild car plunges from the bridge in Eclectic's "A Prince of India."

The final scene is decidedly novel. It shows the heel of the prince's shoe crushing the rose given him by the girl whose winning ways and beauty led him into the thief's trap, and in a vision at the side is seen the girl, whose personality the rose represents, writhing in anguish.

Among the members of the cast of this fine production, which was filmed by the Whartons, are screen artists whose names and ability are familiar to thousands throughout the country. Thurlow Bergen plays the titular role with all the dignity and strength that it requires. As a well-dressed and brainy crook, William Riley Hatch's work is beyond criticism, and Billy Mason is equally good in the important but less exacting role of the young reporter. To Elsie Esmond is due the praise merited by the clever impersonation of the Countess Mirska. M. O. Penn is majestic in his characterization of the rajah.

The rajah rejoices over his son's escape from death.

Until its release it was the intention to name the picture "The Kiss of Death," and most of the publicity sent out during its production was distributed under that name.

A rajah and his son visit a small town and become the principal topic of conversation through their possession of a wonderful diamond known as "The Kiss of Death." The prince becomes intimately acquainted with a young reporter and, owing to his efforts, meets the "Countess Mirska," the female confederate of a trio of crooks who plan to become the possessors of the rajah's jewel. The prince falls in love with the woman, and secretly takes the diamond from the strong-box when she begs the privilege of seeing it. The other two crooks think to take advantage of this opportunity by inviting the prince into the hotel cafe. At the last moment the reporter becomes a member of the party.

The diamond is again exhibited and this time disappears. This causes a break between the thieves as each accuses the other of taking it. On retiring the reporter discovers the precious stone in the cuff of his trousers. He rushes back to the hotel but the prince is not in his room. Afraid to give it to the rajah for fear of getting the prince in trouble the young fellow decides to wait until morning and stays at the hotel. During the night he walks out on the balcony and drops the diamond over the railing. It lands at the feet of the prince who is too upset to go to bed. He does not retain possession of it long for Harley sees it in his hand, knocks him unconscious, and attempts to escape with the jewel.

Moreland prevents this, obtaining it himself. The rajah, prince, and reporter call on Moreland early in the morning, but too late to catch him. They take up the pursuit in an automobile and overtake the crook who has turned a trolley car to his own use in his flight. The prince leaps onto the platform, wrests the diamond from Moreland, and jumps from the wild car just before it leaves the tracks and plunges through the bridge's railing into the ravine below. The rajah forgets his wrath at the diamond's removal in his joy at his son's escape.

THE Comedy-Francaise favorites and stars of the Pathe Paris stock company, Rene Alexander and Gabrielle Robinne, share dramatic honors with M. Magnier in the Eclectic three-reel drama, "King of the Air." Generally these two stars occupy first place by unanimous consent, prompted, of course, by their part and the ability with which they portray it, but in this picture there is a third vital role, and Magnier's interpretation of it merits him unlimited praise. He is really more natural and unconstrained in his expressions and gestures than either Alexander or Robinne.

The success of the picture depends almost solely upon the interpretative ability of its cast, for the action of itself is neither fast nor direct enough to carry one's interest. The crises are "put over" entirely by the exertion of the players.

A race between an aeroplane and a train occupies a prominent place among the events. It ends in an accident that is not faked, but an actual occurrence at a French aero meet. The aeronaut was killed in the casualty, his machine striking the ground with its fore wings, pinning him underneath. The substitution of Alexander, here, is cleverly made.

The photography is excellent. It is a positive pleasure to see, and a rock-bottom asset as a recommendation being of a soft sepia tint and registering every detail and relative change in color and shade of the interior settings. A picture so photographically perfect as this is rare, even in this day of advanced photography.

Louise's mother invests in a wild-cat speculation against the advice of Banker Devernis. His son, Marc, is engaged to Louise, but is forbidden marrying her by his father when her mother loses all of her money through the foolish investment. Louise becomes a hospital nurse and is assigned to the field corps on the day of the great aero meet. Marc is one of the entrants and wins the race, but sustains serious injury when his machine gets beyond his control and plunges headlong to the ground. Louise is shocked at sight of the injured man, but nevertheless is calm enough to render the surgeon invaluable aid. As a result of his quick and careful treatment Marc is soon able to leave his bed.

He writes Louise asking her to be his wife in spite of his father's objections, but she refuses, stating that it is his duty to obey his parent's wishes. The banker sees the letter, recognizes the handwriting, and opens it. The self-sacrificing spirit of the writer overcomes his former objections, and he gladly consents to the marriage.

The action is quick at all times and in many instances strenuous. The characters are distinctly German, and the sub-titles, a direct translation from the language of that country, are marked by the backwards effect in the word arrangement which new-comers invariably use in learning the English language.

The plot is not deep but it is well constructed and runs smoothly considering the conflicting developments.

Oscar Died-Rich wills his nephew, Fritz Wagner, a million dollars on the condition that he marry off his cousins, the Misses Mousetail, within a month. Fritz has never seen either his uncle or the cousins referred to, but willingly undertakes the task outlined for him. He calls at the apartment building in which his cousins live and is directed to the "second door left." It happens that as he ascends in the elevator, which is a dumb-waiter arrangement his two cousins descend on the other side.

Fritz, confused, knocks at the "second door right." He is ushered into the apartment of two dashing young girls, the Misses Lovealittle and Lovealot of the Powder Puff burlesque troupe. He takes it for granted that they are his cousins and explains his arrangements for their marriage. It is not in their nature to spoil a good joke like that and they lead him on in his mistakes.

The results from this mix-up are a whirl of merriment. Uncle Oscar becomes involved in it under an assumed name and is several times denounced by his nephew, whose identity is known to him. While on one of his trips up to the girls' apartment Fritz meets his real cousins and falls in love with one of them, a friend folowing suit with the other. It is not until he becomes engaged that he learns their name.

In the final scene Uncle Oscar receives the shock of his life when he learns that his two "angels" are not his nieces, and that he must pay the million anyway as per contract.

Lester Cuneo, a recent addition to the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company and a graduate of musical comedy, is doing some wonderful character acting, his work in "The Plum Tree" and "A Splendid Dishonor" being very impressive.

Young Officer Embarrassed by Baby

Frankness Averts Scandal

"BOOTLES' BABY" is a two-part Edison drama based upon a man's refusal to recognize his wife or contribute to the support of her or her baby. The action takes place in a foreign military encampment, and is made interesting by the baby's falling into the hands of a young officer who cares for it, and who later meets and falls in love with its mother, without being aware of her relationship to the child.

Gilchrist confesses all ere he dies.

Mabel Trunnelle as Grace Gilchrist, Robert Conness as Algernon Ferrers, otherwise known as "Bootles," and Herbert Prior as George Gilchrist, make a splendid trio for the leading parts. The photography is well beyond criticism, and the furnishing of the settings and clever handling of the scenes bespeaks infinite care on the part of Director Ashley Miller. October 23 is the date on which this Edison picture will be released.

Because of his surly disposition George Gilchrist is shunned by his fellow officers. One day his wife, Grace, meets him on the grounds near the place of encampment and begs him to acknowledge her or at least contribute to the support of her and the baby, but in vain.

Unable to support the baby herself, she steals into her husband's room and places it on the bed. He is mystified at first by the appearance of the little girl in his room, but understands it all on reading the note pinned to its coat. It states that he will have to take care of the child until he agrees to recognize its mother and contribute to their support. Gilchrist destroys the envelope, pins the note to the child's coat and leaves it in the room of Ferrers, nicknamed Bootles.

Bootles tells everybody about finding the little girl, and exhibits the note. His frank avowal of ignorance as to the identity of the writer dispels the suspicions which were at first aroused and the adjutant's wife helps him find a governess for the little girl who has become known as "Bootles' Baby."

Several years pass during which time Bootles has become greatly attached to his adopted girl. By this time the novelty of the child's presence has worn off, and both Bootles and his favorite have become slander's target. One of the most bitter of these backbiters is Gilchrist. At a reception held in the adjutant's home the wealthy Countess Gorboulska is one of the guests. Her maid, Grace Gilchrist, accompanies her. Bootles' sympathy is aroused by Grace's depressed mood which is caused by the remembrances and regrets that the sight of her little girl recall. Sympathy leads to love, and Bootles proposes to the maid, but is refused.

Before the termination of the Countess' stay, Gilchrist is fatally injured in a steeplechase. His last words are a confession of being the little girl's father. The mother's identity, however, still remains a mystery. A few days later Bootles receives a written request to return the child to its mother who will be found waiting in the reception room of a certain hotel. The young officer is heart-broken at the thought of parting with his favorite, but complies with the request. To his surprise the mother proves to be the maid with whom he is in love. Nothing stands between their marriage now.

Detective Boyd is consulted.

Bootles meets the mother of the baby.

"THE CASE OF THE VANISHED BONDS" is an Edison detective story of the Sherlock Holmes type. The detective's assistant and the spectators are furnished with the same clues that aid the detective in solving the puzzle, but cannot understand how he draws his conclusions until he, himself, explains it in the last half of the picture, the robbery being re-enacted in his vision while explaining.

It is a one-reel picture and will be released on October 17. The first scene shows the two expert thieves, Wyckoff and Gorman, conferring as to the best way of relieving Mr. Gale's messenger of the $150,000 worth of bonds which they have been informed are to be taken to the bank that morning. Their plan is quickly formed, and as quickly worked out. Wyckoff, who, by the way, has become known in the commercial world as a wealthy broker to hide his real profession, meets the messenger and detains him by asking for a number of quotations.

The messenger sets down his satchel and looks for the information in his note-book. The scene of this meeting is in front of a half finished building. The satchel, which has been set down on the steps, disappears through an opening beneath the railing and a moment later is replaced. The messenger does not discover the loss of the bonds until he reaches the bank. A young detective, Felix Boyd, is called in on the case and, after hearing the story, decides to run down his first clue, Wyckoff. As is usually the case, Wyckoff, the leader, escapes, but his accomplice is killed in the struggle which follows the discovery of the bonds in the basement of the new building.

When it was all over Jimmie Coleman, Boyd's assistant, wishes to know how it was accomplished; he having only obeyed the orders given him, finding nothing on which he could work of his own initiative. As they talk the case over in Boyd's apartment the detective explains how the robbery actually occurred.

JEALOUSY and political intrigue are the two negatives from which the positives, or action and complications are created in Edison's "The Letter That Never Came Out," a one-reel drama to be released October 13.

Briefly, the story is of a coquette who fails in her attempt to ensnare the man she wishes. She marries his friend, and succeeds in causing a misunderstanding between the man who had eluded her and his fiancee. Forrest, the newly-wed, receives a letter of congratulation from his friend Harn. Four years later the two men are rivals for candidacy in the coming election. A newspaper exposes Forrest as a grafter. Angered at the success this will bring to Harn, Mrs. Forrest, the coquette, unearths the letter of congratulation and sends it to the newspaper office. If printed, it will spoil Harn's chances entirely, but before accepting this responsibility the editor seeks proof as to its genuineness. Through the efforts of Harn's former fiancee the letter is suppressed. This brings about their re-union and marriage.

Explaining Inactivity

From its headquarters in the Marlborough-Blenheim Hotel, at Broadway and Thirty-sixth street, New York City, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York is sending out a circular explaining the reasons for the seeming inactivity of the Association and League members insofar as meetings tending toward amalgamation are concerned.

This circular letter reads as follows:

Strenuous efforts are being made in this state to bring about an amalgamation of all exhibitors, in accordance with the spirit of the letter of the resolution passed at the last national convention at Dayton. The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York has held several informal meetings with representatives of the Cinema Club, which forms a part of the membership of the League. The reason that no definite results have been accomplished so far is to be found in the attitude of A. N. Wolff, president of the New York State Branch of the M. P. E. L. of A. Mr. Wolff has been requested by officers and numerous members of the New York State League and also the executive committee of the New York State Association to call a meeting to carry out the work of amalgamation and hold an election of officers for the combined organizations. To this request Mr. Wolff has turned a deaf ear and as far as is known has assigned no reasons for his refusal to act. Until such a meeting is called the work or organization in this state is practically halted and there is no strong united body of exhibitors such as would benefit the exhibitors.

Steps are now being taken to propose to the members of the State League that they exercise their right under the by-laws, permitting them to call a special meeting in case the president refuses to do so upon reasonable requests. Agitation looking toward the accomplishment of this end has been started in this city and it is believed that the national president is in favor of such a move, as it would undoubtedly contribute towards the clearing of a situation which all exhibitors feel is beginning to weaken the League. During his recent stay in New York this fact was greatly emphasized by one of the national officers, who went on record as saying the the rest of the country looked to New York for an example of peace, harmony and amalgamation.

Lubin Release Contains Strong Story

"Marah" the Pythoness

WITH gripping dramatic action in every important scene and beautiful settings appearing through the entire three reels the special release of the Lubin Manufacturing Company, now being distributed by the General Film Company, is a production of exceptional strength. The story was written by Clay M. Greene and Joseph W. Smiley produced it.

Marah Deane is known as "The Pythoness" because a tame pythoness is her constant companion. She has many suitors, and finally chooses a rich man named John Sewell. Becoming ambitious to have a portrait painted, in which she shall appear fondling her serpent pet, Sewell writes to a friend of his, Jules Lestrange, a young artist, offering him the commission. Jules lives in comfortable quarters adjoining his studio with his mother Prudence and Marie Dalton, formerly his model but now companion for his mother and his promised wife.

Sewell's letter brings great joy into the Lestrange family, for it is an opportunity that will secure him both fame and fortune and he sets out for his first interview with his subject. Marah the Pythoness is charmed by the appearance of the poetical young man, so different from any of her present friends, and he at once becomes hopelessly enraptured with her.

The sittings for the picture are many, and these are often interrupted by communings with each other, until after a time, the artist neglects his mother and fiance, being seldom seen at home except to sleep. But his mother and fiance have a firm friend in Doctor Rowell, a noted physician, who during the widowhood of Prudence, has come every day with a bouquet of flowers, and an offer of marriage, only to be refused, because she is still true to the memory of her husband.

The doctor has the entree to the house and entertainments given by the pythoness, Marah, and expresses the opinion that he can induce Jules to overcome his evident love for her, and awaken him to the fact that he has neglected those who are nearer and dearer to him. His efforts, however, are unsuccessful and he is compelled to return to the artist's now unhappy home and report that the poor boy has really succumbed to the wiles of the temptress.

The picture is finished and exhibited at a reception. The success of the artist seems to draw Marah closer to him, much to the rage and consternation of Sewell, who resolves to break the tie between them.

Dr. Rowell warns Jules against Marah.

A similar vow is made by the doctor, who enlists in his service Jeanne Druce, a butterfly in Marah's Bohemian circles, and she, taking Jules to a remote place in the reception room, tells him that he must cease all hope of ever winning Marah, since she will marry Jack Sewell and is only flirting.

In an interview with Marah, Jules is told that it is only him she loves, and that she does not intend to marry Sewell. This interview is heard by the jealous Sewell, and while Marah is bidding her guests farewell for the night, he meets his artist rival in Marah's den, and draws his pistol to shoot him. Jules is unarmed and it is decided to flip a coin to see who will win the loaded pistol.

Jules loses the toss, Sewell deliberately aims at him and fires. Marah comes into the room, and while horrified at the plight of her lover decides that the episode must not become known. It being discovered that Jules is probably not fatally wounded, he is taken at dead of night to Sewell's yacht, and Sewell, Marah and a doctor sail away with him to save his life. He lingers between life and death for several weeks, and in the meantime, the mystery of his disappearance has caused his mother to fall seriously ill, and her life is despaired of. Many letters from Marie and Doctor Rowell have been written to Jules, but have been intercepted and destroyed.

On recovery from his long siege of illness, Jules finds himself less in love with Marah, and full of remorse for his treatment of his family. One day while sunning himself on the dock of the yacht, he sees in the personal columns of a newspaper this notice: Pythoness—Why are all letters to artist unanswered? Tell him mother is dying.—Suddenly the truth flashes upon him, and he insists upon going ashore, which he does, accompanied by Marah who refuses to be left alone, her object being to thwart his plans.

At the same time Doctor Rowell secures the services of the police in trying to find Jules for the suffering mother has passed away. Jules comes ashore on the day of her funeral. Marah succeeds in convincing the police that she knows nothing of the whereabouts of Jules, and sends for Sewell, who repulses her and leaves her with no companion but her Oriental servants and her pet serpent.

Jules arrives at home just at Doctor Rowell and Sewell finds Jules and Marah together.

Marie are returning from the funeral of his mother, and is crushed by the awful news. After a sleepless night, he rises early, goes to a drawer in his neglected studio and taking from it his pistol, is about to kill himself, when Marie appears and convinces him that he has something to live for after all. On the same morning Marah's faithful servant Hassan, who during the entire story is scarcely ever away from her, goes to awaken her and finds her dead with the fatal folds of the python about her neck, a just retribution for a life of avarice, deceit and sin.

Whose the Credit?

It is not difficult, usually, to say to whom belongs the greatest share of credit for making a photo-play a success—whether it be the director, the actor, or the author. In the case of "The Beloved Adventurer," the unique fifteen-reel series released by Lubin, which began on September 14, opinions will probably differ as to whether the laurels should rest upon the brow of Arthur V. Johnson, who directed as well as played the leading part in the series, or Emmett Campbell Hall, the author.

As a matter of fact, the work of neither could have resulted in the masterly result appearing on the screen without that of the other. As a perfect harmonizing of the actor's and author's arts, "The Beloved Adventurer" may serve as a model, and well illustrates the correctness of the contention that to attain the highest degree of perfection, a play must be written specifically for pre-determined actors, or at least that when a single character dominates the drama, the personality of the actor who is to portray that character must be thoroughly familiar to the author. When stage portrayal reaches its ultimate triumph, the actor is no longer "playing a part"—for the time being he is actually, in spirit and emotions, the character he represents. Genius is capable of subordinating its own individuality to an amazing degree, but if the man of fancy and the man of reality do not possess kindred characteristics, the task is a difficult one—the actor must "act" instead of live his part.

"The Beloved Adventurer," despite the thrilling rush of its action and startling situations, is, primarily, a character study. "Lord Cecil" himself is the real theme of the master-story which dominates, without subjugating, the unit-stories of the individual reels. On the success of this character depends the success of the idea as a whole. A "Lord Cecil" with the slightest hint of artificiality would have reduced "The Beloved Adventurer" to the plane of merely interesting—perhaps thriling—romance of technical excellence. As Arthur Johnson has interpreted the character, the series is a work of art so true that actuality seems to replace make-believe—this Lord Cecil is a man we will remember and love as though he had been, in truth, someone we had known in actual life.

The explanation is simple. Mr. Hall created a character which afforded Mr. Johnson an almost perfect opportunity for the display of his remarkable and unique genius—conditions were made most favorable for the unhampered exercise of his talents. Instead of being forced to adapt himself to a fictional personality of inharmonious characteristics, he was able to devote all his energies to filling in and coloring a sketch, the primary outlines of which were especially suited to his method of development.

Vitagraph Star Celebrates Birthday

Margaret Gibson, the little Vitagraph star, heading the Santa Monica organization in California, celebrated her nineteenth birthday on Monday, September 14, by giving an informal house warming in her new bungalow. Miss Gibson, or "Gibby," as she is generally known, was born in Colorado Springs, Colo., in 1895. As a baby, she was carried on the stage, and at the age of three, she spoke her first lines, strangely enough in the town in which she was born. Her parents were playing another engagement in Colorado Springs at the time of her professional debut. Since then, her life has been one long succession of hotels and theaters. Her one desire to have a home of her own prompted her to enter pictures. She has been able to buy some property and build her bungalow according to her own ideas.

Ethel Barrymore Makes Screen Debut

Stars in "The Nightingale"

AT last an expectant film public is being given "The Nightingale," a five-part All Star Feature Corporation release, featuring Ethel Barrymore in the title rolè. And the Ethel of the screen is the same Ethel whom the public has ever adored, so natural and so comprehensive is her portrayal of the role of the Italian girl who, first a street singer, studies abroad and becomes a famed prima donna—the "Nightingale" they call her—and who later renounces this calling for that of wife and mother. As the "Nightingale," she is known throughout the story and in this character the interest centers particularly.

The scenario was written especially for Miss Barrymore by Augustus Thomas. Had the latter concentrated only upon the career of the wonderful singer the "Nightingale" rather than introducing many other threads into the story, the film would have gained in strength and coherence. But whatever improvement might be made in the story, none could be made in the splendid work of Miss Barrymore. This, her introduction to the screen public, is one that bespeaks her right to again appear through this medium. And there is always a welcome assured the artist who has won the right to come back.

William Courtleigh, Jr., does commendable work in the role of the "Nightingale's" father. Conway Tearle as Charles Marden, a young banker, gives Miss Barrymore strong support and Frank Andrews, whose attire was rather too faultless considering his role, plays that of the singer's brother.

The locale of the story, at the start, is the Italian settlement disrict. Here Isola Franti, her father and brother live. The father owns a grind-organ and monkey. Isola possesses a beautiful voice and the brother spends his time in cafes. One day, Charles Marden hears the girl sing and asks David Mantz, a musical educator to locate her, Marden offering to pay for her tuition. Mantz finds Isola but her father refuses the offer of a musical education for his daughter and the latter, disheartened, accepts Mantz's card and keeps it.

A little later, the singer's father is killed by a black hand society and, after dividing her father's small savings equally with her brother, Isola calls on Mantz and her lessons begin. Daily she meets Marden and their friendship grows. Then comes Mantz's suggestion of Paris study for the girl and she accepts. Her progress under Jean De Resni's instruction is rapid and brings Marden to Paris in time for her debut as "Aida."

After the opera, Marden accompanies her home and terrifies the girl by an impassioned burst of affection. She repulses him and he tells her that as his money is paying for her instruction, she belongs to him. Isola orders him out and, herself, disappears the next day. Marden and De Resni finally locate her singing in a cabaret. De Resni shows her an offer sent her for a New York opening and she accepts. Her New York debut is one of triumph and is followed by her reception of a note from Marden in which he asks her pardon and the honor of making her his wife. She consents, and a happy year brings her and Marden a son.

From time to time she is beset by requests for money from her brother and each time complies. Then comes the murder and robbery of Marden's father. Isola's brother again sends a request for help. She responds in person and on his dresser finds the scarf-pin given to Marden senior by her own little son. She realizes her brother's guilt and turns to leave but is confronted by her husband and a detective whom he had follow his wife on her secret visits to her brother, whom Marden had never met. Isola refuses to divulge the identity of her brother and Marden returns home, takes his son and leaves for his country house.

One day he reads of the death of Andrea Franti and learns that he is Isola's brother. Returning to the city with his son, he seeks Isola and asks her forgiveness. She extends it and with her husband and son restored to her, life has a more peaceful outlook than "the Nightingale" has ever known.

Death of Edwin Barbour

Edwin Barbour, eminent actor and playwright, passed away Monday, September 14, at 2 p. m., after a long illness. Mr. Barbour was one of the old pioneers of the western show route, playing his companies between Chicago and the Pacific coast. He wrote many plays, including "The White Squadron," "The Land of the Midnight Sun" and a successful dramatization of "She." For the past three years he has been connected with the Lubin studio at Philadelphia.

Contract has been entered into between the Life Photo Film Corporation and Maldonado & Co., for the sale of the entire output of the features of the former concern for the South American republics.

A Thrilling Ramo Feature

An interesting and spectacular release is the six-reel feature "The War of Wars," which is being exploited by the Ramo Company, and which appeals as being so typically foreign that it is difficult to realize that any of its settings were made in America and that all of its principals are of this country. There is much of genuine foreign make incorporated in the film, however, the story of which is that of the play "The Conquerors," which had a long and successful American run. Equal in interest to the military nature of the release, which gives the latter its name, is that of the romance, which brings a happy terminus to the story. Brisk action, clear photography, and variety of plot are the chief qualifications of this drama of war and romance.

The tale is that of a battle between the French and Germans during which the Chateau de Grandpre is taken over by the German officers as their headquarters. Hugo de Grandpre has escaped the enemy and hurried to French headquarters, leaving his sisters, Yvonne and Babiole at the Chateau. They resent the destruction of their home treasures at the ruthless hands of the army pet Eric, called "the Babe." The latter visits the Inn, meets some dancing girls and brings them to dinner at the Chateau. In the midst of the festivities, Yvonne enters and when the Babe refuses to move his party, she throws a glass of wine in his face. Enraged he threatens her and the party breaks up, the soldiers escorting the dancing girls to the Inn. There, Yvonne has come in answer to a secret message from her brother who, already arrived, has fallen asleep awaiting her and Yvonne waits in another room, not knowing of her brother's arrival. The dancing girls desert the soldiers and "the Babe" plans to be alone with Yvonne by getting rid of the other soldiers. Hugo de Grandpre tires of waiting and emerges from his room.

Eric unlocks the door for him, indicating with a smile the closed door of Yvonne, and Hugo departs.

Yvonne also tires of waiting and starts to leave. She is intercepted by Eric who says he is there to claim vengeance. When hope seems to have deserted her, Yvonne makes a last appeal to the soldier's manhood by a reference to his sisters, and, seeing himself the cad he has become, the soldier shame-facedly takes his departure, leaving the girl whom he now respects, to a danger as great as the one from which she has just escaped. For Bebeche, the innkeeper, who has long been enamored of Yvonne, though he is married to her foster sister, approaches from behind the girl's chair and seizes her. Thinking it is Eric returned, Yvonne screams and faints. Eric, hearing the scream, returns and kills Bebeche.

Yvonne finds the dead body of the innkeper, when she awakes, and hurries to the chateau to inform her brother and Bebeche's wife of the tragedy. Hugo, believing that Bebeche died in defense of his sister starts out to find Eric and shoot him. Yvonne precedes him, however, and stabs the Babe in the back. Later she finds a note on the soldier written to his father, telling why he killed the innkeper. Turning his champion, Yvonne defends him against her brother, and is ordered shot by the French commander but escapes under cover of the evening attack. Eric, though wounded, volunteers to perform a dangerous duty and wins renown for his company. Returning to the chateau, he finds it on fire, rescues Yvonne and their happiness is predicted for the time when the "War of Wars" shall have begotten peace.

Strong Cast in Coming Selig Feature

The cast of Selig's "The Carpet from Bagdad" includes Kathlyn Williams playing "Fortune Chedsoye," and Charles Clary, her ancient enemy of the notable "Adventures of Kathyn." Guy Oliver, leading man of Director LeSaint's company, has been drafted into service as Ryanne, the gentleman crook of the story, while Eugenie Besserer, the remarkable French actress, is cast for Mrs. Chedsoye, the arch "crookess" of this smooth, society gang. Wheeler Oakman plays "Jones," the rug collector.

Kleine opens Boston Office

George Kleine has opened a new office in Boston, Mass., to handle his line of attractions throughout New England. The office will be in charge of W. R. Marston at 597 Washington street. Mr. Marston will have the entire list of Kleine attractions, including some recent releases which has not yet been shown in that territory. Mr. Marston is well known in the film business and particularly in New England, having traveled among exhibitors in those states for some years.

Picture Filmed Despite Reverses

Directors' Troubles Numerous

ON Saturday, September 12, the street of Edgewater, New Jersey, was crowded. To one who has never visited Edgewater this may bear no significance, but when it is explained that the town has but one street which is really that, though several little roads branching from it and retreating towards the Palisades are endeavoring to earn the name, it is safe to guess that something unusual was transpiring on or near the thoroughfare.

The reason for all this crush on a plain, ordinary day was that T. Hays Hunter, director-in-chief for the Colonial Motion Picture Corporation, was staging a battle scene for its nine-reel masterpiece, "The Seats of the Mighty," and had assembled some four hundred or more men in British, French, Highlander, and Indian fighting togs.

Edgewater occupies only the west side of its street, the east side being a slope ending at the bank of the Hudson River. As the street continues north from the ferry landing this sloping wedge becomes wider and wider until, some distance up, it ends in a big bluff whose jagged, rock-strewn face rises almost perpendicularly to a distance of several hundred feet above the river. It was this spot that Mr. Hunter chose as the background for his reproduction of the taking of Quebec by the British. The position is an admirable one for its purpose and should make a realistic and impressing picture.

At first the place came very near being the scene of a revolution instead of its precedent, the French-British war of 1759. It seems that Hunter and an agency man misunderstood each other in their arrangements to secure supers, and as a result when the party gathered together on the New York side of the

The landing of the English forces.

Fort Lee ferry landing there were about six hundred men present instead of the four hundred that were needed. Ferry tickets had ben purchased in accordance to the number of uniforms on hand, and these were dealt out while they lasted. The remainder of the men purchased tickets themselves, followed Hunter's party over to Edgewater, and, when the camera was set up and work about to be started they threatened to spoil the picture, smash the camera, and tear Hunter into little bits of pieces if they wern't paid for a full day's work.

A realistic battle scene from "The Seats of the Mighty"

Lionel Barrymore, the company's leading man, accepted the responsibility of pacifying the enraged mob, and a moment afterwards regretted it. He says he fully expected to be the honored guest at a lynching bee before his diplomacy began to have effect. A settlement was finally made whereby the men received half pay in exchange for their good will.

In the meantime the director had taken his men down to the water front and staged the landing of the British troops. Work now started and, the revolutionists disposed of, things went along steadily though not, by any means, smoothly. It could not be expected that four hundred men picked promiscously from the great army of the unemployed would all have sweet tempers and an ambition to work, regardless—a good many of them did work regardless and the scenes had to be retaken.

After a long harangue from Hunter and his two assistants with now and then a word from Duff Law as to how they should sneak over the precipice, not gallop, the men would get down among the stones and dry, prickly grass and weeds and crawl past the camera on their hands and knees. When about half of them had gone past in fine shape some gleeful soldier would look up at the camera and grin. Then everybody would have to go back and do it all over. On one of these retakes a "Highlander" expressed the ill-concealed feelings of all by yelling "Hey! Put some more broken glass over here." And all this time the sun was beaming at about ninety-two in the shade, with no shade in sight. This is just an example of what Hunter was up against in trying to get a realistic picture with raw supers.

He got it, however, which is the main thing.

Scenes were taken and retaken until they were right in every particular. The battle scene which was the last was finished at about three o'clock, three big scenes having been taken since nine o'clock in the morning. After this the men were fed and released from duty.

Everybody around the town who knew of the work being done was present to get in the way and pass comments. Among the members of the company who were present were James D. Law and Hudson Maxim. Mr. Law is the president of the Colonial Company and takes a deeper interest in its work than "long distance" reports. He is a practical film man and spends about half of his time on the studio floor. Mr. Maxim is the company's technical adviser. At present he is engineering expert for the Du Pont De Nemours Powder Company. Jack Eaton, publicity manager, was busy on the grounds dispensing courtesy and picking up ideas which will later become press sheets.

Roughly speaking, the Colonial outing came to a pretty high figure compared to the amount of film it will cover in the picture. There were over four hundred men to be paid, clothed, fed, and transported, not to mention the cost of cartridges used and the men who were paid to be peaceful. In the finished picture, "The Seats of the Mighty" which will soon be ready for release this day's work will be represented only by about five hundred feet of film.

Since the above was written Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation has been made one of the happiest men alive, his joy being due to having captured the Colonial Motion Picture Corporation's photo-play masterpiece "The Seats of the Mighty" for the World's program.

General Manager Selznick announces that "The Seats of the Mighty," is to be a special release and the date is to be announced shortly. When seen regarding the contract he said, "In the past I have agreed with Thomas Carlyle that silence and action seem contraries, but are often seen in operation. But in this instance, I can hardly restrain myself from telling the motion picture world about our capturing 'The Seats of the Mighty.' I consider this picture the great American masterpiece."

Lionel Barrymore, brother of the famous Ethel Barrymore, and a distinguished member of that celebrated family of thespians, has the leading role and is capably supported by such well known stars as Millicent Evans, Lois Meredith, Thomas Jefferson, Glen White, Clinton Preston, Harold Hartsell, Grace Leigh and Marjorie Bonner.

For a Graduated War Tax

And still the fight against the proposed war tax on motion picture theaters goes on. Fulton Brylawski, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of the District of Columbia, is the latest to put his shoulder to the wheel in an effort to show the nation's legislators how ridiculous some of the proposed war legislation would be if put into operation. In an open letter mailed to every member of the United States Senate, Mr. Brylawski says:

The Bill, H. R. 18891, "To increase the Internal Revenue and for Other Purposes," provides, among other things, in the sixth section thereof that

"Proprietors of theaters, museums, and concert halls in cities having more than fifteen thousand population as shown by the last preceding United States census, shall pay $100. Every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays, or performances, for admission to which entrance money is received, not including halls rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, shall be regarded as a theater."

As the national vice-president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, which includes in its membership thousands of motion picture theaters in all sections of the United States, and as the secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the District of Columbia, I respectfully beg to submit the following to your consideration.

The wording of the measure in its present form does not differentiate between theaters, excepting that theaters in towns of less than fifteen thousand inhabitants are not liable to this special tax. In a town of less than fifteen thousand inhabitants there are in many instances only several theaters, each of which may do a thriving business. In this city, for example, there are about ninety moving picture theaters, seating anywhere from one hundred and fifty to a thousand or more persons, and in addition thereto there are ten large theaters playing dramatic, operatic, vaudeville and burlesque attractions, so that there is, in this city, one theater to every thirty-five hundred inhabitants.

The larger theaters with their greater seating capacity and the higher prices charged could, without feeling it a burden, easily pay the one hundred dollar tax intended to be levied by this proposed legislation, but the small theater —the little moving picture house with only a few hundred seats and where the admission charge is only five or ten cents—would not only feel such a tax burdensome in the extreme, but in a great number of instances would be compelled to go out of business. Judged by the popular idea of the enormous profits in the motion picture business, this statement may seem an exaggeration, but during the past year there were many moving picture theaters in this city that were compelled to go out of business because of their inability to cope with the larger theaters. During the month of November every theater in this city, large or small, must pay to the District of Columbia, one hundred and five dollars for a license to operate during the coming year. Many of them will be hard pressed to realize this amount and if compelled to pay an additional hundred dollars towards the Internal Revenue, I can state with great positiiveness and certainty that a large number will be forced out of existence simply on this account.

It is not the purpose of this communication to endeavor to shirk the responsibility of defraying a part of this country's revenue, but simply to suggest a far more equitable manner of levying same, and as an example a sliding scale, like the following would answer this purpose.

Theaters seating less than 300 might be taxed.....$ 25
Theaters seating more than 300 and not exceeding 500 50
Theaters seating more than 500 and not exceeding 1000 75
Theaters seating more than 1000..... 100

I feel sure that if you will give the proper consideration to this letter you will, as a fair-minded man, see the force and equitableness of the argument herein advanced.

A Picturesque Lubin

"Toys of Fate" is a very picturesque and powerful melodrama produced at the Lubin Los Angeles studio which offers all the advantages for realism of the Golden West. The story is told by Will M. Ritchey and is rather pitiful, inasmuch as a wrong is committed which cannot be repaired. A poor Italian is shanghaied and separated from his family, a wife and girl child. For twenty years he tracks the strike breaker who pressed him and caused him to loose his dear ones. Finally he finds him and discovers that his little girl, now a beautiful woman, is a member of the villain's family. He wreaks vengeance, but at the last moment saves the family though he goes to his own death. Captain Wilbert Melville, the manager, has given the play a strong cast, headed of course by Velma Whitman, his popular leading lady. The Lubin Los Angeles pictures for the past year have been extremely popular and Captain Melville may claim "The Toys of Fate" to be his most sympathetic film.

Joe Farnham's organizing and executive ability, good-natured smile, and jovial companionship are candidates for the presidency of the Screen Club. The ticket, of course, only shows his name but these are the things which go with it and which are the essentials of fraternalism. Besides being a charter member, Farnham is the livest of live ones when it comes to arranging and managing the club's social doings. He filled the office of corresponding secretary in 1913, and last year was unanimously elected to the first vice-president's chair. Much of the influence brought to bear in securing the club's present quarters was due to Joe Farnham's efforts, and he has figured prominently on the working side of everything which has transpired for the club's progress and welfare. Popularity has always been Joe's middle name, for he is admired, respected and genuinely liked by everyone with whom he comes in contact. His acquaintanceship extends to practically every man in filmdom, for Joe has had an opportunity of meeting them all at some time during his eventful career. If it wasn't when he was in the Telegraph advertising department, it was when he was representing the British-American Film Company, drawing salary from the Billboard, or acting as assistant to the president of the All Star Film Company, his present position. It seems sure that if popularity is to pull votes, Joe Farnham is already as good as elected the Screen Club's president. Motography joins with a host of others in wishing him success.

John B. Clymer, who came into the advertising and sales end of the film business when features began to blossom, and who has stayed in it subsequently, is looking for the best job he can find, or enough small accounts to make a days work seven days a week. The smaller companies, whose volume of work doesn't require the services of a fast-working experienced man for all of his time, is now his field. For the last year Clymer has been with the Exclusive Supply Corporation, handling its publicity also that of Great Northern Special, Films Lloyds, Film Releases of America, United Keanograph and other companies at odd times. He also handled sales for some of these accounts. Harry R. Raver was responsible for Clymer leaving the New York Herald to go to Gaumont, from whence he later went to Itala, there to assist Mr. Raver. Unlike some of his contemporaries he isn't sure whether he is going to be with some "big combination in a responsible position," or whether he will doctor film and work for a number of little fellows at his present office at 220 West Forty-Second street, New York City. He expects to also represent out-of-town manufacturers.

The Rich Feature Film Company, of Chicago, in which C. R. Rich, I. J. Rich and A. B. Reese are interested, has secured the Iowa state rights on "The Christian," Vitagraph's eight-reel production. The concern's headquarters are at 5348 Michigan avenue.

The wonderfully rare black leopard, now housed at the Selig Jungle-Zoo, Los Angeles, steadfastly and sullenly refuses to be reconciled to cement walls and bars. During the past two months this costly inhabitant of Indian jungles has crouched in the far corner of his cage, every muscle tense whenever a human was in sight, and the light of battle in his eyes.

Francis Ford and Grace Cunard are reviving Lucille and Loubuque in a splendid romance, "The Mystery of the Throne Room," in which Miss Cunard takes the dual part of Lucille and a madcap queen. The action takes place in an imaginary European principality in which some beautiful costumes will be worn. Ford will again be the heavy.

Ruth Hartman, formerly of the Vitagraph and Kalem companies, has been engaged by the Favorite Players Film Company to play leads opposite Carlyle Blackwell in his production of Richard Harding Davis' famous story, "The Man Who Could Not Lose."

While spending a week-end with relatives at Lake Hopatcong recently, Miriam Nesbitt, the leading lady of the Edison Company, was given a royal reception by many of the natives and vacationists.

The Panama-Pacific exposition committee of New York City has arranged with the Vitagraph Company of America to take a series of comprehensive pictures of Greater New York for exhibition purposes at the Panama-Pacific international exposition at San Francisco, scheduled to open February 7 and to close December 4, 1915. The taking of these pictures with a child story woven into them has been entrusted to Tefft Johnson, the Vitagraph director, and he is now actively engaged in securing them.

After a month's absence on the sick list, Anna Little, of the west coast Universal, has returned to work and will be seen in the next picture put on by Frank Lloyd, "The Predatory Man."

John F. Pribyl, personal representative of W. N. Selig, has returned to his desk after a most exhausting experience in a Chicago hospital. He looks and feels like a new man.

A royal reception was given to Robert Brower, of the Edison Company, last week by his screen admirers of Hartford, Conn. When the fans had learned that Brower was stopping at his brother's home in Hartford, they called at the house in large numbers to behold in real life the grand old man of the Edison films.

Adele Lane is the latest actress to be injured in pictures. This clever little Selig performer has been acting in several animal photoplays of late and has come through without being hurt until a day or so ago, when she was doing a scene which called for her struggling with a bear, which clawed her right hand in the scene, and in a retake the animal mauled her left hand and arm so that she has both of her arms and hands bound.

"Cabiria," the world's greatest photo-spectacle, enters its fourth big week at the Ziegfeld theater and has now a record of eighteen weeks in Chicago. Film producers admit that Chicago is the most generous city in the country to big photo productions and will eventually be the moving picture center of the United States for profitable exhibition.

It was funny to see Bess Meredith in the nattiest of men's suits, which she was wearing in a comedy last week, sitting with Louis Joseph Vance earnestly discussing the scenario she has been writing from his story of "The Trey O' Hearts."

James Oliver Curwood, one of the most prolific book and scenario writers in America, and whose pen has created a great number of big Selig successes, is now up in the great northwest, in the region of snow and ice, the bleakness and romantic features of which his pen portrays so well. Mrs. Curwood is with him.

At the Strand theater, "The Patchwork Girl of Oz," which is a photo-vizualization of L. Frank Baum's whimsical extravaganza, is being shown. Mr. Baum is well known as the author of the "Wizard of Oz" and "The Tik-Tok Man of Oz," and it is said that the film production which is showing at the Strand is the best of Mr. Baum's works.

Many members of the New York police department, who had not the opportunity of attending the police carnival at the Brighton Beach race track in June, have taken advantage of witnessing on the screen the feats performed by their brother officers, since the film was released by the Edison Company on September 10.

Sydney Ayres, who for the past year has been with the American Film Manufacturing Company, first as leading man and then as director, has left that company and joined the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, with headquarters in Hollywood, Calif., where he will act as director.

Miss Pearl Sindelar, formerly of Pathe, who is scoring a tremendous success in Potash & Perlmutter at the Olympic Theater, Chicago, says she loves the pictures and is coming back some day.

When the scenario of the "Girl of the People", called for a scene in which the leading woman must tango, Mary Fuller of the Universal started to learn the latest innovation for the first time. An instructor came to the studio and in due time Miss Fuller had gone so far as to inventing many new twists, which surprised the instructor, who complimented her for her aptness.

The Hon. Franklin K. Lane, secretary of the interior, recently accepted the invitation extended by the Thanhouser management to view privately the pictures taken by the New Rochelle players in famous Yellowstone National park. The film was taken to Washington and shown to the secretary in the projecting room used by the operators employed by the department of the interior.

The Young Men's Christian Association of New Haven, Conn., have purchased and installed a Power's cameragraph No. 6A motion picture projecting machine.

Among other accomplishments, William Garwood of the American Company numbers that of being an excellent tennis player and recently took part in a tournament at one of the big Santa Barbara hotels. He is particularly good when playing at the back of the court and has a nasty twist serve which fools his opponents.

Probably no girl upon the screen accomplishes as much work in the same length of time as Mary Fuller, the Universal star. Besides being the central figure in all the plays produced by her director, Walter Edwin, Miss Fuller manages to write three or four photoplays every month and several special articles. Many of the photoplays she writes are done by her company, while the articles are for the various motion picture magazines.

The Adirondack Electric Power Company, Amsterdam, N. Y., purchased two Power's cameragraphs No. 6A motion picture projecting machines through The Picture Theater Equipment Company of New York City.

A character new to the screen will be presented in the Selig feature entitled "Unrest," that features Thomas Santschi and Bessie Eyton. It is from the prolific and clever pen of William E. Wing, and is said to possess a punch as well as the spice of novelty.

Helen Badgley, Thanhouser's six-year-old marvel of the screen, was the star entertainer of the New Rochelle (N. Y.) lodge of Elks recently. Her "act" was not scheduled, and what she did do was quite different from what it had been expected she would do.

Herbert Brenon and Hobart Henley, at great risk, recently, dove into twenty feet of water where they put up one of the most unique and spectacular fights ever done for the screen. This forms one of the scenes for "In Self Defense", a two-reel drama produced by the Imp company under the direction of Herbert Brenon, in the wilds of Connecticut.

Donald Crisp, the Majestic-Mutual director, is preparing to return to England to assist his countrymen in the war against Germany and Austria. Crisp fought throughout the Boer war. He joined the English forces as a private and was made color sergeant for bravery. He was wounded three times in his service of more than two years in South Africa.

The New York Parental school, Flushing, N. Y., have installed a Power's cameragraph No. 6A motion picture projecting machine. This machine was purchased through The Picture Theater Equipment Company of New York City.

There is a scene constructed at the Imp studio which should attract unusual attention for its elaborateness and perfection of detail, when it appears in the two-reel Imp melodrama, "The Three Men Who Knew". This play, under the direction of Frank Crane, is just being completed. The scene referred to, is one of an oriental palace. The pillars, draperies and the heathen gods, furnished at great expense, reflect beautifully the atmosphere of the Far East.

A recent fire at the Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle, N. Y., proved the efficiency of the fire organization of the company. Long before the city fire department could reach the scene, though an alarm was telephoned in immediately it was seen that fire threatened, the Thanhouser "vamps" had extinguished the blaze.

Edgar Lewis, who was the producing director of "The Littlest Rebel," "Captain Swift," and "Northern Lights," has been engaged by the Box Office Attractions Company to produce Henri Bernstein's "The Thief."

An international traffic in stolen moving picture films has been exposed by Detroit detectives. Thus far they have been unable to arrest the principal in the case. Films have been taken periodically from a number of Detroit film exchanges, passed along the line to a "fence" and then shipped to a Philadelphia exporting firm, the police have learned.

As the final installment of the "Trey O' Hearts" series draws nearer, it becomes more and more apparent that the dangers of the actors are of unknown quality and quantity. The latest of these hair-breadth escapes fell to the lot of Miss Cleo Madison in the production of the twelfth installment of the series. She was tied to the back of a horse, who suddenly became unmanageable. That she escaped with her life was little short of a miracle.

The Lathrop Coal Company of Panther, W. Va., have purchased a Power's cameragraph No. 6A motion picture projecting machine through Williams, Brown and Earle of Philadelphia, Pa.

A big snake and a gila monster almost demoralized the Komic Company at the Reliance and Majestic Mutual studios in Los Angeles during the taking of "Dizzy Joe's Career."

Captain Wilbert Melville, manager of the Lubin Los Angeles studio is spending a pleasant vacation at the home plant in Philadelphia. This is the first visit east that the captain has made in over a year and he has received a royal welcome. Melville has left behind three able directors who will see that the studio of the Golden West is well taken care of.

Jennie Lee, who more than a quarter of a century ago was well known to theater goers of two continents, recently celebrated her sixty-fifth birthday. For the last year Miss Lee has been connected with the Reliance and Majestic-Mutual organization, and for several weeks she has been taking part in D. W. Griffith's big production, "The Clansman."

Among the nominees for Screen Club offices and opposite the corresponding secretary's title can be found the name of William Barry, alias "6A Bill", whose name has ever been synonomous with geniality and the club's interests. As a generator of ideas Barry occupies a conspicuous place in the front row, and he is aggressiveness, itself, when it comes to promoting them. In his capacity of advertising manager for the Nicholas Power Company he represents another besides the producing end of the business side of the motion picture industry, but one which is equally important in every way. He never misses a Screen Club affair, and can always be depended upon to render a good account of himself when there is responsibility to be shouldered.

ROLL OF STATES.

ARKANSAS.

The Aptco moving picture theater at 219 Main street, Argenta, was opened September 19. F. H. Greif is manager.

CALIFORNIA.

A permit for a new motion picture theater, to be erected at a cost of $10,000 at the corner of Telegraph and Durant avenues, Berkeley, was taken out recently. J. Arthur Elston and George Clark are to be the owners. The building has already been leased by an Oakland firm and will be ready for occupancy within seventy days.

DELAWARE.

A large marquee, adding to the attractiveness of the Avenue theater, in Wilmington, has been completed. Further and extensive improvements are being made.

FLORIDA.

In perhaps less than a month the Republic theater, one of the handsomest in the South, will be completed and ready for opening to the play picture loving people of Jacksonville. The theater will be under the direct and personal management of H. H. MacKirgan. The seating capacity will be 800. The entire furnishings, color scheme of green, ivory and gold high lights and equipment of the house will be of the most modern pattern and absolutely fireproof. When finished, it will have cost $40,000.

GEORGIA.

The Grand theater, in Augusta, under the management of Richard Tant, opened the season September 21 as a moving picture theater. He will exhibit the best photoplays.

ILLINOIS.

Chas. N. Anderson and Dale Ross are now owners of the motion picture show at Ambia. It has been conducted for the past several months by G. R. Morgan.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, Motography has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors. Synopses of current films are not printed in Motography as they may be obtained of the manufacturers.

Lost Melody Reunites Sweethearts

Pretty Story Filmed

A PLOT in which either the composition or rendition of music figures prominently seems to call for a finer strain of emotional acting than does the ordinary drama. "The Lost Melody" is a one-reel Edison picture based on a plot of this kind and it receives splendid interpretation in the work of Edward Earle and Mabel Trunnelle who play the leads in the characters of the dutiful young musician, Roger Stewart, and Mary Lyon, a charming girl employed as Mrs. Stewart's secretary and with whom Roger is in love.

The plot is neither deep nor intricate, its attraction lying in the smooth unfolding of a pretty story and its unconventional ending. An earnest, serious-minded youth and a talented celloist, Roger Stewart falls in love with his mother's secretary, Mary Lyons, an accomplished pianist. Social ambitions and the possession of a number of Mr. Stewart's notes prompt Amos Darkin to suggest to his debtor that Roger marry his daughter, Rose Darkin, the marriage nullifying Stewart's notes.

One day Roger is inspired by Mary's playing and writes a beautiful song, dedicating it to her. As she plays and sings it for him he is overwhelmed by his great love for the girl and proposes to her. Mr. Stewart overhears him and, with Darkin's proposal still ringing in his ears, warns him not to make further advances to Mary, as he is to marry Rose. Roger protests strongly at first, but finally bows to his father's wishes and becomes Rose's husband. Two years later the young Mrs. Stewart dies.

In the meantime Mary has left the Stewart home knowing that while she remained, Roger's attention would be diverted from his wife. One Sunday at church a short time after becoming a widower, Roger is attracted by a melody which brings back memories of his first love. He remains after services and ascends to the choir where the organist is still playing "The Lost Melody." A happy reunion takes place between the lovers. Mary again consents to be Roger's wife, and this time there is no Darkin to interfere.

IN filming "The Midnight Ride of Paul Revere," the Edison company has pictured vividly the heroic act which Henry Wadsworth Longfellow immortalized in his universally-read poem of the same name. The story of the young man's wild night ride to warn the patriots' of the advance of the British toward Concord and Lexington is familiar to every true, loyal American, and its re-enactment in this two-reel film should become tremendously popular both as an entertaining and historically educational subject. It will be released on October 30.

A company with August Phillips as its leading man journeyed to Boston, Concord, and Lexington in order to take the picture on the exact sites that were the scenes of the original action. A few of the historic places shown are the old homes of Paul Revere and John Hancock, the tower of Old North church in which the signal lanterns were hung, and Lexington Common, where the minutemen fought the first battle of the revolution.

The picture is entirely free from anachronisms. This was not very difficut in the matter of dwellings, for the style of houses, outwardly, at least, has not changed materially since the Revolutionary period. Costuming and arming the players however, was a more difficult task, but it was accomplished without marring the perfect Colonial atmosphere created by the picture's background.

The story is well acted and strictly authentic. Director Brabin carefully avoided any deviation from the narrow path of facts in order to quicken its action or add to its interest, and the result is thoroughly satisfying. A true touch of the patriotic spirit of the time is inserted in a little boy's following his father out in answer to Paul Revere's call to arms. The man leads him back to the house by the ear and hurries down to the meeting-place. The father is no sooner out of sight around the bend in the road than the little boy slips out of the house and follows, gun in hand, to fight for his country.

mental experiences and set-backs. It is entitled "Wood B. Wedd and the Microbes," and will be released on October 26 by Edison.

Wood B. and his worthy lieutenant, Darby Jenks, do not realize how unsanitary and careless is their mode of living, until Wedd becomes infatuated with Seraphina Brown, the sole possessor of much property and a goodly-sized bank account, and also, of some most peculiar and inconvenient ideas of everything pertaining to hygiene, calisthenics, and eugenic marriages.

Upon receiving Wedd's personal application for her love and hand, Miss Brown puts him through an elimination test. He successfully runs the gauntlet of eye, teeth, and heart examinations, lung tests, chest measurements, and nerve-racking physical exercises. Wedd now being eligible for matrimony, he and his friend, Jenks, are invited to dinner. Before entering the dining room they are subjected to microscopic scrutiny in the hands of the maid to be sure that their clothing has not been contaminated by contact with ordinary street air. Not entirely satisfied with the result, the maid brings the vacuum cleaner into use.

Dinner over, Miss Brown decides that too much avordupois rests at Wedd's belt line, and dooms him to a vapor bath. He resists in vain, and is left alone locked up in the bath cabinet. This proves too much for his patience, matrimonial aspirations notwithstanding, and he picks up cabinet, clothes and all, and flees from Seraphina Brown's domain.

Lord Cecil's Troubles Increase

In "The Girl From the West," the fifth episode in Lubin's "The Beloved Adventurer," series, a most pathetic story is told. The good Lord Cecil seems to be the butt of misfortune and the more he strives to make others happy, the more he is subjected to the conspiracies of rascals. In this episode he resorts to the last expedient to raise money, selling the family jewels of his ancestors, and raises $25,000, really a small amount to help out his embarrassments, but enough to offer safety for awhile. Through work of a confidence man he loses even this sum and discovers that he has bought the controlling stock in a worthless mine. The situation is heartrending but Cecil never loses his nerve and again fights the fate that so cruelly oppresses him. Emmett Campbell Hall continues to prove his ability as a romancer and Arthur Johnson and Lottie Briscoe famous Lubin players, to prove their skill as picture artists.

Francis X. Bushman in Dual Role

Essanay Military Drama

"The Fable of the Long Range Lover and the Lala Palooze." Essanay.

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN does double duty in Essanay's two-part story entitled "The Private Officer," which is booked for release on Friday, October 23, appearing in the roles of two soldiers, one an officer and one a private who are rivals for the hand of a society girl.

The production is carefully handled and works up to a strong climax. Beverly Bayne, Thomas Comerford and Lester Cuneo appear to good advantage in the support of the lead. A military atmosphere prevails throughout the entire two thousand feet, although the early part of the story also deals with the life of society folk.

A scene from Essanay's "Mother O' Dreams."

Harry Lampton loves Muriel March, a society girl, but she does not appear to care for him. Lieutenent Frothingham also makes love to Muriel and Harry, knowing that his rival is unworthy of the girl, denounces him in the officers' club room of the military barracks. Just as the men face each other the girl enters and defends the lieutenant, giving her consent to marry him.

Lampton is heartbroken but feels he can do nothing more to protect her so he decides to go away. He enlists in the army, hoping to be sent to a distant post but instead is ordered to remain in his home town, under Lieutenant Frothingham. The striking resemblance of the two men is concealed only by Lampton's mustache and when he is closely associated with his successful rival Harry notices this. Time slowly passes, the lieutenant making things as disagreeable as he can for the private and the latter bearing all and controlling himself for the sake of the girl he loves.

One day Frothingham is on leave of absence in the city and Lampton hears that he is drinking heavily. The private's first thought is of the disgrace which will come upon the other man's sweetheart if he is not able to return to the barracks in time to take his place at guard-mounting the next morning. He at once determines that he can now make use of the similarity in their looks and, hastily shaving off his mustache he prepares to take the lieutenant's place.

Captain Osborne discovers Lampton but when he hears the story agrees to assist him in the plan to save Frothingham. The next morning the troops assemble and the man whom they suppose to be their lieutenant is on hand. The real Frothingham, however, does not arrive until noon.

Colonel Porter visits the barracks and when he sees the true conditions he severely reprimands Frothingham and congratulates Lampton for his deed. Muriel visits the barracks, hears the story and realizes that she has made a terrible mistake. It is not too late to go to the man she really loves, however, and Lampton is made happy when he folds her in his arms.

It is always difficult for an actor to distinctly characterize two roles, but in this production Mr. Bushman has turned the trick admirably and, through his poise and manner of registering emotions, he stamps both Harry Lampton and Lieutenant Frothingham with personalities which do not in any way conflict with each other.

The story is constructed in such a manner that every crisis is led up to in a convincing manner and there can be no mistake in recognizing the big moments of the story when they arrive. The director has obtained some very worthy camera effects, as well as securing the best that was in each of the players so that the entire production is one of merit and one which no exhibitor will make a mistake in placing in a prominent position upon his program.

An embarrassing moment in Essanay's "Slippery Slim, the Mortgage and Sophie."

The cast is as follows:

Harry Lampton } Francis X. Bushman
Lieutenant Frothingham }
Muriel March ..... Beverly Bayne
Colonel Porter ..... Thomas Commerford
Captain Osborne ..... Lester Cuneo

Another Universal Serial

Due to the great success of the serials "Lucille Love" and "Trey O' Hearts," the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has started one of the west coast directors on a new "continued film." It is founded on John Fleming Wilson's novel, "The Master Key," which is about to appear in the leading newspapers of the country. Popular Robert Leonard and Ella Hall will appear in leading roles.

The newspapers who signed to publish the story were captured by the A. P. Robyn Syndicate of Chicago in co-operation with leading exhibitors throughout the country, who booked "The Master Key" for their theaters and wanted a local paper to print the story at the same time it was being exhibited. The serial will be released in 15 weekly episodes of two reels each immediately following the showing of the final installment of the "Trey O' Hearts."

Max Linder Not Dead

Word received early last week from the seat of the great European war indicated that Max Linder, the famous Pathe comedian, had been killed in the battle of the Aisne. Later reports, however, prove that the first rumor, as Mark Twain once so aptly remarked, "was greatly exaggerated," for Max is only badly wounded and the prediction is made that within a short time he will be back on the firing line. Linder is an officer in a French artillery regiment and his battery has been at the front ever since the German retreat began, so the earlier reports of his death were credited. Though still under 30 years of age and said to be the highest salaried artist working in pictures, when the call came to fight, like the hundreds of thousands of his fellow countrymen, Linder dropped everything, donned his uniform and took up his station with his comrades. It is said that on the day before leaving Paris he came to the Pathe studio at Vincennes to say a last good bye. When his fellow players expressed the hope that within a short time he would return from the front to resume his studio work, Linder shrugged his shoulders and replied: "I am a fatalist. What is to be, will be. When I am to die I will die, whether on the battle field or in my bed at home." The above clearly expresses his philosophy which was apparent in his work in films. He never hesitated to take a chance whether it was in an aeroplane, speeding automobile or in a bull ring. He is said to have been a man without fear.

Universal Films "The Boy Mayor"

The accompanying illustration was snapped in the streets of Los Angeles during the production of "The Boy Mayor," a one-reel feature, written around the head of the only juvenile administration in the country, located at Portland, Ore., by H. G. Stafford and Calder Johnstone and produced by Henry McRae of the Universal Company.

Eugene J. Rich, the boy mayor of Portland, Ore., and Earl Goodwin, his secretary, with Chief of Police Sebastian of Los Angeles, all of whom supported the 101 Bison company in the Production.

Aside from its interest as something new in the way of municipal government, the picture is of striking dramatic plot. It deals with the reformation of a boy pickpocket through the influence of the juvenile administration and the running down of an organized band of petty thieves who, using children as tools, are making a business of shoplifting and sneak thievery. A raid on the den of thieves is shown and the picture is made still more true to life by the assistance of the Los Angeles police authorities.

From start to finish, the picture is fraught with tense action and keen interest. Sherman Bainbridge, Rex De Rosselli and Lule Warrenton, as the thieves, do some very clever character work, while Mr. Rich and Mr. Goodwin appear singularly at ease before the camera considering the fact that neither of them had ever appeared before the camera or on the legitimate stage previous to this production.

Oz Film Company's First Release

"The Patchwork Girl of Oz" made a triumphant and initial bow to New York film-goers at the Strand theater during September's last week. The novel film was accorded praise for its splendid photography, clever production, flawless acting and continuous action. L. Frank Baum is its author, Violet MacMillan its lead and Fred Woodward is he who is responsible for the many laughs which greet his humorous animal portrayals. It is a film of merit and should have a successful showing.

Thieves Themselves Puzzled by Crime

Selig Detective Story

A DETECTIVE story in which even the thieves themselves are puzzled as to who got the loot, will be the offering of the Selig Polyscope Company on Monday, October 19, when "The Blue Flame" is released.

Ordinarily the film detective story lets the audience into the secret of the crime early in the first reel, and thus those who view the picture have to sit back and watch the bewilderment of the detective in the case until at last, by some happy chance, he stumbles upon a clue which, at the end of the second or third reel, results in the arrest of the guilty parties, but in this case the Selig people offer a story which is a complete mystery to the audience until near the end of the picture.

Collins plans the roles of each of the conspirators.

Guy Oliver has the role of Dick Little, the detective, and handles it in a masterly fashion, while Stella Razetto is featured in the part of Nell Wade, daughter of an old criminal, who is compelled to commit further misdeeds under threat of exposure of former acts. Some particularly weird and odd electrical effects are obtained in the dark scenes, when only the bullseyes of several electric pocket lights can be seen flitting hither and thither. On the whole the picture is a most acceptable offering for the exhibitor wishing to book a mystery story for his patrons.

Edward Collins is the head of the "Crime Syndicate" and with the able assistance of Georgia Wells, a blonde adventuress; Nell Wade, whom Collins holds under his thumb; "Buck" Wade, Nell's father, who is also in fear of Collins, and several men confederates, Collins plans to obtain some priceless jewels just imported by George Garvey, a celebrated jeweler.

Georgia is introduced to Harry Garvey, the jeweler's fast son, and proceeds to fascinate him; Nell is made to assume the role of lady's maid and Collins secures her a position in the Garvey home as maid to Etta Garvey, the jeweler's pretty daughter; while Collins himself manages to be introduced to Miss Etta and, posing as a wealthy broker, becomes engaged to her.

At a ball arranged in honor of the engagement of his daughter to Collins, Garvey receives a valuable shipment of jewels, which have just been brought across the Atlantic aboard the Olympic. A moment or two after the jewels are delivered the lights are turned out and a revolver shot startles the guests. When the lights flash up again George Garvey discovers that the jewels are missing, while on the ballroom floor lies the dead body of Collins.

The police arrive and on account of Harry Garvey's dissolute habits suspicion points to him. Dick Little, special investigator of crime, is called into the case and shortly afterwards discovers a flashlight with a blue lens in some shrubbery on the Garvey lawn. Investigation leads to the discovery that several of these lights were purchased a few days before by Collins. Clues pile one upon another until, at last, Little learns of the whereabouts of Georgia and a confederate in Cincinnati and has them arrested and brought back. Nell and her father are also drawn into the net, following Little's appearance in the Garvey home as a butler.

All the members of the "Crime Syndicate" are puzzled over the death of Collins, their leader, and the subsequent disappearance of the jewels, but at the end of the picture it is disclosed that Collins had taken the jewels from Mr. Garvey, passed them along to Nell, who, in turn, had handed them to Little, who was in the house watching the jewel thieves, under the impression that he was Collins. A moment later, when the blue flashlight disclosed Collins in the act of leveling a revolver at young Harry Garvey, Nell had knocked his arm aside, causing him to shoot himself.

American Standard Producing Comedies

The American Standard Motion Picture Corporation, which has its general offices in the Consumers Building, with studios and laboratories in Ravenswood, a northern suburb of Chicago, now has all of its producing facilities in shape and is hard at work producing one-reel comedies, the first of which has just been completed and will be released very shortly under the title, "Home Sweet Home?"

Frank Minor, who has caused the press to say that he is "better than the original" in Dave Lewis' part in the musical comedy success "September Morn," plays the lead for the American Standard in "Home Sweet Home?" and it is understood that he will appear in its future comedy films in leading parts, all of which will be released as the "Frank Minor" brand. Within six weeks' time the concern expects to be releasing one "Frank Minor" comedy a week, and is now laying plans toward that end. The second production, now in preparation is, "He Tried To Be Brave," which will be followed by "The Phantom Tramp."

M. G. Watkins, manager of production for the American Standard, has given a major part of his attention to getting the comedy company started and is now forming another producing company to make special features adapted from successful plays and books. Like the comedy company arrangement, only well-known players, who have made a success on the legitimate stage, will be featured in the other American Standard productions.

As rapidly as the work can be carried out new producing companies will be formed to take care of the different classes of films, until a complete program of releases has been attained. Announcements of the new brands will be made later.

"The Story of Paramont"

The H. E. Lesan Advertising Agency of New York and Chicago has just issued a neat little booklet entitled "The Story of Paramont," which tells briefly the history of the big feature film concern, and contains photographs of many of the prominent actors and actresses appearing in Paramont releases. The little booklet contains thirty-two pages and cover, is printed on excellent stock, and tastefully bound in a green cover fastened by a bit of silk thread. The handy and convenient little booklets, when presented to patrons of Paramont pictures throughout the country, will undoubtedly do much to further popularize the Paramont offerings, since they will bring the stars and the film-going public into an even closer relationship. The Lesan Agency is to be congratulated upon its happy thought of "The Story of Paramont" booklets.

B. A. Rolfe is busily engaged on the production of Satan Sanderson which will be issued through Alco Program.

New Thanhouser Serial

"Zudora," another absorbingly interesting serial, is to be produced by the Thanhouser Film Corporation as a successor to "The Million Dollar Mystery." Daniel Carson Goodman is the author of the new serial which will be released in two-reel episodes, each of which will be a story complete in itself. Harold MacGrath, who novelized "Kathlyn" and "The Million Dollar Mystery," will write the newspaper version of "Zudora." All the newspapers throughout the country now running the "Mystery" story have taken unto themselves the new serial. Mr. Goodman, through "The Escape," "The Battle of the Sexes" and "The Avenging Conscience," all Broadway successes, has a definite value to the exhibitor booking "Zudora." He is admitted to be the photoplay author-genius of Broadway. Mr. MacGrath's name is so well known that it is an attempt to beautify the beautiful to enlarge upon the merit all know is his possession.

Marguerite Snow.

In "Zudora" will be more scenes than in all the plays of the Bard of Avon, a distinction in itself. The title of the first episode gives an idea of the mystic theme on which "Zudora" is predicated. "The Mystic Message of the Spotted Collar" is the title of the first release. A cast of three principals will run through the twenty episodes—they to be supported by one thousand people, a construction never before attempted in photoplay production, or for that matter on the speaking stage.

Marguerite Snow, whose Countess Olga in "The Million Dollar Mystery" has cemented her in the hearts of a nation's motion picture fans, will play "Zudora." She is wonderfully fitted for the role, which will give admirers the opportunity to see this remarkable young woman at her best, the role demanding the complete gamut of emotions and a more definite histronic ability than is the usual requirement. James Cruze, the reporter-hero in "The Million Dollar Mystery," will play Hassam Ali, a wierd oriental character around whose mysticism revolves much of the story. Harry Benham, whose work as a Thanhouser leading man is well known, will play John Storm, the young lover of "Zudora." This newest of serials will be presented by the Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation.

Change in Universal Program

Beginning with the week of October 19, the Wednesday Nestor release on the regular program will be transferred to Tuesday, and will take the place of the Universal Ike comedy, which brand is to be discontinued. The Sunday Frontier will be transferred to Saturday, and the L-KO will start Sunday in the place of the Frontier.

Sans Grease Paint and Wig

By Mabel Condon

Laura Sawyer.

"I wish," gloomed Laura Sawyer with her eyes thoughtful and her chin in her hand, "that I weren't so painfully normal." We others of the inner office of the Dyreda Company — there was J. Searle Dawley, director, who was in one minute and out the next, and Bill Barry with a cigar that somebody gave him, and that was square, and fat, and dark—we all observed a sympathetic silence and silence and thereby encouraged Miss Sawyer to proceed.

"To me," she said reaching for a paper-cutter with the hand that wasn't acting as a chin-prop, "a dog's just a dog. Never could I endure calling one 'angel child' and never would I be brave enough to shop with one arm and cuddle a dog with the other. Yet ," and she frowned as though at the perverseness of her own nature, "other women do these things."

"And some," she changed hands and discarded the paper-knife for the paper-weight, "have a mad passion for some certain flowers and are never seen without that variety of flower. But I—I love all flowers and I'm afraid I should find just one flower monotonous. So you can see," as though in summing up her case, "just how terribly normal I am. Furthermore, I sleep when I'm sleepy and eat when I'm hungry, and that's being quite commonplace."

We admitted, in a murmur, that it was and Mr. Barry accused, "You like music."

"Yes!" The gloom disappeared, the Sawyer eyes, which their owner declares are green, sparkled and the Sawyer dimples—or dimple—came into being and Miss Sawyer was all animation, all interest. "My mother and I, in our apartment, have five musical instruments. And we just live at the opera, in its season."

"Opera?" Mr. Dawley took his cue on one of his flying returns to the inner office. "Miss Sawyer put a number of the operas into scenario form when she was with the Edison Company."

"'Thais' we made in a thousand feet" mused Miss Sawyer. "What a wonderful three-reeler she would make!" Another murmur meant another assent and Mr. Dawley put in apropos of nothing but a possible summons elsewhere. "Miss Sawyer is never satisfied with whatever scene she works in; she always remarks, 'It wasn't as good as the last rehearsal.'"

"That," explained Miss Sawyer, defensively, "is ambition." The summons came for Mr. Dawley; he answered it and Miss Sawyer talked of the two productions the Dyreda Company has made on the Clara Morris estate at Yonkers, and which it uses as its studio.

"They say," remarked Miss Sawyer, "that Clara Morris is so interested in what we are doing there. You see, we have a maid who used to serve Clara Morris and she often goes to the home where Clara Morris is, to see her. The last time she was there, the blind old lady said, 'If I could only sit on the porch and hear the directors' instructions to the players, I'd feel that I could see what they were doing!' The sweet old lady!" Miss Sawyer smiled as though Clara Morris herself were the one being smiled at and then she went on, "So we're going to have her come and 'hear' our next picture.

"The last one was 'In the Name of the Prince of Peace.' It furnished a big scope for all the principals."

"And your role?" I asked of the Dyreda Company's leading lady.

"A nun," she answered. "First, I'm a young girl and after a big disappointment in life I become a nun. So you see," she offered both gloved hands, outspread as gesticulation, "it afforded me a big scope."

A buzz from the outer office signaled Mr. Barry and his cigar thenceward and part of the talk which ensued had to do with Miss Sawyer's rise to fame in the world of pictures. Iron Mountain, Missouri, was where she was born, but she was educated in St. Louis.

"And because nobody seems ever to have heard of Iron Mountain, I claim St. Louis as my home town," Miss Sawyer said, from her side of the mahogany desk. "I made up my mind long before I was through school that I'd be an actress. And when I had finished, I obtained a very little part in a very little company. Then, I went to Chicago one year to visit my sister, and I applied to the Avenue theater—remember it, at sixty-second and Halsted streets?" Remember it? hadn't I skipped there from two-to-three class every Wednesday and attended the Avenue's matinee! "Well," Miss Sawyer resumed, "when the manager asked what part I could play, I answered, 'O, leads, always!' And for that summer season I 'led' at the Avenue.

"After that, I went out with a number of road companies as lead. 'The Home Seekers' was one of them. Then I went to Otis Skinner, after writing him for an appointment, and declared that my aim was to be a tragedienne, no light roles interested me, as a permanent calling. However," and she laughed the left-cheek dimple into being, "I accepted a small part in his company and later was promoted to a bigger one.

"It was after that that I came into pictures. I was the first leading woman that the Edison company had, and William J. Sorelle played male lead. Mr. Dawley was our director, and I stayed there for a little more than four years with the exception of one month in which I returned to the stage. I made many delightful acquaintances" she mused. "Mary Fuller and I were the best of friends and I know, perhaps better than anybody else, what a whole-souled, charming girl she is.

"About a year ago, I joined the Famous Players stock company and now—well, now I'm most interested in the success of the Dyreda Company."

"And the releases are to be all feature ones?" I asked, as the door opened and admitted Mr. Dawley, who sank into one of the big leather chairs and prepared to stay for a while.

"Features, yes—but not necessarily all multiple reel ones," offered Mr. Dawley. "It has always been my ambition," he went on, "to make pictures not according to length but to have their finish depend upon the end of the story. Just to go on telling a story and stop when the story is told. The scissors is a most important instrument, in the film business," Mr. Dawley said and his manner of saying it was sufficient indication that film lengths was a favorite subject. "You can always arrange your reels with the use of the scissors—to tell the story is the main thing. And Dyreda releases are affording me the opportunity of telling my story first and arranging the footage afterward. However—"

The door opened to admit the countenance of Frank L. Dyer, the Dyreda Company's president. "How'do, everyone!" he said pleasantly and the door then shut him and Mr. Dawley into the other office.

"But," I remarked to Miss Sawyer some time later, as one of her photographs came under discussion. "If you would sit for a picture just as you are now, in your street suit and wide black hat and with the yellow dahlia pinned on your shoulder—so!—I think it would make a splendid one."

"I'll have it done this afternoon," she decided.

And she did.

Interesting Warner Release

Gilbert P. Hamilton and Dot Farley are the two busiest people in the Albuquerque Film Manufacturing Company, Mr. Hamilton being the company's president and producing pictures, and Miss Farley arranging the scenarios and playing the leads in them. One of their latest releases through Warner's Features, Inc., is a three-reel comedy-drama entitled "False Pride Has a Fall," released October 12.

Dot Farley plays the leading role as "the transplanted Westerner," Ellen Farley, and is supported by Jack Conway. About three-fourths of the picture is comedy, the humor coming from the ludicrous mistakes and awkward actions into which Ellen Farley's limited knowledge of city ways betrays her. The picture gradually becomes serious as Ellen's education and pride advance, reaching a climax in Mr. and Mrs. Farley's visit to the East. Ellen is ashamed of her parents' appearance and manners, and conceals their presence from her friends. The straightening out of the misunderstandings which result form a strong ending.

Ellen's school teacher in the West advises the Farleys to send their daughter to the East to finish her education. They consent and Mr. Farley and his daughter start for the big city. As they emerge from the big depot the ranchman's bewilderment on being in such a large town is not improved any by having a taxi driver snatch the school's address out of his hand, wrestle his baggage from him, and thrust him and Ellen into an auto to be whirled away to their destination. They arrive safely and Ellen is enrolled as a scholar. At first her queer manners and odd, old-fashioned style of dress make her the subject of many jokes and considerable hazing, but gradually she assimilates Eastern styles and customs and is no longer looked upon as an outsider.

Shortly after her graduation she meets Jack Conway, and they marry. Her parents decide to surprise her with a visit, and arrive on the day on which Ellen has planned a formal reception. At dinner she takes particular care that they drink quite a bit of champagne and then hustles them upstairs thinking that the champagne's effect will keep them quiet. But it doesn't. When the function is at its height Mr. and Mrs. Farley decide to join in the entertainment. The guests are shocked and Ellen scolds her parents for making a show of themselves. That is their first intimation that they are not wanted.

In the morning they pack their things preparatory to starting back home. Ellen meets them at the door as they are about to leave and apologizes for her conduct of the night before. A few days later the old folks leave for the West accompanied by Ellen and her husband.

Hugo Reisinger Dead

Filmdom was startled to learn this past week that Hugo Reisinger, wealthy carbon importer, art collector and merchant of 11 Broadway, New York City, had passed away on September 26, at Langenschwalbach, near Wiesbaden, Germany, where he was born on January 29, 1856. Mr. Reisinger is survived by two sons, Curt H., of 565 Park avenue, New York, and Walter F., a student at Harvard University. It is understood the body will be brought to America.

kidnapped or roughly handled. She is exposed to dangers, of course, but Providence assumes the responsibility heretofore allotted to Crane Wilbur, and rescues her by removing the hazardous results of Owen's schemes.

An automobile race embodies the greater amount of the action, and it is clearly photographed and startling in its realism. More so, in fact, than anything yet seen in the series, with the exception of the steeplechase in the thirteenth episode. There are a number of serious accidents in the race, and the spectator is given an excellent view of them. In one case a machine in the foreground gets beyond control, runs part way up the steep embankment beside the road, and pitches over backwards pinning its occupants underneath. Another machine is seen to turn turtle and roll over several times, throwing its driver and mechanician out into the road, one of them being killed by the fall.

The gang comes to the aid of the defeated duelist.

The public wants realism in pictures, not papier-mache effects and trick photography, and the increasing demand and continued bookings with which this Eclectic serial is being met everywhere shows that the exhibitors and public appreciate honest-to-goodness thrills worked into an interesting story.

Pauline secretly applies to an automobile racing association for entrance in a coming event. Her application is accepted, and she joyfully tells Harry of her plan of driving her monster new car in the coming race. He objects, and, as usual, is overruled. Pauline accompanies him down to the gate on his way to work, and is insulted on the way by a foreigner. Harry knocks him down, and the man demands satisfaction in a duel—all a part of Owen's scheme. The duel is fought and Harry wins. Seven of Balthaza's men rush out from the bushes to attack him, and he and Pauline, who has accompanied him as his second, drive them off with the fencing swords.

After much effort Harry finally induces Pauline to allow him to drive the car in the race which is to take place the next day. Pauline rides with him as mechanician. Owen thinks he sees an opportunity to kill two birds with one stone, and enters his foreign duelist in the race, instructing him to collide with the Marvin car when its tires become punctured, a matter left to Balthaza to accomplish. The gypsy carries out his part by spreading a number of six-pointed pieces of metal on the track in the path of Harry's car. Just as he finishes his fiendish work he is discovered and pursued. Harry is warned of the danger in time and averts it, but the car following, the foreigner's, falls into the trap and its driver is killed in the accident resulting.

Owen is enraged by seeing his plans so utterly foiled, but overcomes his bitter expression and greets the winners, Harry and Pauline, with smiles and words of congratulation.

"MISS CINDERELLA," late Eclectic release, is an exceptionally good one-reel picture. The most pessimistic would have trouble finding fault with either its plot or its acting. There is a spicy, refreshing air about the story that is a decided novelty, in that it is missing from the majority of single reel plots.

The keystone of the picture is its titular role and the producers were fortunate in securing the type of girl they did, for she fairly radiates charm and vivacity, as a "Cinderella" should. Her beauty and mannerisms captivate on her first appearance.

Ruth is a modern Cinderella, with two old-maid sisters, Gladys and Gwen, who are anxious to marry and who envy her because of her beauty and youth. The Marions have a week-end party and Jack Lee is to be one of the guests. Ruth dresses up and takes a conspicuous position in the parlor, but is soon routed by her older sisters, who realize that they have no chance with Jack if he meets the younger sister. After Jack's arrival Ruth bounds into the parlor, and is as promptly rushed out by Gladys and Gwen, but not before Lee sees her and becomes desirous of meeting the little girl.

The next day Ruth goes wading and again sees

The elopement of Jack and Cinderella.

Jack. This time he is busily casting for trout and does not see her. He moves up the stream until he is just around the curve from where Ruth is hurriedly putting on her slippers. The fisherman hooks one of them in casting and she flees for fear of being discovered. Jack is amazed as the daintiness of the slipper and determines to meet its owner. He secretly compares it with the shoes of the other members of the house party, but without finding another its size.

As a last resource he returns to where he caught it, and there finds Ruth. They decide to elope, and return home for Ruth's things and an auto. Mrs. Marion is shocked and the sisters keenly disappointed to receive a note telling of the couple's plans and asking them to keep the slipper as a mascot until their return.

TWO of the three reels of "The Warning," an Eclectic feature of late release, form a picturization of an intoxicated youth's dream. In pictures where the dream effect is applied as a tonic, a means of bridging difficulties which would, without the vision's aid, be impossible, it weakens the plot and draws the life from its interest. Such is not the case in this film for the dreamer is the only one affected by the lesson taught by his dream and therefore there are no improbable complications to be smoothed over. The first part of the picture starts out like the beginning of a plot, but it is merely a prologue, the real plot being the youth's vision of how he drifts from bad to worse because of his evil associations and addiction to drink. He finally commits a murder, is imprisoned and escapes but is recaptured and sacrificed by his father who is unrelenting in what he considers his duty though the criminal be his own son.

Creighton Hale and M. O. Penn play the leading parts, and are well supported by a large cast of extras, a number of whom are Cornell students. Wharton, Inc., produced the picture at its Ithaca studio, and Wharton, himself, appears in it several times in minor parts. Creighton Hale's role as the wayward son, Lester Goodrich, supplies him with plenty of good material to show his ability as a juvenile lead, and he does good work in it. In the character of the Reverend Mr. Goodrich, M. O. Penn's work is beyond criticism. He improves every dramatic opportunity offered, and his emotional acting is thoroughly convincing. A close-up shows him weeping while praying for strength to carry out his duty, his facial expressions clearly interpreting the mental agony he suffers in forcing himself to cause his own son's death.

Marco Twins in Films

'Real' comedy in 'reel' comedy correctly expresses the universal opinion of the Marco Twins pictures just produced by L. F. Allardt of Chicago, executive head of the Allardt circuit of vaudeville theaters, extending throughout the United States and Canada. The Allardt Feature Film Company, of which he is the president, has produced many photo plays of note but the latest production from its studio "The Marco Twins in Night Mares," is a record breaker. Each story represents a dream or more correctly speaking a nightmare, and the physical characteristics of the Marco Twins enable them to offer more grotesque pantomine and excedingly funny situations than other artists appearing on the screen today. The pictures consist of a series of single reel comedies. Each subject is presented in the form of a dream or nightmare. One subject is released each week and different characters are portrayed in each picture. The scenarios were written by such well known authors as Junie McGree and others.

When it was first announced that the Marco Twins would appear in the "movies" under the direction of Mr. Allardt, it was conceded that their films would prove a riot and such has been the result. The Marco Twins have been the world's laughing vaudeville hit for years. They first appeared at the Folies Bergere, Paris, in 1887 and since that time have presented their act in almost every civilized country on the globe. One of the twins is a giant in stature, thin as a lath and all knee-caps, elbows and angles, and the other a veritable mite, a tiny little fellow, rotund in face and figure and brimming over with good humor.

According to a report in a recent issue of the Chattanooga Times Florence Turner upon her return from Europe will head a company which will locate in that city.

Lawyer Gives Freedom to Save Girl

Production Well Constructed

IN "Jailbirds," the two reel American Film Manufacturing Company release of October 12, a highly dramatic story is presented by a cast of very capable actors and several thrills are legitimately introduced, the whole going to make up a production which is meritorious in every respect.

The setting of the story alternates between the East and West, the former being represented by broad expanses of beautiful mountains, and the latter by artistically arranged interiors. The plot is strong and the players, especially William Garwood and Vivian Rich, take advantage of every dramatic situation in which they are placed. Jack Richardson gives a portrayal of a brute which borders on the gruesome, while Harry Von Meter and Louise Lester depict a very smooth pair of crooks in a most pleasing manner. Charlotte Burton, though appearing only for a short time, does good work as the brute's wife.

A scene from American's "Down by the Sea."

The story opens with Robert MacFarlane's arrival in the West. He is a young lawyer and has come to this part of the country in hope of securing an unworked field for himself. He meets Audrey Austin, a clever illustrator, and they become friends.

Robert sees that the girl has talent and advises her to go to New York where opportunity awaits her. She secures her mother's consent to the plan and leaves for the East. Soon after her departure Robert is visited by Mrs. Patterson, whose husband, a drunken brute, has continually abused her until she has decided to seek a separation from him. As the other lawyers in the town fear the brute they refuse to handle the case, but Robert says he will gladly try to free her from her misery and at once takes the case.

The brute hears of Robert's action and comes to his office. In the quarrel that follows the brute attempts to draw a pistol but the lawyer seizes his hand and the bullet hits Patterson, killing him. Robert is arrested and, as he sits in his cell awaiting trial, Audrey is in New York, discouraged and with no work in sight. Mrs. Carson and Dupree, a clever pair of society crooks, see her, and having a loot in sight make her acquaintance that they may use her as a tool.

Robert is found guilty but makes a thrilling escape by first jumping through the window of the courtroom and then jumping from a horse to a moving train. He makes his way to New York and one night strolls into a cafe in time to see Dupree and Mrs. Carson shift the blame of a theft they have perpetrated onto Audrey. Robert goes to the police station and explains how he saw the theft committed, clearing Audrey. He is recognized by a detective, however, and returned to the West.

When his time is up he comes back to Audrey and claims her for his own. He asks her as a favor to let two little canaries she has in a cage fly away as he cannot bear to see anything imprisoned after what he has gone through. As the birds fly away the young couple find happiness in each other's arms.

Following is the cast:

Robert MacFarlane, a young attorney.....Wm. Garwood
Audrey Austin .....Vivian Rich
Dirk Patterson .....Jack Richardson
Mrs. Patterson .....Charlotte Burton
Henry Dupree, a crook .....Harry Von Meter
Mrs. Carson .....Louise Lester

Million Dollar Mystery Continues

Thrilling hand-to-hand encounters, trap doors which release to hurl the handsome hero into the underground dungeons, forged letters used as a means of decoying the hero to the villain's hiding place, and innumerable disguises donned to deceive the clever reporter, all tend to make part seventeen of the "Million Dollar Mystery" a picture of note.

This episode permits Florence a brief breathing spell between her thrilling adventures, as Jimmie Norton, the reporter-hero, is the character about whom the plot revolves in this particular portion of the Thanhouser series. Braine and Countess Olga are extremely busy in luring the helpless victims within their power and Jones, the butler, once more proves a friend in need, in this latest episode of the MacGrath story.

As the story runs, Countess Olga invites Florence to accompany her to a florist's, thereby getting her out of the way while the conspirators plan to trap Jimmie Norton.

Braine, the chief of the conspirators, forges a note to Norton, leading him to believe that Florence has gone to a friend's home and that she wishes him to call for her. Unsuspectingly, Norton goes to the rendezvous at the appointed hour and is there met by Braine, disguised as the owner of the house. He greets Norton and gives the signal to his concealed confederates which will result in Norton being struck over the head with a jimmy and hurled into a basement dungeon, below.

Fortunately, Norton beholds, in the case of his watch, the reflection of the man who is to strike him and turns to hurl the contents of his wine glass in the conspirator's face, blinding him and giving Norton time to attack Braine.

In the scuffle which ensues, Norton, Braine and another of the conspirators are all hurled into the dungeon beneath. Jones, meanwhile, has learned of Norton's peril and after eluding Countess Olga, obtains entrance to the house and rescues Norton from the dungeon by means of a tablecloth, used as a rope. Ere Jones and Norton can bring the police to the scene, the conspirators make their escape and are once more free to set another trap for Florence and her friends.

Lubin Author Receives a Shock

Emmett Campbell Hall tells this himself, so of course it must be true. He was, he deposes, standing in the lobby of a Washington theater, peacefully absorbing satisfaction from the lavish display of posters announcing the showing of "The Beloved Adventurer" series and the fact that the book, published by the Lubin Company coincident with the release of the first installment of the series, was to be had at the box office if patrons hurried, when he became conscious that the manager, to whom he is known, was pointing him out to a friend.

"That's Hall, that lanky guy. He wrote the plays and the book, you know," the manager remarked. The other man surveyed the blushing author with kindly eyes. "Oh, well," he said, "you never can tell what any of us might do under stress. Perhaps the poor chap is the only support of a large family of small children, or he may even have needed new tires for his automobile."

Ella Wheeler Wilcox Poem Filmed

Ella Wheeler Wilcox animates an enjoyable reel of film entitled "Summer Days With Ella Wheeler Wilcox," which film is the product of the Humanology Film Producing Company of Medford, Mass., and was shown to an invited attendance on the morning of October 5 at the Globe theater, New York. This single reel of film, however, was but a prelude to the five-part adaptation of Mrs. Wilcox's poem, "The Price He Paid," and which, staged by Lawrence B. McGill and scenarioized by Louis Reeves Harrison, forms an interesting and educational release.

"Folks talk too much of a soul from heavenly joys debarred, and not enough of the babes unborn by the sins of their fathers scarred," is the text of the theme and one of the stanzas from the Wilcox poem. Before the picture's showing the poem "The Price He Paid," was recited from the stage by Eleanor Gates. The scenario and production reflect respective credit upon Mr. Harrison and Mr. McGill. The one-reel film, which gives us a personal acquaintance with Ella Wheeler Wilcox, is especially pleasurable.

"Marta of the Lowlands" is the Famous Player picture that has entertained capacity audiences all week at the Strand theater, and its star. Bertha Kalich, has made much of the part in which she makes her debut on the screen. Others in the cast are Wellington A. Playter, Hal Clarendon and Lillian Kalich.

Twenty-One Ems Ten-Point

By Ed Mock

IT DOESN'T much matter how physically fit you are when you go into a hospital to have it cut out —you come away from the place either desperately sick, or dead. There are only these two ways. I had it cut out and survive, so there must have been something left for me to do. If you are a careful reader you may recall that my last words before entering the hospital were in the nature of an apology—that my work failed of my own approval. So I told the man with the knife to remove everything he found that might have bearing on my defects. ¶ If you have never taken a high-dive into a seething sea of ether you will be scarcely able to appreciate how I sank into eighty-two and a half feet of it before I lost consciousness, and I fought every inch of the way in spite of the admonition to be calm. At that, I felt the "harness" which was to bind me to the torture rack for the subsequent two hours and I didn't "come to" for a long time afterwards. I got my first sniff of the nauseating anesthetic at eight and it was fourteen minutes of twelve that same morning when I came back to earth. It was my half day's contribution to science! At the great depth I was resting, nothing short of Williamson's submarine apparatus would have made motion pictures possible. Now that it is over, I'm sorry I neglected to have had the operation photographed, for it was all very unusual. You see, I was having the Goat removed from the Goat-man! That is why I dwell on the matter. Being the Goat was beginning to assume permanency and while I am selfish in some things, I'm willing at times to make sacrifices. I have now given up being the Goat. The business needs one quite likely, but henceforth I refuse to be it. I have heard that my former playmate, M. A. Neff, is breaking into the lot and he can have my old place with all its attending emoluments. I'm through.

The Duke's proposal meets with Marie's refusal in Warner's "In the Duke's Power."

To be the Goat of any industry is more than an average man's job. It isn't comforting to make the biggest exhibitors of this and other countries into your down town club and have them express amazement during luncheon, that MOTOGRAPHY should have so much trouble in meeting the competition of the Noo York journals. I have kept reasonably close tabs on my contemporaries ever since they started into this business. I have dared to do many things that have been profitable to them and costly to me. I have seen one of them grow from a wafer to a great weekly almanac. Its evolution defies analysis. Also I have seen the hypnotic influence of another journal—active only a little more than a year—force home the belief that there are approximately seven thousand m. p. exhibition places in this country. These wonderful(?) mediums get away with any and all kinds of text that would promptly put me out of commission. I attribute much of their ability to get by to my self-applied misnomer. This goat game can go to the guy who wants it. Six years of it gives me my degree. I'm through, with clean hands and a doctor's certificate.

Jim learns the truth.

Some of my numerous and loyal friends will now cease their commiserations. Dear old Billy Horne will please cheer up.

Then, too, the "On the Outside Looking In" caption was being boosted by a lot of prospective advertisers who painstakingly refrained from planting their business because they felt reasonably sure that it was my exacting wish to ring true to the caption! Can you imagine it? Fact, nevertheless. Some of those good customers who kick in a page advertisement now and then have told me that it was merely to encourage a luxury! When you're the Goat, it behooves you to resent nothing. Oh, I'm surely through.

Since I've been on a diet of gruel my thinking apparatus has been sighing for nice thick sirloin and I've been far from the scenes of battle. It is all right to take broth from a spoon in the nurse's hand, if that is the only thing left for you to do. It is temporary pleasure to look about the room and spot that great bunch of jack roses and know it came from a friend who had stuck all the way. Over yonder was another big bouquet from a colony of friends. Everywhere were floral offerings, roses, gladiolas, carnations—enough for a more solemn occasion. And in the long hours, I thought little of my own affliction. My heart went out to the immediate family of Charlie Hite. Hite's untimely end filled me with sorrow. Thus far the film business has been kind to those who shape its destiny. Probably that is because there is so much to do and so few to do it. For it must be understood, sooner or later, that of the vast numbers identified with the business, only a trifling minority actually work on the problems that the industry presents. We are comparatively young yet, and that may account for the prevailing good health. Charlie Hite lost his life by accident. When I rode with him, only a few weeks ago, in the fateful car that plunged with him to his death, I suggested golf as a more suitable diversion for a man of his temperament. His answer was a natural one, deploring lack of time for the game.

Harry's defense of Pauline forces him into a duel with Ferrari.

How I wish he might have chosen golf instead of that Cole roadster.

It seems like I've been gone a long, long time. The only things that haven't set the world afire are those numerous programs we were to have had about sixty days ago. When my fingers and thumbs hold out there are just enough to count the programs on—and still more to come. And there isn't a man of us who isn't smart enough to know they can't all survive. Some of the promoters of these programs are already at work planning mergers in order to make another screaming announcement for the exhibitors to wait for the truly big show. Suppose the M. P. Snooze was right in its assumption that there were only 7,000 of us exhibitors—how long before we each have our very own exclusive manufacturer? That would be the life.

In open defiance of this latest guesser at the number of theaters, I'm ready to go on record that there are twenty odd thousand film exhibiting places in the United States and Canada. I have been pretty diligent with my checking of newspaper clippings for the past six years and my own list of exclusive m. p. houses has bobbed around from small beginning to slightly more than 15,000. No list has been more susceptible to fluctuation, but the growth is ever upward. I know that I haven't got 'em all. I have sold my list outright time and again and it stays put. The largest list I know anything about has nearly reached twenty thousand and it isn't claiming all of 'em by any means. Few film manufacturers will swallow the Snooze estimate, but some of them fall for the bunk that is doled out by the ad solicitor.

Motography, the trade journal, has earned the enviable reputation of being so exclusively high-grade that it must class with the popular magazines. Few publishers would accept such fact as being complimentary. Just because we cannot be satisfied with a bad piece of printing, we suffer the distinction between a sloppy trade journal and a high-grade popular. Only recently we lost heavily because of this presumption. Motography a popular magazine! Watch our smoke. We'll make it a trade journal if a life time with printer's ink is worth anything. But we will continue to print it with infinite care, just the same.

George H. Wiley paid me a visit the day I trudged back to my desk. Wiley is thoroughly convinced that the motion picture exhibitors of this country will never effect satisfactory organization, and with his experience, the statement should carry weight. I know that exhibitors' organizations will amount to very little until the big fellows take hold. The difference between the little country film renter and his big metropolitan brother is equal to the difference between a thousand dollars and a quarter of a million dollars. The country exhibitor who hires three reels twice a week at a maximum of $1.00 a reel must not be overlooked, because his troubles are apt to be much more emphatic than the big chain theater operator. Both types come under the same general head and both are essential to the exchangemen. The organizer who can bring these elements into one grand organization hasn't been found. Because Mr. Wiley says the job is hopeless and thankless shouldn't mean that it isn't possible. The game is young yet.

They tell me Wid Gunning got back and that Roxie Rothapfel has quit the Strand. I associate these two items because Wid is now a Broadway exhibitor. If he will emulate America's premiere exhibitor, he won't have time to braid his beard.

And Frank Lewis Dyer becomes active again. Well, I'm mighty glad of that.

David Horsley's dopester, Chester Beecroft, insists that his employer has joined the general fold. Whadyamean, fold? Now that I've kicked down my little old fence I'm interested in such places. But go ahead and play your aces. They're good, providing there isn't a Joker in the deck.

Can You Name This Baby?

After hovering for some days over the domicile in which David Horsley resides the stork descended and left therein a bouncing baby boy as an heir to the Horsley fortune. It is said to have arrived at approximately the same hour at which contracts were closed for placing the Horsley comedies on the General Film Company's program, and needless to say the new Horsley release far outshadows all other Horsley brands An invitation has been extended to Mr. Horsley's friends to suggest a name for the new arrival and the truthful Horsley press agent alleges with due solemnity that up to the hour of our going to press no less than seventeen telegrams and fifty-six letters have arrived from all parts of the country, each one suggesting a name. Perhaps though there's still a chance for you to suggest a suitable one.

Another New Program

Still another program has been added to the several recently announced. The Alliance Films Corporation is the name of the newcomer and George West of the West Knitting Company, Syracuse, N. Y., is the president and Andrew Cobe, vice-president and general manager.

As outlined by Mr. Cobe, the Alliance program is to be practically a co-operative one, the film manufacturer sharing in the profits of the films when they are being shown in the theaters, though the Alliance Film Corporation is not to be interested in the exchanges, nor the manufacturing companies and the manufacturing companies themselves are not to be interested in the exchanges. Each manufacturer is to stand by himself, receiving a percentage of the bookings. The better picture he makes the more benefits he will derive, which should prove a tremendous incentive for rivalry in the race for quality. Every subject must be submitted to the exchanges before it is placed on the Alliance program and an unbiased and uninfluenced committee will judiciously pass upon the drawing power of the film, its photography and acting, before the subject is definitely announced as a release of the Alliance Films Corporation.

Under the Alliance arrangement the manufacturer cannot make any money unless his film can earn it, since his profits are to be entirely derived from the percentage of the bookings. Since none of the manufacturers can be interested in the exchanges, the Alliance cannot be influenced to release a picture that is not of the highest grade.

Already it is announced that the Exclusive Feature Film Company, Inc., the Select Feature Photoplay Company and the Favorite Players, Inc., are to be among the manufacturers releasing through the Alliance, though others are shortly to be added.

As every exhibitor knows the Exclusive has offered as its first release, "The Path Forbidden," in which Octavia Handworth is to be featured, supported by such players as Gordon De Maine and William A. Williams. The Select Feature Photoplay Company of which S. G. Lindeman is treasurer, will have as its first offering "At the Old Cross Roads," in which Miss Estha Williams is the featured star in her original role of "Parepa," supported by such players as Mrs. Stuart Robson, Arthur Morrison, Miss Rae Ford and Master Martin; while the Favorite Players, Inc., announces Carlyle Blackwell in "The Key to Yesterday" as its first release, Mr. Blackwell being supported by J. Francis Dillon, Edna Mayo, John J. Sheehan, John Prescott and Gypsy Abbott.

California M. P. Co's Premiere

Invitation have been issued by the California Motion Picture Corporation for the first showing of "Salomy Jane," it's first release, which is a film dramatization from Liebler & Company's original production, adapted by Paul Armstrong from Bret Harte's romance of the same title. Miss Beatriz Michelena, the California Motion Picture Corporation's leading woman, makes her film debut in this production. The private showing is to be held on Thursday evening, October 8, from 8:30 until 11 o'clock at the Hotel St. Francis, San Francisco, California. The invitations are tastefully engraved and bear in gold embossing the trade-mark of the California Corporation.

Alco Program Changes

The Alco Film Corporation, the announcement of which several weeks ago created so profound an impression in the motion picture field, now announces that through a series of eliminations and additions its program is complete, and work has been begun on five distinct productions, one each, of the various allied producing concerns whose products constitute the Alco Program.

Since the previous announcement the Alco states that the products of the Excelsior Feature Film Company and the Favorite Players Film Company have been eliminated from the program and in their stead the creations of the B. A. Rolfe Photo Productions and the Tiffany Motion Picture Corporation have been placed.

Mr. Rolfe, for many years an adjunct of the vaudeville stage and considered by many as the most artistic and best quality producer of the high class variety stage, will in the future devote his entire time to the photo plays which he contemplates producing.

The Tiffany Motion Picture Corporation, composed of prominent and recognized men of the industry, announces that its first production will be the eminent dramatic actress, Mrs. Leslie Carter, in her best remembered stage triumph, "The Heart of Maryland." The Tiffany Motion Picture Corporation will send Mrs. Carter and company of supporting players to Shenandoah, Virginia, the original locale of this famous Belasco piece, where the principal scenes of the production will be staged.

The first release of the Alco Film Corporation, Miss Ethel Barrymore in Augustus Thomas' play, "The Nightingale," will reach the market this week and from all reports it is one of the most satisfactory feature productions of the year. Andrew Mack in the Popular Plays and Players production of the "Ragged Earl," will be the second release of the Alco progrm.

Pearce Works Hard on Tax Bill

President Marion S. Pearce has been the busiest man in Washington since the first hint that a tax on motion picture theaters was to be included in the bill now under discussion in the capitol. Day and night he has been working here, there and everywhere, interviewing everybody whose opinions were of value to the league, protesting in the strongest terms at his command against the provisions of the bill, and laboring incessantly that the bill, when finally passed, might be of such a nature as would prove least objectionable to exhibitors everywhere.

In the first place the league was assured that the bill, which was in course of preparation by the ways and means committee of the house of representatives, would include no tax whatever on motion picture theaters. Hence it was a complete surprise to learn when the bill was reported out of the committee that each motion picture theater in the country was to be burdened with a tax of $100 regardless of size, capacity or anything else.

To make the matter harder to get at, a special provision had even then been agreed on that this bill could not be amended on the floor of the House, and furthermore, no hearing, either public or private, would be permitted.

Confronted with this condition, the obvious thing to do was to pick the bill up at the first available point, i. e. in the U. S. Senate, and bring all possible pressure to bear on the finance committee to which the measure had been referred.

With every sort of hearing denied, all opportunity for discussion, debate or protest was at once cut off, and the only hope lay in trying to reach the members individually and impress upon them in the strongest possible words, the utter unfairness of the bill, as proposed, at the same time outlining a plan which would be in some measure equitable for both the large and small exhibitor, and hence agreeable and acceptable to all.

Without the very limit of powerful effort that was brought to bear, even an interview would have proven entirely out of the question with most of the men, and to this end President Pearce has been untiring in his efforts, working day and night, and losing no opportunity to say a word here and plant a fact there to bring about the desired result.

After interviewing the chairman and members of the committee of finance, they immediately saw the justice of the protest to the original bill and the equitable features of the amendment, and unhesitatingly said so. While it is sure that the tax cannot be removed from motion picture theaters entirely (which was the first effort made) at the same time it is equally certain that it will not pass in its present form, but will include, when reported out of the committee, embodying as a component part, a graduated scale which is fair and just to exhibitors both large and small.

President Pearce wants to thank the members of the league for the splendid way they responded to his request for telegrams and letters to the senators and members of congress on this war tax measure. The good effect of these made it easier to accomplish what has been done and President Pearce wants every exhibitor in the country to realize that not for an hour will he leave Washington or lose sight of the issue at hand until the revised bill becomes a law.

Columbus Comedies

Exhibitors using the General Film program have noted the recent appearance of Columbus brand comedies. These pictures are being made at the old Gaumont studio in New York by Joseph Levering, who has long been identified with the production of Melies comedies. Miss Marion Swaine, former star of James Montgomery Flagg's "Adventures of Kitty Cobb" is to be the new star of the Columbus brand. Both Mr. Levering and Miss Swaine have been featured in Solax and Blache productions. The Columbus leading lady last season was leading ingenue with the Orpheum Players of Philadelphia. The supporting company are Arthur Hill, recently of "A Good Little Devil," Phin Nares, formerly of the Pathe and Edison companies; Mary Baker, Jules Cluzzetti and Harry Mack. Pell Mitchell is to be the publicity man. Columbus films will release two comedies each week on the General Film Program, one on Tuesday and one on Thursday, and one or two special features each fortnight.

"The Rose of the Rancho"

Work on "The Rose of the Rancho" has begun at the Lasky studios. Cecil De Mille and twenty-one players, including Theodore Roberts and Bessie Barriscale, are at Old Monterey, California, where the many Spanish scenes are being enacted. The Lasky concern has leased a two thousand acre tract of land at the foot of the San Fernando mountains.

FIGHTING THE $100 TAX.

THE proposed flat "war tax" of $100 to be levied on all theaters according to the provisions of a bill which has already passed the House, and which we protested against last week, is creating a vast amount of agitation among theatrical men. Among the agencies most vigorous in attacking the bill is the well known United Managers' Protective Association, which is composed of representatives of amusement enterprises of this country and Canada. This strong association is organizing a committee of motion picture men to work with and later become a part of the board of governors of the association. This committee includes such men as J. J. Kennedy, Adolph Zukor, P. A. Powers, George Kleine, Harry R. Raver, C. H. Wilson, Jesse Lasky, W. N. Selig, Siegmund Lubin, Carl Laemmle, Samuel Long and J. Stuart Blackton.

The board of governors as at present constituted includes A. L. Erlanger, Charles Frohman, David Belasco, William A. Brady, Al H. Woods, Martin Beck, Winthrop Ames, Sam H. Harris, Marcus Loew, John Cort, E. D. Stair, Alfred E. Aarons, Oscar Hammerstein, Harry G. Sommers, Daniel Frohman, William Fox, Sargent Aborn, Charles Burnham, Joseph Hart, Oliver Morosco, J. Stuart Blackton, Walter Vincent, George H. Nicolai, Albert Weis and Alf Hayman, while the president and first, second and third vice presidents of the association are respectively Marc Klaw, Lee Shubert, E. F. Albee and Henry W. Savage—all names to conjure with in the theatrical world and some of them prominent in the picture field.

One of the most interesting features of this association is its principle that the interests of the stage theater and the picture theater are the same. This theory will be applied not only in the case of the war tax—which, of course, is the most pressing and immediate demand upon the influences of the association—but also in the matter of censorship, and, in short, every question which affects amusement enterprises.

It is an encouraging sign that the "legitimate" theater interests—less numerous, but long established and powerful—are about to join forces with the motion picture interests for the general good of the amusement business. The United Managers' Protective Association should prove an agency of tremendous potency, not only in convincing the law-makers of the injustice of a $100 flat tax, but in many other future actions, perhaps of equal importance, when the present crisis shall have passed. All exhibitors will do well to join forces with the United.

ALL THE FILMS OF THE WEEK.

ALL the films of every week will hereafter be described in synopsis form in Motography's pages. The first appearance of the new department is in this number. In devoting so much space each week to this feature it is our aim, of course, to be of the greatest possible service to the exhibitor. We wish to present the most complete, the most concise and the most convenient compendium of current releases and features it is possible to make.

On the completeness of this department, our persistent effort to list all of the films, will depend its value; for these same films are the very stock in trade of the exhibitor, the one great necessity of his business. But we cannot hope to achieve our whole purpose in this, to be one hundred per cent perfect, without the co-operation of the manufacturer and producer. From them must come the original announcements, far enough in advance of release day to enable us to help the exhibitor in his task of program selection. Most of the manufacturers are already supplying this information. We trust the few who are not will realize the importance to them of having their goods displayed in proper time, and will thus make the best of the incidental publicity which they must inevitably derive from such a listing. Manufacturers and producers who have not hitherto made any special effort to present definite descriptions of their films well in advance of release day are requested to do so.

By the conciseness of the department we mean its brevity. Brevity, indeed, is designed to be the greatest virtue of this work. Our object in this is not merely to save space—though the descriptions of all the films are bound to eat up several pages of type. Our chief end in abbreviating the synopses as much as possible is that "he who runs may read." In other words, it is our aim to tell as complete a story of each film as possible in as few words as possible. Half a minute should be ample time to read and digest any synopsis in the department.

As to the convenience, the arrangement of synopses in programs and by date of release, instead of classifying by their makers' names, will prove of advantage to the program-building exhibitor. Thus the releases of a given date under any program will be found grouped together; while at the same time the makers' name is indicated plainly in slightly different type so as to be readily observed at a glance.

While we hope to include in this department every film released in this country we repeat that this is impossible without the interest and co-operation of the manufacturers, all of whom are invited and requested to take advantage of this opportunity to present their product to the consumer in a different way.

Statement of the ownership, management, circulation, etc., of MOTOGRAPHY, puhlished hi-weekly, at Chicago, Ill., required hy the Act of August 24, 1912.

Note—This statement is to he made in duplicate, both copies to be delivered by the publisher to the postmaster, who will send one copy to the Third Assistant Postmaster General (Division of Classification), Washington, D. C., and retain the other in the files of the post office.

ED J. MOCK, Business Manager.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this seventeenth day of September, 1914.

(Seal) Leona J. Eckstrom.

My commission expires Aug. 17, 1918.

"Shore Acres," James A. Herne's brilliant classic, and "Michael Strogoff," with Jacob P. Adler in the titular role, will be the third and fourth issues of the Alco Corporation. All Star Feature Corporation made "Shore Acres," and Popular Plays and Players produced "Michael Strogoff."

Just A Moment Please

Say, Lloyd, who said anything about "butler's pantries?" Can it be your friend, the Western producer, is making foodstuff? Honesty demands my admitting that the "foodstuff" wheeze was inspired by your old friend C. J. V. and not by your humble servant.

Which leads us to remark that your reference to the "Master Mind" is flattery of the grossest sort. Lay off, old top, and spare our blushes.

"I think he's simple adorable, but that dimple must be painted on."
"How does Pauline ever come out alive?"
"Isn't it a crime to charge a dime for a punk show like this."
"Heavens, can't that woman stop her kid from squalling!"
"Oh, goody, Arthur Johnson is in this one, I just love him."

Word has reached us that a certain gentleman in the Effete East, who presides over the destinies of a certain film manufacturer's advertising department, is being deluged with letters from a Chicago manufacturer of colored post cards, beseeching him for his photograph for reproduction on a postal card. Much anxiety is evident among the other employees of the advertising department, lest their boss become convinced that he is a great man. However we know of no one better fitted to adorn a postcard than the above mentioned ———, but ssh, we promised not to divulge the secret of his identity, which has been entrusted to us.

ATTENTION DAVID HORSLEY.

If it's not too late to enter that baby naming contest, we humbly beg to submit as a suggestion the name "David." The youngster then ought to grow up a man as big as his father, able when necessity demands to go forth and slay a Goliath.

If the above suggestion doesn't make good perhaps Addison would be appropriate. Guess we needn't explain that one—just read it slow and you'll get it.

OUR BURG.

A. W. Thomas, photoplaywright of note, has taken up his residence in Our Burg. Welcome, A. W. Make yourself to bome.

Plans are under way for the printing of several war extras during the next week. Not on the European war, gracious no, but on the civil war going on betwixt the Cubs and Sox.

Marc E. Jones, who makes a business of putting the plays in photoplays, paused in Our Burg on Tues, while en route to Noo Yawk, where he goes to conquer new fields.

That auto ride Friend Schafer took us on was fully up to the billing. Almost made us wish we had one ourselves. Thanks, Fred. Drop around again.

Geo. Cox of Advance M. P. Co., has went to Cleveland, Ohio, on Biz.

Alliance Tobias of Noo Yawk and points East was seen on Main St. this wk. Welcome to our city.

Gee, Noo Yawk must be a lonesome place this week, with all the World's Series battles going on in Boston and Philadelphia.

WHADDAYA SPOSE AILS HIM?

Our friend and compatriot, C. J. C., was heard murmuring to himself the other day when ready to write a film review: "Now to describe the love scene. Having just returned from that dear Milwaukee, I'm right in trim."

OUR CENSOR BOARD.

The Blue Flame (Selig) cut out second flash of Collins in auto, reading memorandum which gives Etta's auto license number. In closeup scene he is wearing glove on hand that holds the memorandum. In larger picture his hand is bare.

That Screen Club election seems to have caused more excitement than a half dozen ordinary national campaigns, and why shouldn't it, with such notables as Kirkwood, Farnham and Quirk all running for office. Congrats, Kirkwood, on your election. May your term be long and peaceful.

But wait till the Reel Fellows hold an annual election.

Then's when the political pot will bubble.

You can almost hear it sizzle now.

Eh, Dick?

Motography's Gallery of Picture Players

THOMAS CHATTERTON began his theatrical career at the age of fourteen years in his home town, Geneva, New York. He acquired the stage fever early in life and, with several of his schoolmates, fitted up a theater in an old barn. The boys made their own footlights, painted their own scenery and built their own "props." The first two plays presented by the lads were war drama, written and directed by Chatterton. After many appearances in amateur plays he secured the position of general utility man with one of the Shubert stock companies in syracuse, N. Y. That engagement was followed by varied experiences with stock and road companies until in 1910 he was contracted for a whole season at the Alcazar in San Francisco, where he became very popular. In May, 1913, he joined the Kay Bee, Broncho, and Domino forces as leading man.

Thomas Chatterton.

FRANK BORZAGE was born in Salt Lake City about twenty-one years ago. He went on the stage when he was but 14, spending most of his time in stock in his home town. About a year ago he decided to try the picture field and joined the Universal, where he remained a few months. In September, 1913, he joined the New York Motion Picture Corporation and is at present playing the juvenile American leads with Mr. Ince's big Imperial Japanese company, and it is reasonable to believe from his work that Mr. Borzage, although he is one of the youngest, if not the youngest, leading man in filmdom, will soon reach the top of the ladder. He is a good looking, manly fellow with curly auburn hair and brown eyes; about five feet eleven inches tall, straight as an arrow, and a thoroughly wholesouled, clean young chap.

Frank Borzage.

MARGARET THOMPSON, after working as an extra girl for three months with the New York Motion Picture Corporation, was taken into the stock company in December, 1913. Her opportunity came when one of the leading ladies met with an accident and could not work. The company was not able to get anyone to take her place and the story was being held up. She overheard the director and the manager discussing the matter and trying to decide who should be given the part. Realizing that this was her chance and convinced that she could do the part, she approached the manager, who, in a very dubious manner, gave her the part. Her first real difficulty came in the big dramatic scene. Try as she would she could not seem to put the proper punch into her work until she heard a sarcastic remark about her ability. Spurred to greater effort by this, she did nobly.

Margaret Thompson.

HARRY G. KEENAN, a recent addition to the forces of the New York Motion Picture corporation, comes as leading man with a fund of actual stage experience that should prove of value to him in his new environment. He went into motion pictures at Niles, Cal., April 14, 1913 (western Essanay), directly from a thirty-eight weeks' season as the priest in "The Rosary," on the Stair and Havlin circuit. After ten months at Niles he signed with Thomas H. Ince and started his first lead in "The Gringo" under Walter Edwards' direction. He has, up to date, played leading roles in seven plays under the capable generalship of Mr. Ince. He started as an usher in Hooley's (now Powers) theater in Chicago, under the veteran, Richard M. Hooley, then became assistant treasurer there. During his long and varied stage career he has served under the Frohmans and Florenz Ziegfield.

Harry G. Keenan.

Whole Circus Hired for Film

A remarkable instance of the way the motion picture companies go to any trouble or expense to produce realistic scenes was the recent circus performance, staged by the California Motion Picture Corporation, in order to film part of the story of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch."

Instead of faking an audience and using the regular members of the company to play the parts of acrobats and bareback riders—with what would have been indifferent results, the corporation retained especially for the purpose a complete troupe of circus stars. A huge tent was set up at the camp of the "movie" company, and San Rafael, the neighboring town, was placarded with announcements of the "free circus," and the chance to see how a big picture was made.

The tent was filled—no difficulty about that. Every youngster in the entire district made it a point to be on the ground, and there was the inevitable complement of uncles, aunts, mothers and daddies to buy pink lemonade and peanuts and watch the "stunts." And they saw a performance that compared most favorably with the professional articles—for it was acted by professionals. There was La Belle Carmen, the graceful wire-walker formerly with Barnum and Bailey's show. La Savillas, European tumblers of note, did a turn. The Bensings thrilled with bareback riding. The Three Bones pieced out the bill with an aerial act which made the spectators gasp and Komic Kemp, a clown horse, had a share in the program.

When "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" is released by the California Motion Picture Corporation, the patrons of the "movies" will have an opportunity to judge for themselves how successfully this new film company of the Golden State has carried out its pledge to the public to set new standards in screen-drama realism.

Kirkwood President of Screen Club

Well, it's "President James D. Kirkwood" now, and really, no one should be surprised, as the Kirkwood popularity is so general a one. Anyway, that is what is responsible for his election to the office of president of the Screen Club and when his election was declared along about 2 a. m., Sunday, October 4, Joseph W. Farnham and his followers and "Billy" Quirk and his followers led the "three-cheers-for-Kirkwood" chorus. For they're all jolly good fellows —those Screeners. And they don't mind if they do have to survive on a diet of snow-balls until next pay-day. And that, reports Fred Beecroft, is about the situation among the many who demonstrated their loyalty to the factions who did not get into office.

"Bill" Barry's election to the office of corresponding secretary was accomplished by an exceptionally large number of votes. "As popular as Kirkwood" was the unspoken verdict.

Ben Wilson was named for first vice-president and popular choice favored "Doc" Willatt for second vice-president and Charles O. Baumann for third vice-president. George Blaisdell was voted into the office of treasurer and Paul Scardon into that of recording secretary.

The election of the Directorate Board occasioned as much interest as did that of the club's president. As a result, Jake Gerhardt, named first of the four elected, received more votes than the other three; and these comprised Frank Powell, King Baggot and Jules Bernstein.

Ventilation Ordinance Upheld

Despite the strenuous fight put up by C. C. Whelan of the Washington theater, 4300 Cottage Grove avenue, Chicago, the exhibitors of Chicago seem destined to be compelled to install ventilation systems which meet the full approval of the Chicago Health Department. Readers of Motography will recall the much discussed case of Mr. Whelan's theater, which was closed by Dr. Young last year and reopened when an injunction had been brought prohibiting the city from enforcing the present ventilation ordinance, until its validity was decided upon.

A recent weekly bulletin of the Health Department declares that the city has been awarded the decision by the Chancery Court for enforcing the present ventilation ordinance. The decision was handed down by Chancery Court Judge Wing, but it is understood that an appeal will be made by the defense to a higher court.

Child Vitagraph Star

Audrey Clayton Berry, one of the youngest of the Vitagraph players, was born in Lexington, Ky., Oct. 23, 1906, which makes her just seven years old her last birthday. Little Miss Berry's father, Edward Clayton Berry, claims Pittsburgh, Pa., as his birthplace. He is a well-known professional, as were his ancestors for many generations. Her mother's maiden name was Eliza Bean Neff. She was related to Rolfe, the husband of Pocahontas, and was of royal lineage through the Neff family, who held royal commissions for years. Miss Berry is receiving her education from a private tutor and is making remarkable progress in her studies. From the time she was three years old, she has been a movie fan, and it was but natural she should pose for the camera at the very first opportunity presenting itself. Miss Berry's first position in moving pictures was with the Pathe company. The excellence of the work of so young an artist was at once recognized, and she was immediately sought by other film concerns. Before joining the Vitagraph company she posed for three other picture companies and obtained each succeeding position strictly on her merits as an actress. Little Miss Berry is an earnest worker and believes in the maxim "Early to bed, early to rise," and a full day's work.

Audrey Berry.

Brevities of the Business

Colin Campbell is superintending the construction of an Irish village at the Selig Jungle-zoo. This "Emerald" town will be needed for the opening reel of the new nine-reel production, "The Rosary," in order to reveal the prologue of the photoplay prepared by Editor Lanier Bartlett, of the Selig Edendale studio.

Beverly Bayne, who plays opposite Francis X. Bushman in Essanay photoplays, appeared in person at a Joliet theater last Saturday. She has hundreds of admirers in the Illinois town who were more than desirous of seeing her in real life.

Frank Montgomery is producing a two-reel feature, "The Witch of the Sierras," by D. F. Whitcomb. This is the first of a series of twelve pictures, each complete in itself and is full of military, western and Indian action. Mona Darkfeather is featured.

William Garwood caught the train from Los Angeles for Santa Barbara which was held up in the San Fernando Valley at a place called Burbank. William submitted his watch for the gentleman's approval and it was appproved and confiscated as were five simoleons. Garwood was not so lucky as a New York man with "stein" at the end of his name—he was mulcted for eighty cents. However, Billy had a nice little wad in a secret pocket in his vest and is chuckling over getting home with it.

The great Sahara desert never revealed itself more piteously than the great arid region in Death Valley, where Director Colin Campbell and his company are camped for the purpose of securing natural and convincing scenes for "The Carpet from Bagdad," a coming Selig production. The negative, which has begun to reach the studio, reveals scenes of far-stretching, sandy wastes, almost of snowy whiteness, with heat waves dancing from sand dune to sand pit.

Charles M. Peck, formerly advertising manager and publicity man of the Box Office Attractions Company has just been appointed publicity manager of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company and is en route to California to assume his new duties.

S. C. Bestar, until recently a representative of Famous Players Film Service is now manager of the Picture Playhouse Film Company's office at 5 South Wabash avenue.

C. W. Leist, formerly a Famous Players Film Service representative, is now manager of the Chicago branch office of Alco Film Service, room 513 Mallers Building.

H. M. Horkheimer of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company was a business visitor in Chicago last week. From there he went to St. Louis in behalf of his company.

S. Montgomery, formerly of the Wabash avenue branch of the General Film Company, is now general manager of the Box Office Attractions Company, with offices in the Mallers building.

The International Social Service League, the concern organized by the Duke of Manchester to furnish motion pictures of religious subjects to schools and churches was suddenly put out of existence when creditors stripped its elaborate offices on East 51st street, New York City on September 23. The effect of the European war on the purse strings of the men who were financing the project is said to have caused the failure.

Due to an error, notices in the various trade journals recently stated that Alice Learn's theatrical career dated back to twenty years ago. Inasmuch as Miss Learn is only nineteen years old, the previous statement is incorrect. Miss Learn at the age of six played child parts, and for the past thirteen years up to her Miller Brothers, Edison and Eaco engagements with Edwin August, played a number of important ingenue parts with well known legitimate stage stars.

Carlyle Blackwell has been rarely complimented, as the publisher of "Spitfire," in which he starred for the Famous Players, is reissuing the book substituting Carlyle's name for the hero and with pictures taken from the photoplay.

Myrtle Stedman of the Bosworth Inc., is spending much of her private time in raising funds for the victims of the war. She does not care what nation she raises money for, she says that all wounded men are the same to her.

One of the most interesting future Selig productions will be a multiple-reel drama based upon James Whitcomb Riley's famous poem, "The Old Swimmin' Hole." The noted poet himself will be seen upon the screen, in the prologue. The photoplay was written by William E. Wing.

Harry Pollard and Margarita Fischer have returned to Santa Barbara and the "Beauty" brand, after a pleasant and necessary holiday in Los Angeles. While in the latter city Mr. Pollard was visiting the various power houses.

Harry Edwards, the Universal comedy director has joined the staff of H. Pathe Lehrman and he will have his own company. Louise Glaum who has played the leads for Mr. Edwards for so long will take a rest for a few days before resuming work.

Edwin August, head producer for the Eaco Films, is contemplating taking a company consisting of twenty-five players to Florida for the winter. It is also the intention of Mr. August to go to Bermuda to film a series of mythical photoplays.

Governor Hiram Johnson of California, the running mate of Theodore Roosevelt on the Progressive ticket, is a great picture fan and is always querying William E. Wing, who accompanied him on the last presidential campaign, as to the novelties in the field of motography. Recently, during a big parade, Governor Johnson saw Wing among the innocent spectators and halted his machine and the entire procession to get a few fresh tips on the moving picture situation.

The members of the Eclair stock company at Tucson, Arizona attended, on September 29, Barnum and Bailey's circus enmasse as guests of the circus management.

Acting on a promise made by the Universal animated weekly, the Belgian Commission made a visit to Manager Jack Cohn's office a few days ago and, after being royally entertained, were presented with film containing the pictures of King Albert. They hurried away from the office just in time to catch the steamer, Adriatic, which carried them back to their troubled country.

Life on the ocean wave is not what it is "cracked up to be," according to Edgar Lewis, who is preparing to direct a number of big productions for the Box Office Attraction Co. Of all his experiences, he counts as the most unique, his first introduction to the stoke hole of a British tramp steamer. He enjoys the distinction of having been shanghaied in the port of New York when he was 17 years old and when he came to, he was on the high seas bound for Bristol, England.

George Ade, author of "The Slim Princess," soon to be released by the Essanay Company, passed through Chicago last week on the way to his home in Hazelden, Ind., after a week's fishing in Minnesota. The first thing he asked was: "How's 'The Slim Princess' getting along?" He was pleased at the progress of the work in taking scenes and praised the acting of Francis X. Bushman, star of the production.

Frank Anderson, known professionally as Frank Armstrong, father of Mignon Anderson, leading woman with Thanhouser, died at his home in New York City recently. The deceased was well known as a tenor for a period of twenty-five years, serving in opera, on the dramatic stage and in vaudeville. His last professional engagement was with the famous "Yankee Comedy Four." Since then the deceased engaged in the insurance business in New York.

Leo Delaney, of the Vitagraph "old guard," has rejoined the company and will start again where he left off eight months ago. Mr. Delaney, after several years of diligent work in the Vitagraph life portrayals, has been taking a much needed rest and returns to his labors greatly refreshed and ready to begin all over again.

As a result of the premature starting of a landslide in the staging of the twelfth installment of the "Trey O' Hearts" series, early this week, the entire Gold Seal (Universal) company, including Wilfred Lucas, director, and Harry Vallejo, cameraman, missed death, literally by a matter of inches.

G. M. Anderson, playing in his favorite role, "Broncho Billy," did another hair-raising stunt the other day during the course of picture taking, when he rode his favorite pinto pony up a stairway of twenty-two steps, through a doorway and into a room.

It is not generally known that Hal Wilson, veteran character man and assistant to Webster Cullison at the Eclair studio in Tucson, Arizona, was at one time one of the fastest sprinters in this country. In 1882 Wilson was on the track team which represented the United States at the international meet in England.

In the recent Motion Picture Magazine popularity contest, Earle Williams of Vitagraph was the winner of the first prize. This is the second contest in which Mr. Williams has been chosen the most popular motion picture player on the screen. Miss Clara Kimball Young was second in the contest, winning the first prize for the leading lady candidate.

Beverly Bayne of Essanay was saved from what might have been a serious accident the other day while out riding. Her horse became frightened and dashed madly down the street with Miss Bayne clinging to the animal's neck. Mr. Cuneo, a recent acquisition to the Essanay dramatic company, saw the terrified animal and leaped forth and saved Miss Bayne from being thrown to the pavement.

Matt Moore, who made himself famous in "Traffic in Souls," has left the Victor studios at Coytesville, N. J., and has moved up to the Imp studio in New York, where he will play leads in the company of which Frank Crane is director.

Nolan Gane, who played the principal part in "The Cripple," has demonstrated that he can also write scenarios. His scenario, "A Dog's Love," has been recently produced at the Thanhouser studio. Shep, the Thanhouser dog, gives a wonderful exhibition of canine intelligence.

On Monday, September 28, Maurice Costello and Lillian Walker, of the Vitagraph players, appeared personally at the New York theater in behalf of the Red Cross Society. Several of the Vitagraph features were shown at this same performance and the Red Cross fund was largely increased by the results.

After an enforced absence of more than a week because of a nervous breakdown, James Dayton, scenario editor of the Universal west coast studios, has returned to his desk.

Donald Crisp, director for the Majestic-Mutual organization, has just purchased a 1914 National racing automobile and will enter it in the Los Angeles to Phoenix road race in November. Charles Muth, who assisted Guy Ball, driver of the second car in the 1913 race, will drive the car for Crisp, who already has planned a big dinner for members of his company, following the finish of the race.

Harry Ennis, formerly manager of the motion picture section of the New York Clipper, is now on the Billboard's staff reviewing vaudeville, burlesque, and occasionally motion pictures.

Lillian Gish, the attractive Majestic-Mutual star, is the possessor of several blisters on each hand as the result of her industrious efforts in repainting and revarnishing her dressing rooms at the Majestic Hollywood studios.

Carlton King, the Edison character man and comedian, is perhaps one of the greatest makeup artists in moving pictures. Recently he played the part of an old cardinal for a coming Edison release and looked the part so well that an old Irish woman meeting him near the Edison studio mistook him for a dignitary of the church and it was with much difficulty that he convinced her that he was only "made up" as such.

Two little admirers of Miss Vivian Rich, the popular leading lady of "Flying A" studios, the Misses Effie and Georgia Johns, presented her with a thoroughbred collie the other day. Miss Rich, who is very fond of dogs, greatly appreciates the gift and has named the dog "Guess."

ROLL OF STATES.

ILLINOIS.

The Lyric theater, one of East Moline's most popular motion picture houses, located on Seventh street, has been opened under the management of Grant Fair, after having been closed the greater part of the past month. Several improvements have been made in the theater and it now presents an up-to-date appearance.

Manager Martin Moran of the Alamo theater in Plainfield has improved his theater. The entire interior has been redecorated and three big oil paintings lend tone to the inside. Mr. Moran is keeping the Alamo up to a high standard of efficiency.

Acme Theaters Company, Chicago; capital stock, $10,000; moving picture, theater and amusement business. Richard H. Hollen, John A. Massen and M. H. Forner.

Early in October, the new Opheum theater in Champaign will be formally opened.

Gus Freman is remodeling two rooms, which face on Main street, in Urbana, and is building an addition 60 feet long, making a room a full half block. When completed it will be one of the finest moving picture theaters in the country. It will have every modern convenience.

IOWA.

Messrs. Luther Plumb and Emil Kratoska have secured the room in the Snyder building on the south side of Twelfth street, Belle Plaine, and are fitting it up for a moving picture theater. The building is being completely remodeled, and when finished will present a very attractive appearance.

The New Allerton theater was opened to the public in Independence, September 9, under the management of F. C. Knee, formerly of Waterloo. It is one of the finest moving picture theaters in the state, and has a seating capacity of 600, with every conceivable appliance for the comfort of its patrons.

E. E. Terry is remodeling the building next to his residence in Lisbon for a moving picture show.

General Program

Through Eyes of Love—Essanay, October 1.—Bessie Morris, a rich man's daughter, tires of her lazy life and decides to do some good in the world. At her father's suggestion, she visits her old nurse, the widow Hobbs. There she meets Samuel Jenkins, a rural lawyer, who pays her much attention and whom she promises to marry, when he can support her. Bessie has not revealed her wealth and six months later, Samuel secures a good start in business in the city, through the aid of Bessie's father and a wedding is planned for the near future.

The Borrowed Book—Biograph.—October 5.—The banker and the town's wealthiest citizen are lifelong friends, inseparable, until the capitalist, a bookworm, discovers a rare volume and lends it to the banker. A maid in the banker's household takes the book from his study to her room, and being discharged the next day by her mistrees, packs the book in her trunk before leaving. This incident ruptures the friendship and leads to serious consequences from which develop situations that call for much talent in acting.

Gwendolin—Biograph (two reels), October 6.—Ignorant of his Jewish birth, Daniel Deronda is despised by Grandcourt, the nephew of Sir Hugo, his benefactor. His love for Marah, a singer, aggravates the mystery of his birth, after he rescues her from suicide in the river. Marah discovers her long lost brother who will not permit her to marry Daniel because he is not a Jew, Grandcourt meets Gwendolin Harleth, but she will not marry him as she has been warned against him. She goes abroad and while absent loses her fortune. To recoup her loss she pawns her jewels to Daniel but he returns them with a note. To save her mother from poverty she then marries Grandcourt, but the woman who warned her against him invokes a curse against her and the curse works out when Grandcourt is drowned while sailing. Meanwhile Daniel's mother informs him that he is a Jew, and the way is cleared for him to marry Marah. Isabel Rea, Alan Hale and Ethel Kauffman featured.

Their Little Drudge—Biograph, October 8.—The village Cinderella leads a humdrum life until a chance remark and an accidental meeting bring her into two wonderful adventures. Thereafter she ceases to be Cinderella and becomes a beautiful woman to whom homage is due.

They Were College Boys—Biograph, October 9.—Mr. Mush tells his son that if he marries and settles down he will get $500. Percy's friend makes up as a girl and is introduced as the bride. In their new home they are surprised by a visit from Percy's sister and her friend. The bride becomes a man again and makes a hasty exit. Percy captures him and brings him back where they are confronted with Mr. and Mrs. Mush, but father has been flirting with the bride and to escape a compromising situation consents to a double wedding.

The Man Hunters—Biograph, October 9.—The entire police force is out to capture an escaped convict, in order to win $500 reward. The convict makes himself at home in the police station and other unexpected quarters but finally is captured by a spinster, who, having won the reward, becomes the police chief's bride.

It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. In that case please see that we are advised of your film titles and release dates, and furnished with a brief synopsis of the story. This department is intended for every film manufacturer, whether he uses our advertising pages or not.

His Mother's Home—Biograph, October 10.—The circumstances of her birth and upbringing force a young girl into a situation from which her woman's nature recoils, but the influences of her environment are such that she does not resist when the superior bidding directs her to commit a wrong, until love comes into her life through an accident. Then she is roused to a sense of her position and makes a brave effort to escape from her environment. In so doing she is brought into the home of the young man she loves and there the noble impulses of her nature, force her to make a confession to his mother, though it deprives her forever of his love.

Buster Brown's Eduction—Edison, October 12.—Learning that his mother is about to hire a tutor, Buster, with the assistance of Mary Jane and the faithful Tige, lays in a supply of paint and concocts a sign reading "Wanted, a Tutor to Tute Two Tots" which is placed in a prominent place on the Brown lawn. Algernon Cadwallader calls in answer to the ad, but when he learns the pupil is to be Buster he beats a hasty retreat followed by Tige and the Goat. Prof. Von Blitzen was the next applicant and was immediately engaged. Buster again tried his tricks but Von Blitzen routed not only Buster, but also Tige and the Goat and Buster earned a spanking.

George Washington Jones—Edison, October 12.—George Washington Jones consulted a spiritualist but was so frightened by the ghost and hobgoblins that were summoned that he fled from the house in a panic. Meeting a sausage peddler clad in white ducking, a bride in a white veil and gown, a street sweeper in white uniform and a baker in a white apron, he took them all for ghosts and grew more terrified. Escaping from a flour barrel into which the baker had hurled him, Jones rushed home to behold his wife in a nightgown which frightened him still further, though the climax was reached when he beheld his own flour-bedecked face in a mirror.

Swecdie Learns to Swim—Essanay, October 12.—Sweedie attends the "Dry Land" swimming class and is thrown out of the class after fighting with several of the members. At home Sweedie fills the bath tub and practices with the water knee-deep in the room. Falling plaster breaks up a card game in the room below and the members of the family rush upstairs, after sending in a riot call for the police and Sweedie is captured and thrown in the lake. Wallace Beery featured.

The Girl and the Stowaway—Kalem (two parts), October 12.—The family estates heavily mortgaged, Lord Richie endeavors to arrange a match between his son, George, and Adele, daughter of an American millionaire. George, however, refuses to meet Adele. To his father's horror, George announces his intention of working his way to America. The boy later becomes a stowaway aboard the same vessel which carries Adele and her family back to the United States. George sees a deckhand steal Adele's purse. He comes to her rescue. Each is ignorant of the other's identity. Adele learns that George is a stowaway. Later, the Englishman's hiding place is discovered and he is compelled to work on deck. He and Adele fall in love with each other. Just before the vessel reaches port, Adele is thrown overboard by the seaman who had been baffled in his attempt to steal her purse. George leaps to the rescue. The deckhand is arrested. George's identity is later revealed and he wins Adele's hand.

The Girl From the West—Lubin, October 12.—Lord Cecil, in a serious financial condition, sells what is left of his family jewels and raises the sum of $25,000. Monte Carson, professional confidence man, who has journeyed East with Betty, a young girl, whom he has unofficially adopted, lays plans to secure Lord Cecil's money and, using Betty as a decoy, gets Lord Cecil to invest his entire capital in stock of the "Golden Hope" mine, which Cecil later learns is a worthless hole in the ground. Carson and the girl return West, but Betty cannot forget the Englishman and realizes that she loves him, while Cecil, left without funds or credit, realizes that the mortgages upon his ancestral home will soon be foreclosed. Arthur Johnson and Lottie Briscoe featured.

The Dream Girl—Selig (two reels), October 12.—Steward, an artist, paints a portrait of a dream girl who has appeared to him as in a vision. His friend, Captain Sparks, on beholding the painting, declares it to be a likeness of a real flesh and blood girl he saw kidnapped years before in Saint Marc, Haiti. Steward and Sparks sail thither and rescue the girl from the cabin in which she has been confined, and later she becomes Steward's wife. Complete review on page 495, issue of Oct. 10.

'Midst Woodland Shadows—Vitagraph, October 12.—Anita of the forest, a beautiful child of nature, chances upon Earle and Herbert, two campers. Earle pays her attention and she flees. Later Herbert tries to force his attentions on her and she with difficulty escapes. Telling her only friend, an old minister, of her experience, she is advised to have nothing whatever to do with Herbert. She meets Earle again, however, and their meetings lead to love. Following her bethrothal to Earle, Herbert tries to convince the latter that he should end the engagement, as Anita is beneath him, but when the girl attempts to give back her engagement ring Earle places it again on her finger and leads her to the old minister, where they are married. Anita Stewart and Earle Williams featured.

Why Skunkville Went Dry—Columbus, October 13.—The corner saloon held the nightly attention of three bibulous friends, to the utter disgust and anger of their wives. At length, the wives, their patience exhausted, met to devise a method of reform. Recalling the visionary reptiles that usually surround those who over-indulge in strong drink and co-incidently a dealer in stuffed snakes, the action of the women is prompt and surprising. Their recreant husbands fall easy prey to the illusions, in several amusing situations. The reform is far reaching, in that it brings the entire village, including two back-sliding deacons and the entire police force into the fold.

The Letter That Never Came Out.—Edison, October 13.—A political drama in which a letter is sent to a newspaper for publication, in the hope of ruining a political candidate. Thinking the letter may be a forgery the editor decides not to publish it. Herbert Priot, Augustus Phillips and Sallie Crute are featured. More complete review on page 506, issue of October 10.

Percy Pimpernickel—Soubrette—Kalem, October 13.—It is the year 1950. Woman rules the roost. Bess, the wild scion of the Rocks family, elopes with Percy Pimpernickel, a beautiful he-soubrette. Horror-stricken, Mrs. Rocks turns the couple into the crool, crool world. Poverty makes a brute of Bess. Poor Percy is later compelled to flee with their chee-ild. His plight is discovered by the Rocks. Stricken with remorse the parents make amends and all ends well.

On the Battle Line—Kleine-Cines (two reels), October 13.—Captain Pemberton, a young Londoner, branded as a coward at home, because he refuses to fight a duel, goes to Africa and proves his metal on the firing line. Pemberton, together with a couple of troopers and a friend are cut off, surrounded and attacked by a detachment of the enemy's horsemen. Hastily taking refuge behind a natural barricade, they fight heroically against overwhelming odds. One of the soldiers manages to ride through the hostile lines and get away, soon returning with a squadron of British cavalry. A sharp engagement follows, in which the squadron routs the blood thirsty Arabs who have surrounded Pemberton and his party.

Neighborly Neighbors—Lubin, October 13.—Smith, Jones and Brown are neighbors. The Smith's have unexpected company and, being short of provisions, rob the kitchen of neighbor Brown. Brown and wife return home, tired and hungry, discover the loss of their provisions and invading the Smith kitchen steal back their own food. Later, Smith and Brown meet in the Jones' kitchen, where they have gone to borrow ice. The police arrive and Smith and Brown are escorted to the station. Their wives, alarmed over their absence, investigate, and Jones, returning home, is induced to square matters and invites the entire party to his house for dinner.

Swamie Sam—Lubin, October 13.—The Riverside police receive a telegram asking the arrest of Sam Johnson, alias, Swamie Sam. Two officers are detailed to arrest Sam, who is running a fortune telling parlor, but the later hypnotizes the policemen and persuades one that he is the prisoner of the other. Later the entire force endeavors to capture Sam, but when he opens fire they beat an unglorious retreat. Later Mattie, a colored laundress, marches Sam into the station and prefers a charge of assault, with intent to kill. Sam is locked up and a sign reading, "To Be Called For" attached to his chest.

Mutual Program

Our Mutual Girl (Chapter 39) "The Shotgun and the Lady"—Mutual, October 12.—Margaret, with Baby Lily's jewel in the little bag hanging on her wrist, stood looking into the muzzle of the young man's gun. She became only a make-believe prisoner, though, and shared a pie filched from the pantry with the owner of the gun. Meanwhile, unseen by them, Lily's father made his way across the lawn and up the column of the porch to Miss Hamilton's room. When he came down the jewel marked with a B was in his pocket. On Miss Hamilton's return her brother was relieved to see by her greeting that Margaret was a friend and a neighbor and very willingly allowed Our Mutual Girl to return home. Miss Hamilton, meanwhile, goes upstairs to take off her hat. When she came down she cried, "Somebody's been in the house and robbed us. One of my jewels is gone!" Ralph was stunned. So she was a burglar after all! But what could he tell his sister?

Down By the Sea—American, October 14.—Beautiful seacoast backgrounds, a strong, though conventional, plot and vivid character portrayals are the chief virtues of this production. Winnifred Greenwood, Ed Coxen and George Field appear in the leading roles. Nellie, a fisherman's daughter, promises to marry Jim, a fisherlad. Dean Ronalds comes to visit his mother and crippled sister at the seaside and falls in love with Nellie. She is true to Jim, however, and refuses the city man, though she knows she loves him better than the fisherlad. Jim is jealous but when he learns the true condition of affairs he sacrifices all for Nellie's happiness and sails away, leaving the girl and Dean free to marry.

Duska starts back to America while Marston goes to see his wife, only to learn that she has just passed away.

General Special Features

Garrison's Finish — (three reels) — Selig, October 15.—Paul Garrison, clever jockey, falls victim to a plot and both he and his horse are doped before the races. He is discharged by the owner of the horse and accused of throwing the race. A friend, Jim Drake, defends him. His owner attempts to have him arrested but Garrison escapes and goes to the city. Two ruffians accuse him of poisoning the horse and in the fight which follows he is injured and his mind becomes a blank. Time passes and one day a crooked lawyer meets Garrison and seeing in him a resemblance to a nephew of a Major Calvert, takes him to the latter's home, where he is received by the major. He falls in love with Sue Desha, a friend of Major Calvert. His conscience bothers him and he leaves the Calvert home and on his way to another city the train is wrecked and his memory is restored. The great Carter races take place and Colonel Desha, the father of Sue, wages his entire fortune on his horse. Jim Drake finds Garrison and takes him to the mount. Drake is a friend of Desha's and when he learns that the colonel has wagered his fortune on his horse he withdraws his request and turns Garrison over to the colonel's establishment, where he rides the colonel's horse and easily captures first place in the races. Garrison and Sue again meet and the missing link of the jockey's life is supplied. It is also proven that he is the real nephew of Major Calvert and the jockey who has been the under dog so long at last finds happiness.

In the Glare of the Lights—(three reels)—Essanay, October 17.—Duval, a worker in the steel mills, finds an actress who has been injured while in the country and she introduces him to her profession. He becomes a star and encourages her professional jealousy and in doing so loses her love. He then returns to the steel mills, where his successful rival of the girl of his boyhood becomes jealous of him and they have a terrific struggle before the blast furnaces. The actress comes to the town thoroughly sorry for her past actions and is forgiven by Duval. Complete review of this picture appears on page 497 of the October 10th number of Motography.

Paramount

Wildflower—Famous Players (four reels), October 15.—Letty Roberts, a child of nature, lives in the woodland with her parents and is known as "Wildflower." Arnold Boyd, a wealthy man of affairs seeks seclusion in the woods and meets Letty. They become friends, he looking upon her merely as a child. Arnold's worthless brother visits him and is attracted by Letty. He makes love to the innocent girl and they elope. Arnold pursues them and separates them after the ceremony, taking Letty to his home where he tells her she must remain. The girl does not know what to do so she continues to live at the Boyd home, being Arnold's wife in name only. While there her ignorance of the ways of society and her beautiful character are forcefully brought out. At last she learns the reason Arnold separated her from his brother and when she sees what he has saved her from she knows that he is not the brute she first thought him. He too has undergone a change and no longer looks upon her as a child, for he has learned to love her and is happy when he learns that she returns his affection.

Where the Trail Divides—Laskey (five reels), October 12.—"How," an Indian boy and Bess, a waif of the desert are raised by Colonel Lander. "How" graduates from an eastern university and becomes engaged to Bess, much to the disgust of Craig, Lander's nephew. All return to the West where Craig and Lander have a dispute, which brings an attack of heart failure on the colonel and he dies, leaving his estate to Craig and Bess with instructions to marry. Bess refuses and marries "How," forfeiting her claims to Craig. "How" and Bess marry but soon after "How" sees his wife in Craig's arms and leaves her. A year later Bess and Craig marry and "How," who has discovered oil on his land goes East. Craig abuses Bess, goes East and is followed by Bess. "How" tells Bess that the oil on his lands will take care of her for the rest of her days and sends her back West. She soon writes him to come to her and he does in time to dispose of Craig, who has returned and is mistreating her. "How" and Bess are married again.

The Typhoon—New York Motion Picture Corporation (five reels).—A young Japanese is sent to Paris by his government to learn the ways of the continent, and, what is more important, to obtain the plans of the French military forces. In the great city he falls beneath the spell of a beautiful chorus girl, who leaves the Russian, with whom she has been carrying on an affair, for the interesting young oriental. They quarrel and when she insults his national pride he kills her. In order that he may carry out the work that he has been sent to France to do, one of Toko's countryman pleads guilty to the crime and is guillotined. In the end the spy also dies and the papers are burned as the police are endeavoring to enter his apartment. The heroic boy's sacrifice has been unavailing.

Syndicate Film Corp

The Million Dollar Mystery—Thanhouser (two reels), Episode 17.—Countess Olga lures Jim to the rendezvous of the conspirators where they attack him, dropping him through the floor into a cellar room. Jones arrives in time to rescue Jim but the conspirators successfully make their escape. A complete review of this film will be found on page 528 of this issue.

Warners Features

False Pride Has a Fall—Alberquerque (three reels) October 12.—Ellen's parents send her East to school and after graduating she marries a society man. The parents come to visit her and many complications arise which eventually make Ellen realize that her place is in the West. A detailed review of this picture will be found on page 524 of this issue of Motography.

World Film Corporation

The Man of the Hour—Brady (five reels), October 12.—Henry Garrison, the son of a rich man, is an idler and is told by Dallas Wainwright, the girl he loves, that she will not marry him until he does something worth while. Dallas' father, who is the financial backer of Horrigan, a political "boss," sees the need of a popular young man as a figurehead for their party in the coming election. He offers Henry the chance to become mayor and the young man, seeing a chance to make good in Dallas' eyes, accepts. He is easily elected but when the "machine" tries to influence him to pass a bill involving graft he proves himself a real man and refuses. Although he knows it will turn Dallas against him he opposes and crushes her father and vetoes the bill. Then he learns that she does not hate him but rather loves him for proving that he was a man worthy of the name.

Miscellaneous

After Thirty Years—Great Northern (three reels).—Tom Black is serving a life sentence in prison as a result of the folly of his early youth. He is a model prisoner but he knows no peace for his former life is always before him. In his dreams he sees the happiness that was once his, at home with his mother, how he took to drink and how drink led him to associating with rough characters of the streets. Then how he killed a woman to get money and how his mother died from grief. The chaplain becomes interested in Tom and eventually secures his pardon. After thirty years he finds that the world no longer attracts him and seeks a home with his sister but she does not want to keep him until he gives her all the money he has in the world and even then she treats him coldly. Discouraged, he leaves her home and wanders out into the country where he sinks wearily to the ground, convinced that no one wants him. Exposure to the night air takes its toll and he passes into the great beyond where one person awaits him—his mother.

Lena Rivers—Cosmos (five reels).—Lena Rivers is the orphaned grandchild of Granny Nichols. Her mother, Helena, had gone to the city and secretly married Harry Graham, a young southerner, who has assumed the name of Rivers as a prank. He was falsely accused of murder and sent to prison. Helena, thinking she was deserted, returned to her home and died of a broken heart. Granny rears Lena, but poverty compels them to seek a home with Granny's son John, in Kentucky. Lena's cousin, Caroline, makes her life miserable by her jealousy and when Durward Belmont falls in love with Lena, Caroline, who also loves him, contrives to blacken Lena's reputation. Graham has married Durward's mother in the meantime and meeting Lena realizes she is his daughter, but makes her promise not to tell his secret. Lena's happiness is very nearly wrecked before the truth is revealed, but Graham finally makes known his relationship to her and all ends well.

A Prince of India—Eclectic (four reels).—A rajah and his son visit America with a wonderful diamond in their possession. Through the prince's carelessness the precious stone is stolen and the young Indian almost loses his life in an attempt to recover it. A complete review of the subject will be found on page 503 of last week's Motography.

King of the Air—Eclectic (three reels).—Louise's mother invests in a wild-cat scheme planned by a banker whose son is engaged to the girl. The son is forbidden to marry Louise when her mother loses all in the scheme. The son enters an aviation meet and is injured. Louise cares for him and overcomes the banker's objections. A detailed review appeared on page 504 of the last issue of Motography.

The Second Door Left—Eclectic (three reels).—An uncle offers his nephew a fortune if he will marry off his two cousins. The nephew mistakes two chorus girls for the cousins and sets out to marry them off. In the meanttime he falls in love with one of the real cousins and his pal does likewise with the other. The boys and the cousins elope and after the marriage discover that the nephew has been successful in his plan. Reviewed in last week's issue of Motography.

The Press Agent Says—

That Ed. J. Le Saint the Selig producer believes an artistic training to be one of the most valuable assets for a director. "I know," he says, "that it is of great help to me. I studied art for years and also music and the result is that I have what is known as the artistic temperament which compels me to take extra pains with my sets and the smallest details and moreover allows me to feel the emotions I desire portrayed and with capable artists a chord of sympathy is aroused which brings the desired results."

That few actors on the screen have travelled as far or widely as House Peters who is enjoying his first real holiday he has taken for years. Australia, Africa, Brazil, South America generally, all over Europe and parts of Asia and throughout our own United States. Leads and heavies were his portion on the stage and he is one of the few legitimate actors who jumped into immediate popularity on the screen for his association with the Famous Players will not readily be forgotten.

That a messenger of the California Motion Picture Company journeyed from Los Angeles to New York to deliver the print of "Salomy Jane" to the central office, here of the Alco Corporation. Rather than disappoint the various friends and officers of the Alco company who had been invited and who had come from as far as Winnipeg, it is thought that Alco spent over three hundred dollars, in addition to the round trip fare to and from the Coast.

That Carlyle Blackwell and his "Favorite Players" are well on the way with "The Man Who Could Not Lose" and Carlyle is delighted with his new leading woman Ruth Hartman and he says she is going to make him do his best work. Some very fine race course pictures as well as some of his best dressed "crowds" ever photographed will be seen in this all-round attractive photoplay.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, Motography has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors. Synopses of current films are not printed in Motography as they may be obtained of the manufacturers.

The Hearst-Selig News Pictorial

Earliest and Best War Films

Here are the Proofs:

HEARST-SELIG WAR BEATS.

FIRST pictures in America showing destruction wrought at Termonde, Belgium, by the Kaiser's artillery in the attack on that city were exhibited in the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, reel No. 62, released Thursday, October 1.

IN presenting pictures of Russian prisoners—thousands of them—being herded by the Germans at Koenigsberg, and French prisoners being marched through the streets of Koenigsbruck, the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial secured a remarkable moving picture beat. Nowhere else in the United States or in any country in Europe were these pictures shown. They were exhibited in Hearst-Selig reel No. 62, released on Thursday, October 1.

ON Monday, September 28, in the Hearst-Selig release No. 61, remarkable moving pictures showing long columns of grey-clad German troops, occupying Brussels, the evacuated capital of Belgium, were presented. These were the first and only pictures of the German army in motion, on hostile soil, shown in the United States. The pictures were made by a Hearst-Selig News Pictorial photographer, sent from Holland, who held special German passports and permits. These pictures showed the dusty and battle-worn artillery, infantry and cavalry of General von der Goltz's army, triumphant from Liege, marching through the streets of Brussels, while the silent Belgian populace looked on. They showed more than the marvelous equipment of the German troopers—they were evidence of the strikingly excellent morale of the Kaiser's soldiers, who as they passed the camera, laughed, smiled, joked and waved their hands in greeting. Soup kitchens, from which the legions of the Kaiser are fed on the march and in battle field alike, halted before the eye of the camera, where officer and private made their noon-day meal.

THE first moving pictures from Berlin to be exhibited in the United States were shown in the Hearst-Selig reel No. 58, released Thursday, September 17. The thrilling and exciting scenes that took place in the German capital soon after war had been declared were presented. The Hearst-Selig moving picture camera registered the cheering crowds that gathered before the Kaiser's Palace—artillery rumbling through the streets on the way to the front—and perhaps most interesting of all, the call of Reservists to the Colors, one method of which was a military band which marched through the streets, the Reservists—bankers, business men in afternoon coats and silk hats, workmen and clerks—following behind.

ON August 5, Great Britain announced that it was in a state of war with Germany. Then followed many days of worry and excitement. A trifle more than two weeks later, despite the suspension of steamship traffic and the rigid censorship put into effect in Great Britain—Monday, August 24, to be exact—the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial in reel No. 51 presented the first genuine moving pictures from London. These were pictures of the vast crowds that gathered outside the Buildings of Parliament and the War Office, awaiting the expected Declaration of War against Germany. Three days later, on Thursday, August 27, the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial in release No. 52 presented scenes of recruiting in London and other English cities, and in the following weeks exhibited many pictures of the raising of the British Expeditionary Force.

LESS than one month after the Germans commenced their attack on Liege, the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial was exhibiting in all parts of the United States pictures of war scenes in Belgium; on August 7, the German cavalry screen advanced upon Liege and a few days later the terrific artillery duel commenced. On Thursday, September 3, in release No. 54, the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial presented moving pictures of King Albert of Belgium in Brussels, bidding farewell to the Ninth Regiment, later annihilated at Liege—troops entraining at Brussels preparatory to departure for Liege, and Queen Elizabeth of Belgium caring for the Belgian wounded in the Royal Palace at Brussels, which had been converted into a hospital.

IN release No. 55, Monday, September 7, the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial showed pictures of Belgian refugees fleeing Tirlemont, as scouting parties of Uhlans and the German cavalry screen drew close to that city. In this same reel pictures of Belgian troops advancing from Brussels to meet the oncoming foe, and pictures of Belgians in trenches prepared for the defense of Louvain were shown.

AMONG the more interesting war scenes from Belgium were those shown in reel No. 56, released Thursday, September 10. These were of Belgian soldiers at Waelhelm, preparing to meet the German attack. Some of these striking pictures included scenes of Belgian soldiers destroying and burning houses that stood in the path of the great forts at Waelhelm, and might have obstructed artillery fire. Infantrymen were shown in the act of pouring oil upon the burning homes of Belgian noncombatants.

Henry Porter Stars

"THE TICKET-OF-LEAVE MAN" is a Pathe American studio production released under the Eclectic banner, and is a three-reel adaptation from Charles Reade's book, "Foul Play." The story is of a man who thinks to escape justice by throwing the blame of his crime upon another and allowing him to go to prison for it, only, later on, to have his own plans trip him up and deliver him into the hands of the law to atone for his deeds.

The incidents in the plot are cleverly arranged. It has good action and a strong climax in the first reel, and the other two follow their leader through a rapid series of live, interesting events and powerful situations, ending in a big climax which is none the less tense and exciting because of the smaller counter-plot climaxes which precede it.

A number of the exterior scenes were taken in the Bermudas, and the photography does full justice to the wealth of beautiful tropical scenes and vegetation. There are three distinct leads among the characters. One is the role of Helen Gerard, charmingly portrayed by Eleanor Woodruff. Another is that of the "heavy," Allan Bancroft, in which Sheldon Lewis does the most strongly emotional work in the picture, and the third is the part of Chester Livingstone, ably handled by Howard Meltzer. William Riley Hatch as Governor-General Gerard, M. O. Penn as the banker, Bancroft, and Sam Ryan as Morson, the mate, also have important parts.

Allan Bancroft, hard pressed for a means of paying his debts, forges his father's name to a note, and, by trickery, induces his chum, Chester Livingstone, to endorse it. Livingstone is tried for the crime, and sentenced to the Australian penal colony for five years. One day while the governor-general's daughter, Helen

The principals in Eclectic's "The Ticket of Leave Man."

Gerard, is out driving, the horse becomes frightened and runs away. Chester, working in a nearby field, dashes out into the road and stops the horse. Some time previous to this, Allan has left home for the colony seeking health. He is unaware that Chester is a prisoner in the same colony, and coming upon him and the unconscious girl, whom he has rescued, he does not recognize, in the bearded man, his former chum.

Allan has Helen removed to her house and is given credit for Chester's heroism. A short time later Livingstone becomes a ticket-of-leave man as a reward for good behavior, and is employed as gardener by the governor-general. Again he risks his life to save Helen's and does not receive credit for it. Allan returns to England and Helen books passage on the Bancroft ship, Prosperine, intending to meet and surprise him. Chester overhears her plans and also takes passage for England.

Allan enters into a conspiracy with the ship's mate, Morson, to load a fake cargo instead of the gold dust, and scuttle the ship collecting heavy insurance on it. Morson does as instructed, and only a few of the passengers escape, among them being Helen and Chester. They drift in an open boat for days and finally land on a deserted island. Eventually Chester tells the girl the story of his unjust imprisonment.

Governor-General Gerard travels to England, intending to meet his daughter there. Allan is shocked to hear that the ship he sunk had his fiancee as a passenger. Gerard secures a boat and starts out with a rescuing party. After some time they find the marooned couple. On their return to England Allan is arrested for being instrumental in causing the Prosperine's disaster, and later writes Helen a confession in which he vindicates Chester. The final scene shows Helen wearing Chester's engagement ring instead of the one which Allan had placed there.

Livingston is left to take the blame in Eclectic's "The Ticket of Leave Man."

OF THE many foreign features which the Pathe Company imports there are but a few that can rival the productions of its German studio in which Henny Porten is featured. The latest picture is a four part Eclectic drama entitled "The Broken Promise," and the forceful, earnest manner in which the characters are delineated "put over" the climaxes so clearly that subtitles are necessary only to fill in the time gaps between scenes.

The picture has a strong ending, and an unusual one for a film of its length. It is not often that one can enlist his sympathy with the heroine, follow her through four reels of stirring action, in the last fifty feet of which she drowns and still feel that it is a logical ending for the story. But such is the case in this picture.

The coast guardsmen search for the smugglers in Eclectic's "The Broken Promise."

The action is not allowed to drag at any time. The greater part of the third reel is a chase, which is prevented from becoming tiresome by the use of cut-backs to the smugglers' boat where Henny Porten becomes involved in a hand-to-hand struggle with a coast-guardsman. Here and there throughout the film are inserts and clever complications which bespeak unusual attention to detail on the director's part.

Inge, an orphan, is the household drudge in the home of a wealthy fisherman. The fisherman's son, Jan, falls in love with her, and induces her to accompany him on some of his secret smuggling trips. Being a quickwitted, brave girl she proves a great help to the smugglers, and becomes an important member of their band. The revenue men learn of the smugglers' operations, and hunt them. The smugglers, driven into a cove are saved by a daring act of Inge's.

Jan's father arranges with the village magistrate to have Jan marry the magistrate's daughter. Inge pleads with the young fisherman and with his mother, but is inhumanely turned out of the house. After her baby's birth Inge is filled with a longing for revenge, and to satisfy it she informs the revenue inspectors of the location of the smugglers' rendezvous.

Jan's wedding is interrupted by the arrival of one of his companions who warns him to flee for safety as the guardsmen are searching for him. The bridal party is shocked by the mad haste in which the bridegroom leaves. They learn the reason when the revenue inspectors enter and demand Jan on a charge of smuggling.

Inge loves Jan in spite of his infidelity, and meeting him at the shore, guides him to a sailboat in which they attempt to escape. The revenue cutter discovers them, and starts in pursuit. Jan is shot and disabled, and, with no one to direct its course, the boat capsizes, drowning Inge and the unfaithful Jan.

Exceptional Films for Hearst-Selig

Announcement is made by the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial that it will shortly release as a part of its regular news reel, first and exclusive pictures showing the ruins of the Belgian city of Louvain, burned by the Germany army after, it is alleged, non-combatants had fired upon and "sniped" the victorious troops of the Kaiser. Various stories have been told of the destruction of Louvain, an act which aroused the protest of the civilized world, and was only exceeded by that indignation expressed in every quarter of the globe by the alleged unwarranted destruction of the cathedral of Notre Dame at Rheims.

Some 650 feet showing the blackened ruins of Louvain have been received in the United States by the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, and within a few days will be shown upon the screen in all parts of the country.

In view of the siege and fall of Antwerp, 450 feet of negative received by the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial showing scenes around Antwerp and Malines, the Belgian army preparing to resist the siege, and the flight of the non-combatant populace, should make a particularly interesting feature.

James Cruze is doing the best work of his young life in "Zudora," a new Thanhouser-Mutual serial. It fits him like one of his suits, and "Jim" is known as a swell dresser on and off.

E. H. Calvert, of Essanay, with a party of friends, has gone to the Ozark mountains on a three weeks' hunting and fishing trip.

Musical Genius All But Loses Eyesight

Interesting American Feature

EDWARD COXEN, Winnifred Greenwood, George Field, John Steppling and other "Flying A" favorites are to be seen in "Daylight," another of the American Film Manufacturing Company's series of pictures which have included such titles as "In the Moonlight," "In the Firelight." Monday, October 19 is the scheduled release date for this latest of the series.

The picture is well staged and some of the exteriors are gems of photographic art. The surprising play of light and shadow across beautiful woodland vistas have been faithfully caught by the "Flying A" cameras and are sure to bring compliments from audiences to whom the picture is shown. Both Mr. Coxen and Miss Greenwood have some big scenes and most acceptably register the emotions they are called upon to depict, while the supporting company is satisfactory in every particular.

Steele sends Arthur to the mountains.

When the story opens we see Arthur, a young man of wealth and musical genius, completing a musical lesson under the tutelage of Gordon, a celebrated musician. Aside from his music Arthur finds much to interest him in the club life of the city, but the artificial lights of the clubroom play havoc with his eyes. Gordon reports to Steele, Arthur's uncle, that the young man has undoubted musical talent, but that he is neglecting his musical education for the club life and slowly but surely ruining his eyesight.

Steele determines to take a hand in his nephew's affairs and, much to the latter's astonishment, insists upon sending Arthur up into the hills with the opening of the hunting season. Arthur is cautioned that he must spend as much time as possible outdoors in the hope that nature may work a miracle with his failing eyesight.

Out in the open light of day Arthur's interest changes, particularly after he meets and falls in love with Mary, an orphaned girl, who lives in a cosy bungalow in the mountains, the better to devote all her time to the study of music. Bob, Arthur's hunting guide, who is also in love with Mary, is accidentally killed when a rifle drops and goes off unexpectedly. Arthur arranges to care for Bob's mother and seeks to console Mary.

However, just as Arthur's interest in his new open air life is becoming crystalized and while he is finding new inspiration at Mary's piano, the only pretentious piece of furniture in her bungalow, he is summoned back to the city by his uncle's death, and there soon falls into his old habits.

With the return to his club life the old trouble with his eyesight recommences, and an eye specialist whom he consults warns him that he will become blind. To escape the pity of his city friends and in order to obtain one last look at Mary, before his sight vanishes forever, Arthur returns to the hills and the girl he has learned to love. There blindness comes, and with it happiness, because Mary insists that the marriage take place despite Arthur's blindness.

Arthur's affliction and happy marriage result in an inspired composition that becomes the hit of the season, after Mary has disposed of it to a city music publisher. The fame of the song leads eventually to Arthur's moving back to the city with his wife and there they take up their residence in his uncle's home.

The song scores a tremendous hit.

Arthur's sight is restored.

One day a new medical discovery, based upon the use of ultra rays, leads to Arthur's recovery of his eyesight, although the specialist who is responsible for the cure insists that his patient shall continue to wear colored glasses, and warns him that the removal of the colored lenses from before his eyes will surely result in his again being made blind.

The return of his sight leads Arthur to again seek relaxation in his club, and soon he has again lost all interest in his music and even finds himself unable to compose, when he makes an attempt to write another success. Finally, he plans to return to his mountain home and there to deliberately remove his glasses, thus blinding himself again, in the hope that life may once more mean what it did to him at the time his eyesight was restored.

Mary learns of his intention and hurries back to the mountain home, arriving there an hour or two before her husband reaches his destination. As he is on the point of removing his glasses, she appears, covers his eyes with her soft hands and insists upon his replacing the glasses. A full realization of the wrong he was about to commit sweeps over him and as the picture ends he foresees a promise of a new life ahead in the daylight of love.

"Beloved Adventurer" Book Attractive

Countless exhibitors throughout the country have taken advantage of the exceptional opportunity offered them by the Lubin Manufacturing Company of Philadelphia and booked the series of "Beloved Adventurer" films in their houses, selling the novelized version of the story at the same time. It is the first time an original novel has been issued simultaneously with the production of the screen version of the story it tells and, though the series has only advanced to the sixth installment, its success is already certain.

Arthur Johnson playing the lead in Lubin's "The Beloved Adventurer" series.

Emmett Campbell Hall, the author of both the photoplay and the novel, has originated a most unusual character in Lord Cecil, the beloved adventurer, and about him has built a series of fifteen stories, each of which has a distinct climax and can be enjoyed by itself. When all are arranged in chapter form in the novel, however, they form a complete novel with perfect continuity and hold the interest of the reader from the first page to the last.

The book is bound in cloth, printed on high grade paper and contains 155 pages. There are seventeen half-tone illustrations from the Lubin film, all of which are very attractive. The book is worthy of a place in any library and at the price which is asked for it—fifteen cents retail—it is a remarkable bargain. Mr. Hall's descriptions are vivid and his character drawings concise and satisfying and those who see the photoplays will be far from disappointed when they read the book.

Scarcely had the first reel of the series been released when the Lubin Company received orders from exhibitors strung all the way from coast to coast, who had ordered a few copies in order to try the system out, wired asking that their orders be doubled and tripled in order to supply the demand of their patrons. The Lubin Company has been kept busy ever since, filling the orders which pour in daily for the demand for the book grows as the photoplays continue to show the adventures of Lord Cecil, whom Arthur Johnson has made one of the most lovable characters on the screen today.

The progressive exhibitor can quickly realize the tremendous advertising power a novelty of this kind is, for to get the patrons of a theater interested in reading of the life of a character means to draw them to the theater where they can see the events they have read about acted before their eyes and the character they have come to admire.

Boston to Have Film Company

With Captain Herbert B. Holland as founder, William F. Haddock as director, Maude Feely as leading woman, and others of equal note in the film realm interested in its activities, the Holland Film Company has established its studio at Roxbury, Boston, Massachusetts, and work on one-reel subjects is going busily forward. The reason for the Holland Company's settling in Boston is that it aims to be a pioneer in the use of the splendid historic and picturesque scenic backgrounds which New England offers. Miss Feely is late of the Thanhouser Company, where she played leading roles in many of that company's recent successes. The stage is her birthright, as she has been of it since she was four years of age. The fundamental talent, as to management, direction and acting of the Holland Company promises well for the future of this concern.

Wants Forbes-Robertson

The Life Photo-Film Corporation has secured an option on Jerome K. Jerome's famous play, "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," together with the services of Forbes-Robertson, the famous English actor. The consummation and closing of the deal only awaits the signature of Mr. Forbes-Robertson to the contract. It will be recalled that Mr. Robertson is playing his farewell tour in America, and contrary to the usual farewell tours, insists that he will not again appear on the legitimate stage here. This does not, however, prevent him from appearing on the screen.

Wife Punished for Playing with Fire

Strong Selig Story

JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD has written a story of exceptional merit in "Playing with Fire," the two-reel release of the Selig Polyscope Company on October 26. The theme carries a strong moral and the action is made so convincing that there can be no doubt left in the mind of the spectator as to the purpose of the play.

Bessie Eyton assumes the leading role and gives a delightful character portrayal of a woman torn between two desires—to remain faithful to her husband and to continue on friendly terms with another man who loves her. Thomas Santschi, who directed the staging of the production, plays opposite Miss Eyton and does excellent work in several strongly dramatic scenes.

The settings are well arranged and the exterior scenes carefully chosen and well photographed. The photography is without fault. The plot construction toward the close is quite clever. Two very distinct crises mark turning points, both of which could have been used as the climax and which are certain to keep the interest keyed up until the picture has faded from the screen.

The wife plays with fire.

At the opening of the story the happy home life of the Ransom family is shown. John Ransom, the husband and father, is a successful business man and his wife and little boy are the two greatest things in his life. There is but one shadow which casts its form across this peaceful picture. Horton, a friend of Ransom's, is a frequent caller at their home, and shows a great deal of interest in Mary, the wife. She is very friendly to him and allows a flirtation to begin between them.

A scene from the Selig production "The Wasp."

John notices this and is annoyed. He asks Mary to discontinue her intimacy with his friend, but the wife foolishly becomes angry and a quarrel follows. Later in the evening, after their little boy has been put to bed, Mary realizes that she is at fault and asks John to forgive her, which he gladly does. Again they are happy, but a few days later Mary meets Horton on the street and he invites her to go for a ride in his automobile. Again she plays with fire and accepts the invitation. John, walking down the street, sees them as they drive past. Horton drives out into the country and the automobile breaks down. When Mary returns home it is long after supper time and John is sitting by the fireplace his head bowed in sorrow. He asks her if she has seen Horton that day, and she lies to him. Again they quarrel and again he forgives her for their child's sake.

Ransom accuses his wife of being untrue.

Horton learns of the condition of affairs and sends a note to Mary, telling of his love. John intercepts the note and a short time later sees his wife and Horton together in a cafe. However, Mary tells him that his friend has followed her and the husband tries to believe her.

Ransom's vacation arrives and he takes Mary and their child to the mountains. Horton follows. Mary meets him and tells him to go away, but he is not easily disposed of. John is called back to the city for a day and Horton feigns illness and stumbles into the cabin. Mary cares for him, though she fears her husband will return and find them together. John's train is delayed by a wreck and he returns to the cabin. Horton fires at him and John, wounded, is unable to follow him. However, the incident convinces John that Mary is untrue and he forces her to leave him forever.

Years later Mary has become a nurse while John and his son live only for each other. One day Horton is brought to the hospital where Mary is nursing and, on his death bed, she secures from him a statement of the way things really happened. John receives a copy of Horton's confession and is happy to think that Mary has at last been cleared. Then he remembers that she lied to him and that Horton was a scoundrel, so he cannot force himself to believe the statement which would bring happiness to himself and the woman he has never ceased to love. And so Mary pays the terrible price because she played with fire.

New Distributing Medium

Still another distributing medium for the films of the country is about to be born. Exchangemen from all over the United States held a secret meeting in Indianapolis on October 1 and launched a plan for forming a film combination to be known as the Standard Program. As MOTOGRAPHY goes to press today (Tuesday, October 13) a meeting is being held in the Hotel Sherman in Chicago, by the same exchangemen who met in Indianapolis and a permanent organization is being perfected, while the proposed plan of distribution is being discussed in all its aspects that a smooth running program may make its debut within the next few weeks.

Representative exchangemen from New York, Philadelphia, Atlanta, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Buffalo, St. Louis, New Orleans, Dallas, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Chicago are among those in attendance at the meeting, over which Joseph Hopp of Chicago is presiding, he having been chosen temporary chairman at the Indianapolis meeting.

Mr. Hopp in a brief interview with a MOTOGRAPHY representative declared that it was planned to offer exhibitors a program of twenty-one reels per week, this program to consist of two three-reel features, three two-reel features and nine single reels. The films are to be bought by a committee of exchangemen solely upon screen examination, and as soon as a manufacturer whose product has been selected shows any falling off in quality that brand will be eliminated from the program.

"Quality, service and publicity" said Mr. Hoop, "are to be the keystones of our creed. As to quality, we aim to make even the poorest of our offerings the peer of the best films of today. As to service, we shall strive for the highest possible efficiency at all times, and we are determined to treat the exhibitor with all the courtesy and consideration that he would receive if he patronized a high grade tailor or haberdasher. As to publicity, the Standard program will guarantee to make its releases known throughout the entire country, and the exhibitor will be provided with the best possible means of bringing the people to his house.

"Exchangemen will own and control the distributing company and only the highest grade subjects will be selected from the numerous offerings of film manufacturers which we have already received. We are in receipt of numerous offers of financial backing, but the men who compose our organization are all well to do and we implicitly believe that we have more than enough capital to swing the deal without admitting any outsiders. Everything looks fine today and, undoubtedly, within a few days we will be able to make one of the most important announcements to the trade that has yet been made. The Standard Program seems assured and it will mark a new era in film production and distribution."

Gibraltar Films

Announcement is made that David Bispham, famous operatic star and producer, has entered the ranks of film manufacturers with a concern to be known as Gibraltar Films. The first picture is to be "A Message to Garcia," written by Elbert Hubbard, and in which Hubbard himself is to appear in the role of Lieutenant Rowan, the man who carried the message from President McKinley to Garcia.

Following this picture it is the intention of Gibraltar Films to produce film versions of many of the great operas. Some of the operas that will be filmed in the next two years will be "Aida," "Bohemian Girl," "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Tales of Hoffmann," "Flying Dutchman," "Huguenots," "Lohengrin," "Parsifal," "Rigoletto," "Samson and Delilah," "Il Trovatore" and "Sicilian Vespers." The rights to forty-two operas have been secured.

The Terriss plays, produced originally by William Terriss of the Adelphi theater of London, and including such dramas as "The Mills of the Gods," "A Man's Shadow," etc., are to be included among the Gibraltar releases and the works of Edwin Bliss, author of the "Lucile Love" series, released by Universal, will later be seen.

David Bispham, the president of the company, is known not only as a great artist, but as an excellent business man. Thomas Terris, vice-president of the company, has been a successful producer since his boyhood. Sydney Dalton, of the Academic Cinematographs, is secretary of Gibraltar Films, and his company and all of its connections have been absorbed by the new corporation. Herman Ling, treasurer, is a well known man in the downtown financial district who represents some very important interests.

One of the first steps of the corporation was to take the entire sixth floor of the Mecca building, 1600 Broadway, the huge plant formerly occupied by Kinemacolor Company.

Association Holds Election

Sidney Landau of the Heights theater, Wadsworth and One-hundred and Eighty-first street, New York City, was elected president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Greater New York at a meeting held at the Marlborough-Blenheim on Friday, October 9.

Samuel Trigger, former local president, declined the nomination for president and expressed his opinion that it would be better for the league if it should not be known as a "one man" organization. Mr. Trigger's speech caused considerable surprise, as it had been anticipated that he would be re-elected. The other officers chosen at the election were as follows: First vice presidents for the different boroughs, I. Needles for Manhattan, William Hollander for Brooklyn, A. Cole for the Bronx, Robert Whitten for Queens; Adolph Weis, secretary; William Brand, financial secretary; Grant Anson, treasurer and G. Stockhammer, sergeant at arms. Samuel Trigger was elected president of the executive board.

All Star Cast in Latest S & A Feature

Whatsoever a Woman Soweth

It is not often that Essanay offers exhibitors such an all star cast as can be seen in "Whatsoever a Woman Soweth," the two-reeler of Friday, October 30. Playing the leads in this film are such favorites of the screen as Gerda Holmes, Richard Travers, Bryant Washburn, Thomas Commerford and John Cossar, which makes a real bargain day for the exhibitor desiring to offer his patrons a choice selection of Essanay stars.

Miss Holmes has a most difficult role in that of Pauline, the girl who married unhappily and realized too late that love counts for more than reputation, but she handles it skillfully and at times rises to great dramatic heights. Richard Travers was well cast as Robert Caldwell and appeared at his best in the closing scenes of the picture when he generously offered to forgive Arthur, after the latter had embezzled funds of the bank. Thomas Commerford, the veteran Essanay character man, scores a tremendous triumph in the part of Pauline's father and at times almost takes the scene away from the other leads, so powerful is his playing. His registering of different emotions is truly wonderful. Bryant Washburn has a thankless part in the role of Arthur, but gets over the redemption scene in masterly fashion.

Pauline decides not to marry Robert.

The settings of the production are worthy of comment and the story is embellished by occasional flashes of a figure symbolical of Fate. The opening scenes are laid back in the early 70's and we learn that Pauline Marlowe and Robert Caldwell have set the date for their wedding. A few days before the important event is scheduled to take place Robert's father is proven an embezzler and Pauline decides that she cannot marry a man whose father has disgraced himself. Pauline's father stands firmly by Robert and does everything in his power to help the young man live down his father's shame, but despite her father's entreaties Pauline cannot bring herself to marry Robert. In anger, the old man orders Pauline out of his house and the unhappy girl travels abroad in an endeavor to forget her disappointment and heartache.

As time passes Pauline marries and Robert settles down to repay his father's debt to the bank. Pauline's marriage proves a most unhappy one and, shortly after her little son is born, her husband dies, leaving her a widow with the knowledge that she made a mistake which has ruined her whole life, when she refused to marry Robert.

Years afterward, when Arthur, Pauline's son, has grown to be a young man, the unhappy widow decides to return to her old home, where she is warmly greeted by her father, now a decrepit old man. Arthur thinks his grandfather and his grandfather's friends "old fossils" and in many ways proves a big disappointment to those who have looked for him to become a man of affairs, a worthy successor of the name of Marlowe.

Arthur goes to work in a law office, at the suggestion of his grandfather, but proves a miserable failure. As a result of his lack of ambition, Arthur one evening engages in a heated argument with the old man, which ends with the latter's becoming tremendously excited, and suddenly falling back into his chair, dead of heart failure. Pauline's heart is nearly broken over this incident, but Robert Caldwell, who now has risen to the position of president of the First National Bank, and who has carefully avoided his former sweetheart up till now, goes to call upon Pauline, expresses his sympathy and arranges for Arthur to take a position in the bank.

The Death of Pauline's father.

As time passes, Arthur one day yields to temptation and appropriates some funds of the bank. Not until he meets the one girl in the world does he realize the awfulness of his position. Meanwhile Robert has learned of Arthur's dishonesty and goes to Pauline with the story, since he feels that she should know it. Realizing that she is reaping as she sowed, Pauline demands that Arthur pay the penalty of his misdeed, but Robert pleads with her to forgive her son and promises not to prosecute him, if Arthur will agree to repay the money as fast as he is able. Arthur's sweetheart proves her trust in her lover by offering to stand by him and help him to save the money necessary to make good his embezzlement.

Moved by the devotion of Arthur's sweetheart and touched by the generosity of Robert, Pauline finally goes to the man whose love she has denied herself for so many years and he accepts her with open arms.

Clever Western Leading Lady

Dorathea Farley, or "Dot" as she is generally known was born in Illinois and spent the early years of her life in Chicago. She started her dramatic career at the age of three, when she did a song and dance with E. A. MacDowell's "Wedding Bells." Miss Farley's mother is known as Alma Farley and the two have always been together, both being well known on the legitimate stage. Dot went through the usual run of children's parts such as "Fauntleroy" and "Little Eva" in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and for some years she worked through the middle west at one time with E. C. Wilson who featured her in a number of parts. After a long siege of stock Miss Farley became well known in musical comedy as she possessed a fine baritone voice, but she developed throat trouble and an operation only served to make matters worse so she looked about for something in which she would not have to use her voice. A friend suggested she go and see the Essanay film people. Tom Ricketts saw her and after a short talk engaged her. She stayed with Essanay for several months and left with Thomas Ricketts when he joined the American Company, where she played leads opposite J. Warren Kerrigan. She remained with the American for a year and a half and then joined the Saint Louis Company, under the direction of Gilbert P. Hamilton, with whom she has been ever since, first with the Saint Louis concern and later with the Albuquerque Company.

Secures Blaney Productions

Everything that was once owned by the Chas. E. Blaney Photo-Play Company is now the property of the World Film Corporation, through a deal closed by General Manager Lewis J. Selznick, of the latter corporation. The World Corporation now has control of the two finished photo-plays, Cecil Spooner in "The Dancer and the King," and "Across the Pacific," as well as the productions and picture rights to all the other Blaney plays.

Mr. Selznick announces that work will start immediately on the presentation of the Blaney photoplays, and the Peerless studios, Fort Lee, N. J., are to be used in making the Blaney pictures. The Blaney studio ceases to exist, and the direction as well as the productions are to be under the exclusive control of the World Film Corporation. Cecil Spooner, in "The Dancer and the King," is to be released November 16, and "Across the Pacific" will be scheduled for November 28. Both these features are in five acts, and are to be seen on the regular World Film Corporation program.

To Resume Dividends

Crawford Livingston has been elected a director in the New York Motion Picture Corporation. It is expected that the company will resume a dividend in November, which will be on the basis of 1 per cent a month, and not 2 per cent as heretofore. It will be remembered by our readers that this dividend was passed a short time ago for the purpose of diverting $100,000 toward the payments on the new studio.

The Life Photo Film Corporation has bought out the High Grade Feature Film Company, taking over its lease and all of its properties. The offices of the High Grade concern adjoin the present offices of the Life Photo Film Corporation. Included in the sale is the projection room, which will be redecorated and refitted by the Life Photo concern and devoted to projection for the trade. Messrs. Bauman & Co. have been engaged to redecorate the new offices, particularly the projection room, which will be lined with velvet, and every convenience inaugurated tending toward perfect projection and comfort.

The present offices of the company will be devoted to the private rooms for Bernard Loewenthal, the treasurer, Edward M. Roskam, the president, and Jesse J. Goldburg, the secretary. The additional offices will be devoted to the auditor's, booking and display departments.

Balboa Engages Dr. Cook

Dr. Frederick A. Cook, discoverer of the North Pole, world-renowned explorer, Chautauqua lecturer and chief of the expedition which scaled the summit of Mt. McKinley, is preparing, together with the Balboa Amusement Producing Company of Long Beach, California, to make a six-reel feature photodrama, "The Explorer," in which Dr. Cook will be the star character. The scenario—written especially for the big production by the Balboa Company's photoplay editor, Frank M. Wiltermood—contains scores of highly interesting scenes in substantiation of Dr. Cook's claims that he reached the North Pole on April 21, 1908, and thus outstripped Robert E. Peary.

Many of the most important scenes will be enacted on the snow-clad peaks of the San Bernardino mountains, eighty miles from Los Angeles, the entire company of players to make the trip in a fleet of autos. Genuine Eskimo dogs, igloo houses, sledges and other Arctic property will be used to make the films realistic.

In a four-reel drama entitled "The War Extra," Blaché gives a peep behind the scenes of a newspaper.

MOLLIE MCCONNELL, leading character actress of the Balboa Company's plant, was for many months a member of Charles Frohman's London aggregation and portrayed leading roles in the Duke of York's theater and other English playhouses. She is the widow of Will McConnell, former dramatic editor of the New York Morning Telegraph and a theatrical manager. She is a native of California and was educated in Mills Seminary, in Oakland. Following graduation she joined a dramatic company in Chicago and soon was entrusted with leading parts, because of her handsome appearance and high talents. Since joining the cinema ranks several years ago she has made steady progress as a character player of the first class. She has been with Balboa a year and has done excellent work in the feature films, "The Human Soul," "St. Elmo," and "The End of the Bridge."

HENRY KING, leading man at the Balboa studios in Long Beach, Cal., is known as "the man from Virginia," because he is a native of that state. His mother still resides near Roanoke, on a large estate which has been owned by the King family more than 100 years. King was once a New York stage favorite. He entered the cinema field two years ago, becoming leading man at the western Lubin studios, where he remained a year and then resigned the position to be leading man at the Balboa Amusement Producing Company's plant. He has been with the Balboa studios a year and has done strikingly artistic work in the leading roles of "The Will o' The Wisp," "Sacrificial Fires," "The Path of Sorrow," "The Unexpected," "The Rat," "Nerve," "The Cruise of the Hell Ship," "The Moth and the Flame," "Power of Print," "Abide With Me" and "Through Night."

Harry King.

WILLIAM D. TAYLOR, director of the largest dramatic company at the Balboa studios, often plays the leading role, writes the scenario, directs the company, attends to the costuming of the characters and also manages the setting of the scenes. Formerly a Vitagraph star, he enacted the leading role in the famous six-reeler produced by that company, "Captain Alvarez." He joined the Balboa organization several months ago and has produced a number of feature photo-dramas. He is a native of Ireland. When 19 years old he joined Charles Hawtrey's company and toured the English provinces. Later he journeyed to New York and became a member of Fanny Davenport's company, remaining in her organization three years. Following this engagement he enacted leading roles at various times with the Castle Square stock company, Katherine Kidder and Sol Smith.

William D. Taylor.

JACKIE SAUNDERS, star of the Balboa Company, is known as "the Mary Pickford of the West," because of the genius and talents she displayed as leading woman of many Balboa feature releases, notably "The Will o' the Wisp," enacted by her and the other members of the company amid a raging flood in river lowlands. She is aged 20 and a native of Philadelphia, where her father and mother reside. She became a cinema actress three years ago, following considerable stage work, portraying "child" parts. Because of her shining personality she is called "little sunbeam" by her colleagues. Among large Balboa productions recently produced she enacted the leading role, such as "The Square Triangle," "Little Jackie," "Rose of the Alley," "Little Sunbeam," "The Hunchback of Cedar Lodge," "Gypsie Love" "The Breakup."

An All-Star Keystone

Mabel Normand, Fatty Arbuckle, Charles Chaplin, Mack Sennett and all the other famous Keystone players in one picture! The picture directed by Mack Sennett! One of the funniest things that ever has been seen on the screen! This is what is promised in "The Sea Nymphs," the first of the special two-a-month two-reel Keystone-Mutual comedies. It will be released in about a month. The picture was made at Santa Catalina Island, and it combines all the funny effects of the Mabel series and the other Keystone pictures. But it goes farther than that, because it has some brand new ideas in it. Those who have been privileged to see it say that it is the greatest scream of that brand. Patrons of the Keystone-Mutual pictures will know what this means. The play revolves around the escape of Mabel Normand and Fatty Arbuckle with "Big Ben," Miss Normand's pet seal.

Pearce Makes Western Trip

President Marion S. Pearce has just returned from a trip through the West in the interests of the League. He finds conditions as a whole very encouraging and especially in Kansas, where they have just closed a most successful state convention. On this occasion many matters of vital interest to every exhibitor in the state were transacted and much good for the general welfare of the League in that locality accomplished.

President W. B. Moore, of the Kansas state branch, was especially enthusiastic regarding the League work in his territory and took great pleasure in announcing that they had decided on a definite membership campaign. He looks forward confidently to the next convention which will be held in Emporia, Kansas, some time during the coming March when he feels sure that almost every exhibitor in the state will by that time be a member of the League. President Pearce also stopped off in Illinois in the interests of reorganizing the state.

California Convention

The third annual convention of the California Motion Picture Exhibitors' League opened with more than one hundred exhibitors from all parts of the state in attendance, at the Assembly Hall of the Phelan Building, San Francisco, on Tuesday, October 6. The meeting was called to order by State President Charles Goodard. After an invocation by Rev. J. M. Jackson the exhibitors were addressed by Edward Rainey, secretary to Mayor Rolph. President Goodard responded and after declaring the meeting formally open, called attention to the fact that much business of importance was to come before the session. After the reading of the minutes by Secretary W. A. Cory a vigorous discussion of the war tax on amusement tickets, which is a bit of legislation now pending in Washington, was held and it was clearly pointed out what a hardship the passage of this law would be to the exhibitors. Every member present was urged to wire his representative to do all within his power to defeat the bill. H. L. Beach of Oakland suggested the publication of a weekly bulletin by the Exhibitors' League, for the purpose of bringing the country exhibitor into closer touch with his city brothers and such a publication was further advocated by W. B. Martin of the Star theater in Modesto. A committee on organization consisting of H. C. Smith, Charles Rothchild, and L. E. Lund was appointed and reported before the closing of the session.

On Wednesday morning Judge A. P. Tugwell of Los Angeles, president of the Los Angeles local and well known in film circles, addressed the convention, pointing out the need for organization, as without organization and co-operation on the part of the exhibitors the picture theaters of California could not continue to exist.

Old Officers Re-elected

At the annual meeting of stockholders of the Colonial Motion Picture Corporation, held on October 5, 1914, the present management was sustained by a vote of nearly two to one, and the following fifteen directors were elected for the ensuing year: Professor Arthur Beatty, Madison, Wis.; James J. Booth, Pittsburgh, Pa., vice-president Oakland Savings and Trust Company, director Commonwealth Trust Company, director Commercial National Bank; F. C. Brooksbank, Riverton, N. J., former president Brooksbank-Tillingast Sand-Blast Company of Philadelphia; Frederick S. Dudley, New York City, vice-president and general manager of the company; J. Watson Hayden, Troy, N. Y., treasurer Fellows & Co.; Robert T. Herrcke, La Salle, Ill., hardware merchant; James D. Law, New York City, president of the company; Duff C. Law, Wissahickon, Pa., technical director of the company; Edwin H. Meyer, Evansville, Ind., president Newman Plumbing Company, secretary and general manager of Meyer Candy Company, proprietor Highland Poultry Farms; W. T. Saxton, Delta, Ohio, vice-president People's Savings Bank; Max R. Taylor, Port Chester, N. Y., merchant; Herbert W. Taylor, secretary-treasurer of the company; C. W. Tennant, Amston, Conn., scientist and lecturer; Jesse Watson, New York City, attorney-at-law; Richard Wightman, New York City. This Board of Directors have elected the following officers to serve for one year: James D. Law, president; Frederick S. Dudley, vice-president and general manager; Herbert W. Taylor, secretary and treasurer, C. Anhof, assistant secretary.

Excelsior Lead Plays Three Roles

New Company's Debut

THE first Excelsior release through the newly formed Alliance program is a five-reel masterpiece, "The Path Forbidden," from the book of the same name by John B. Hymer. It is a splendid visualization of a perfectly balanced and probable, though unusual story, replete with stirring situations, realistic scenes, wonderful photography, and fine acting. Director Harry Handworth's delicate handling of the "mistaken entity" problem, from which so much of the action evolves, enables the spectator to understand and follow the story's many threads, and appreciate the surprises which attend their merging into one climax. Humor flickers through the story here and there, freshening one's interest and giving the dramatic parts more force in contrast.

The picture features Octavia Handworth, who plays three distinct roles, those of Violet Dare, later Mrs. Brill, and her twin daughters, Lucy and Pearl. Miss Handworth's versatility affords her complete control over her impersonations of two widely different types of women, one a carefree coquette and the other a modest, diligent young woman. It is a true pleasure to watch her, as she does not attempt anything spectacular, but always does the thing which another, placed under the same circumstances, would do by natural impulse.

William A. Williams does well in his role of Joe Brill, a part calling for an energetic young lover in the beginning of the story, and a feeble old man in its last chapter. The part of the young lawyer, Curtis Holmes, fits Gordon DeMaine as though created for him. Hamilton Crane characterizes Jim Kent, Joe Brill's rival for Violet Dare. James Allbaugh is successful in making a thoroughly despicable person out of the dope and race track tout who unconsciously spares Holmes from an unhappy future by eloping with his fiancee. John B. Hymer, the author, Tom Tempest, and Francis Perlot do fine character work in the minor roles of Ed Dempsey, Herman Krause and "Bug" Hicks.

Violet's coquettish ways anger her devoted husband in Excelsior's "The Path Forbidden."

The first reel is in the nature of a prologue, the time being about the year 1890. The first few scenes illustrate the coquettish disposition of Violet Dare, and the incidents leading to her marriage to Joe Brill. They live happily for some time until one day Violet wanders from prudence to "the path forbidden" and carouses with some male friends. Brill unexpectedly returns home at this time and drives his wife out for her conduct. That night she steals away one of their twin children, Pearl, who grows up an exact duplicate of herself, beautiful, fascinating, and treacherous.

Pearl entertains, unknown to her fiancee, in Excelsior's "The Path Forbidden."

Lucy, the other sister, is exactly the opposite in disposition. Worry caused by failure in business unbalances Mr. Brill's mind and he is removed to a sanitarium. In order to be near him Lucy invests her money in a rural hotel close by and takes charge of it herself. Pearl is about to be married to an honorable young lawyer, Curtis Holmes, but at the last moment elopes instead with a flashy race track tout. Holmes follows the couple to the hotel at which they are stopping until their automobile is repaired, and there meets Lucy.

A number of both humorous and serious complications result from the resemblance between the girls, the last of which is Holmes' thrilling rescue of Pearl from a burning barn. He carries her to the hotel, thinking her to be Lucy, with whom he has fallen in love. Mr. Brill recovers and is brought to the hotel by Lucy. Here he meets Pearl, and informs the girls of the relationship between them. The kind care that Pearl receives while convalescing cures her of all desire for "the path forbidden," and she promises to live with and be a comfort to her father if he will grant Holmes permission to marry Lucy. This he readily does, and Pearl makes good her promise and succeeds in taking the place of her happy sister.

Blackwell Appears With Own Company

Plays Dual Roles

A BEAUTIFUL and strong release is the first to be given to the public by the Favorite Players Film Company, Inc., which has Carlyle Blackwell as its lead and M. H. Blackwell as its treasurer. "The Key to Yesterday" is the title of the four-part feature in which this company introduces itself to picture-goers, though the popularity of its star, Mr. Blackwell, is so general that the word "introduce" seems hardly apropos. However, it is Mr. Blackwell's first appearance in the company which is of his own formation. In the double role of Marston, the artist, and Carter, the Revolutionist, he makes his bow as a Favorite Player.

The film tells the story which, in book form, credits Charles Neville Buck with the authorship.

Carlyle Blackwell and Edna Mayo in "The Key to Yesterday" Favorite Players' release.

The scenario, however, owes its fine arrangement to Robert A. Dillon. And to the director and cameraman go especial credit for the high quality of the work for which they are responsible.

Opposite Mr. Blackwell, Edna Mayo plays a leading and likable role. This pretty actress from the legitimate shows marked picture ability and she makes a splendid Duska Filson. Gypsy Abbott is the only other woman in the picture and she does commendable work as Mrs. Marston. George Brunton is good in the character of Mrs. Marston's father, St. John; there are J. Francis Dillon as Rodman, the outlaw; John Prescott as Senor Roberto and John J. Sheehan as George Steels, all of whom are creditable in their respective roles.

The story is one with an interesting theme. It concerns the artist Marston, the master painter of Paris. Unhappily married, he becomes the object of a model's jealousy and is stabbed in the right palm. Unable to paint, he takes a trip to the States and there is assaulted by highwaymen and regains consciousness with a blank mind. Discovered painting one day, he is offered a course of lessons by Steel, a wealthy young man. His wonderful genius reasserts itself and he gains new reputation. Duska Filson, a friend of Steel's, gives a dinner one night and there Marston, whose name is changed to Saxon, meets Senor Roberto. The latter is attracted by the similarity between Saxon and Carter, the revolutionist, whose escape from the law and Roberto had been a clever one. He tells the story and Saxon, unable to recall his past, believes himself to be Carter. He has been accepted by Duska but tells her of a determination to go to South America and determine whether or not he is Carter. He carries out this intent and the American consul settles this doubt by declaring Carter to have been shot in the left and not the right palm. Saxon leaves for the States and thereby misses Duska and Steel, who wireless him as to their location. Saxon learns that a revolution is imminent in the town in which his friends are stopping and secures a small boat which takes him back in time to have his friends warned. Saxon, however, is wounded and placed in a ship bound for France.

In Paris, after many wanderings, he seeks to find a clue to his former life. The key which he has carried with him for years is the only link and he knows that the door it opens will be home. At last he tries it in the door of "the master's studio" and is greeted by his old students and by St. John. The latter takes him to his home, where his daughter, Marston's wife, is sleeping the last sleep, after a wait of five years for the husband who came too late. The concluding scenes give hope of a new life of usefulness and peace. And in it Duska shares. "The Key to Yesterday" is one of the first of the Alliance Films Corporation output. And it stands on its own merits.

Film Magnates Attend Banquet

Representatives of several of the largest film manufacturing companies in the country attended a dinner tendered to Carl H. Pierce by Stanley Mastbaum in the red room of the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia, on October 2. Guests at the affair, which was in the nature of a reciprocal compliment, following the banquet in the Adelphia, at which Mr. Pierce was host last week, came from New York city and other points nearby.

These included Daniel Frohman, one of the pioneers in the feature motion picture industry; Jesse E. Lasky, Adolph Zuker; Lewis Breitinger, state censor for Pennsylvania; George H. Earle, Jr., Siegmund Lubin, of Philadelphia, and staff men from the Philadelphia newspapers.

Twenty-One Ems Ten-Point

By Ed Mock

WE are to draw lessons from the war—hard commercial intelligence.

The war caught us with three regular, dependable film programs and a scattering few regular and dependable feature film manufacturers. It also found us on the tottering edge of a market which was reading the foreign films out of existence. If we are to draw our lessons from the troubles of Europe, it is time to begin. There are countless reels of foreign films in America that have had their inning as regular releases. When these foreign films were current subjects their sale fell far below the American-made releases. Today, exhibitors should fall all over themselves to get some of these foreign reels. The American people want to see the streets of Antwerp and Ghent as they were before the German invasion. The same interest in foreign pictures—scenics, educational or travel subjects, particularly—applies to all the countries at war. It is an opportune time to unearth the negatives and print up a fresh stock of positives. The first lesson endeth.

The second lesson died a borning. It didn't take more than fifteen minutes to prove we were not to have genuine war pictures on our screens. It was even more evident than that we were to witness the sinking of the Titanic. War pictures will come to America after the war and then only such subjects that have had the approval of the foreign censor boards.

The redeeming factor of the film industry rests with a world market. While England, France, Germany and Russia are flying at each other's throats it doesn't mean that there is no foreign market for American-made films. The film business has followed the path of least resistance much of the way. Obstacles like the present have not been encountered. There is little reason to suspect that the American maker of films isn't finding a foreign market for his product.

The foreign film manufacturer has a more difficult problem. Unless he can depend upon the possible revenues of some of his past releases, America offers him nothing. His factories and studios are shut down. In all likelihood his camera men are in the battle fields, but the product of his daily grist has no immediate value. The war, if of long duration, will alter many of the present day practices both here and abroad, but the American maker has much the best of the situation right now.

All praise for Fulton Brylawski, that clean-cut, fighting Washington exhibitor, who has rendered such important service to the motion picture interests of this country. Here is an example of what prompt and intelligent application will accomplish. Fulton Brylawski and his father are exhibitors of the better sort. They have eight splendid houses and the co-operation of Washington exhibitors. Their theaters have the lasting respect and approval of the capital's best citizenship. The houses are sanitary; the seats are comfortable; the aisles are wide; the projection reflecting the highest attainment of the art; the lobbies tasteful; the staff courteous and the deportment of the audience beyond criticism. The elder, Mr. Aaron Brylawski, escorted me along Pennsylvania avenue and was careful to point out how far his neighbors had worked with him in the matter of street lighting. He offered convincing proof that a motion picture theater had full license to qualify with other established enterprises. He took great pride in emphasizing that through his efforts one of the blocks that had been the street rowdies' night rendezvous was now the best lighted and orderly in the city. Attention to these details have given the Brylawskis high standing in their community. Fulton Brylawski is a lawyer of no mean repute and the combination has been the result of saving exhibitors of this country a million dollars.

If regret might be attached to a performance of this kind, it would be with the Brylawskis getting the credit. Not that any of us care to do that, but what a lasting monument this might have been, had organized exhibitors accomplished the same result. If there is a better example to offer for the need of thorough organization among exhibitors, where shall we look for it? Fortunate indeed that the Brylawskis were in Washington! It is true that Fulton Brylawski has always been actively in favor of exhibitors' associations. He is a member of the Washington contingent and a vice-president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors'

Herbert Rawlinson in "Kid Regan's Hands," a two-part Rex drama.

League of America. But the League gets no credit in this performance. The Brylawskis have it and no one will begrudge them the fullest measure of thanks.

Don Meaney cables from Hollywood: "This beats New York alltohell." Now that the Kaiser has told us we can hold the San Fran expo. next year, I'm saving my Buffalo knickles to make the trip. Then's when Don and I will krack a cold bottle.

P. L. Waters doesn't care for publicity, even in the smallest kind of way. He probably doesn't want it known that he breezed into Chicago last week and fired Isaac Von Runkle, just like that. And then a lot of Chicago exhibitors held a jollification meeting. I'm told that some of them actually got pickled. Now I don't have the remotest notion what it all meant, because P. L. Waters never returns my call. Maybe he's afraid that I haven't got carpets on my floor with an oriental rug now and then.

Sorry Babe you didn't get a goal kick in that smashing center run you made, but we'll fix it up for next year if you'll announce your candidacy now.

W. A. Johnston wrote me a beautiful little note when he learned that my widow wouldn't get it, but he didn't sign his name. The film business was like that five years ago. We are about that far behind the game all the time—all of us publishers.

My dear old friend and pal Bill Sweeney called one day without knowing my regular hours are from 11:30 to 1:30. Sorry I missed you. Got a new supply of smokes for class A customers. Chris Whelan took a Natural when he came. The latch string is out and the railing is only thirty inches high.

IMPROVING THE PICTURES

ARE motion pictures really any better today than they were a year ago, or two, or three years ago? The question is often asked; but it cannot be intelligently answered without considering the counter-question "What do you mean by better?"

We are accustomed to reading each year, the announcements of better automobiles, better electric lights, better washing machines. And we know what is meant; for these things are mechanical and their improvements are tangible and easily grasped.

We know also, that every year sees the market flooded with new books. But we cannot say these books, or rather their contents, are any better than they were last year; some, indeed, would claim that better books were written fifty years ago. Every year the national magazines print thousands of new short stories; but no one will insist that they are better this year than they have been any other year. Every year new artists get new inspirations and produce new masterpieces; but none of them show any improvement over the work of last year, and most of them do not approach the products of the old masters. And in music each month brings forth its crop of new songs and harmonies; yet the classics still remain the classics. Even drama—the legitimate stage—is it any "better" this year than it was a dozen years ago?

All these things—literature, painting, music, drama—and motion pictures—are arts; representations or records of the artistic sense of individuals. These artists may be good artists or poor ones; each individual may become a better artist than he is; but the art itself cannot improve. The picture can do no more than record the art sense of the individual. In that it has no limitations; the only limitations are human, and they cannot be improved beyond a certain point, or at least they never have been.

One who asks if the pictures are any better this year really does not himself know exactly what he means. He would not think of asking if the paintings, the music and the literature are improving; yet the questions are the same.

As the years go by we may have better paper and type for our books, better canvas and oils for our paintings (though that is doubtful), better film stock and cameras and projectors for our pictures. For the camera and the pen and the brush are but the tools of the artist; the paper and the canvas and the film are identical vehicles; the inked type and the paint and the projector all perform the same function. So on our screens we may and will see bigger and brighter and steadier and more natural pictures. But the dramatic principle that makes the great picture is there already, and has always been there. The "great masters" of the film are working even now.

BRYLAWSKI SCALE PASSES COMMISSION.

FULTON BRYLAWSKI, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the District of Columbia, recently wrote each United States senator protesting against the flat tax of $100 against all theaters, proposed by House Bill 18891, as mentioned in a recent issue of Motography, and now announces that the scale he proposed has been accepted by the Senate finance committee. One paragraph of his letter reads as follows:

It gives me great pleasure to be able to inform you that on Saturday last, the Senate Finance Committee accepted the scale proposed by me in lieu of the flat tax proposed in the House Bill which scale is as follows:

Theaters seating less than 300 shall pay $25.
Theaters seating more than 300 and less than 600, shall pay $50.
Theaters seating more than 600 and less than one thousand shall pay $75.
Theaters seating over one thousand shall pay $100.

I believe that this new scale will save the motion picture exhibitors of this country nearly one million dollars.

That puts us a big step forward in the fight against the inequitable features of the proposed war tax. Incidentally it reflects great credit upon the indefatigable league secretary, and gives us an excellent example of the value of association. It is unnecessary to say that without this kind of co-operation, without the strength of union, the motion picture exhibitors would have been helpless against this imposition; for the few who might have had the wit and aggression to fight alone would probably have received little serious consideration.

While the committee report still is to be accepted by the Senate, and victory may not yet be wholly achieved, at least we may draw a deeper breath and feel that at least we have friends at court.

FIRE PREVENTION FILM

"The Locked Door," a three-reel feature demonstrating the fire-prevention principle and also embodying a romance, is a splendid offering of the Vitagraph theater's new bill which went on October 12. This picture was made in collaboration with the New York Fire Department and with the assistance of the New York Police Department. It should be shown, particularly, in sections of all cities where crowded conditions exist, where over-stocked rooms prevail, and where under-paid help is employed; for there is where the lesson of fire-prevention is apt to be most timely.

"The Locked Door" was written by Special Fire Inspector William B. Northrup, picturized by George H. Plympton and produced by Tefft Johnson. The second feature on the Vitagraph bill is "The Tangle," a four-part story of love and militarism. Col. Jasper Ewing Brady (late U. S. Army) is its author and Capt. Harry Lambart its producer. It is a stirring picture well directed and well portrayed; and the troops used are those of the regular U. S. Army, their use having been authorized by the War Department. Darwin Karr and Naomi Childers and L. Rogers Lytton have the principal roles and enact them well.

MANAGER MAKES INNOVATION

A splendid example of the reward that awaits an exhibitor who uses his own judgment in decorating his theater front and who is not afraid to attempt innovations is given by the capacity business done at Cozy Theater, McPherson, Kansas, during the recent showing of "Bunkling Bunks' Bunco", the three-part Eclectic film.

Manager H. C. Collins, fully appreciating the great value of the posters which were offered him by the Eclectic Company, was nevertheless determined to improve on his front display and made several tiger posters himself. The wonderful display the entire group presented was instantly appreciated by the public. The appeal of the exceptional advertising was so strong that the Cozy was filled every evening during the stay of the production.

Just A Moment Please

Where's this program thing going to stop?

Last week it was Alliance. This week it's Standard. Next week it'll be—but your guess is as good as ours.

Again we wonder where they're going to find exhibitors to show them all. Looks to us as though some of these film debutantes must, sooner or later, become wall flowers in the society game but—you never can tell.

WE'RE WISE TO HIM NOW.

For a long long time we have been wondering what becomes of our Goatman when he takes these flying trips out of town. We've even suspected a deep dark mystery in his life and seriously considered installing a dictaphone in his office, but last week we "tumbled." Concealed way over in our "Roll of States" department, in the back of last week's issue, we found this modest little item:

OREGON.

Mock's theater in Girard will shortly be opened to the public.

Judging by the above the Goatman is now on a par with Ex-Prexie Neff. He owns a theater. Spose now he'll join the League—or maybe the Association.

Is W. N. Selig a suffragette? From time to time we've been hearing rumors of something deep dark and mysterious that has been going on out at his North Side studio, and once or twice even heard the names of prominent suffragettes coupled with the doings, but whoever we asked about it said "Sssh!" so we didn't investigate further. Now word reaches us that the mystery will be revealed at the Auditorium, Chicago, on Wednesday, Oct. 14. Armed with a pair of gum shoes, a dark lantern and a newly sharpened pencil we're going over to find out what it's all about.

Atmosphere of Mystery Wraps Story

Edison Production Unique

ASHLEY Miller has preserved all the uniqueness of plot and romantic charm which the story contained in his direction of "The Pines of Lory," a splendid dramatization of the novel of the same name by J. A. Mitchell. The picture is in two reels and is to be the Edison release of November 6.

A mysterious atmosphere pervades the story. It is created by the marooned couple's finding a completely furnished and well-supplied house on an otherwise deserted island and their later finding the dead owner sitting as though petrified, on one of the benches on the ground. These facts arouse a strong curiosity in the spectator's mind, which is not wholly satisfied until the last scene. There is a strange magnetism about the picture, due partly to the work of its able cast and the forceful personality they put into their impersonations, and partly to the originality of its plot and its puzzling developments. People who enjoy natural, unconstrained acting, and like to be kept in doubt as to a story's conclusion until the plot's gradual unraveling will find much to entertain them in this picture.

Marc McDermott and Miriam Nesbitt play the leading parts, McDermott as Patrick Boyd, the innocent "black sheep" of the Boyd family, and Miss Nesbitt as Elinor Marshall, a young woman who believes Patrick responsible for his father's death and who is marooned upon an island where for months she has no one but the despised "murderer" for company. The greater part of the story is embodied in the marooned existence of these two, but in the remainder Frank McGlynn, Bessie Learn, Mathilde Baring, and Duncan McRae do good work in their parts, which, though small, are important enough to overshadow the picture's excellence were they played by less experienced people.

Because of a misunderstanding with his elder brother, John, Patrick Boyd leaves home and journeys to the mining lands of Africa. Mr. Boyd has cherished the idea of Patrick's becoming a priest but the young man refuses. Boyd has long been a sufferer from a weak heart. This, combined with the shock of having his sole ambition crushed, proves too much for him. John accuses his brother of being the cause of his father's death, saying that he is just as guilty of murder as though he had killed him outright.

The principals in Edison's "The New Partner."

Patrick is taken ill with the fever in Africa, and as soon as he has sufficiently recovered, starts for home. On the boat he meets an old friend of his sister's, Elinor Marshall. Her distant attitude puzzles him, until he realizes that she has heard of his supposed crime. Owing to the thick fog Patrick and Elinor are put ashore on a deserted island instead of at their right destination. The ship later runs afoul of a reef and sinks, all passengers being lost. At home the Boyds read of the disaster and mourn Patrick as among the lost.

In the meantime he and Elinor have explored the island and found a nicely furnished residence with a well-stocked larder, but no occupant. Later they find the owner dead on one of the benches of the park-like grounds. Near him is a grave which he had evidently dug for himself. Elinor does not relax from the aloofness she has maintained towards Patrick until he suffers a relapse of fever, from exposure to the air, in sleeping outdoors at night. His helpless condition awakens her sympathy, and the remembrance of the noble, gentle manner in which he has treated her since their first meeting soon turns sympathy to love.

After several months the island is visited by the owner's daughter, a French princess. Many years before, her father had married against the king's wishes and had been banished to this deserted isle. She transports the two castaways to the mainland, where, at the Boyd home, they receive a warm reception, and Patrick is assured that the past is forgotten.

A RICH girl's efforts to undo the wrongs suffered by her employes under a factory superintendent's mismanagement, leads to a pretty romance in "The New Partner." It is a one reel picture of the Edison make and will be released on November 3.

Gertrude McCoy and Edward Earle make a splendid team for the leading roles and are supported by Robert Brower, Harry Eytinge, Richard Neill, and Edna Hamel.

The interior settings are sufficiently deep in their construction and painting to lend the desired inside environment effect, and the outdoor locations are selected with care. The plot is not an exceptional one, depending largely on the personality of its cast for its individuality. The names of the above mentioned group of players vouch for the delineation of the latter.

Elizabeth Marsh falls heir to a half-interest in a factory, and returns from Europe to assist in its management. Her partner, George Barton, whom she has never met, is a generous, care-free person. He inspects the factory twice a year as a matter of form, and the balance of the time is interested only in its reports and dividends. Elizabeth hears that sweatshop conditions prevail in the factory, and, disguised in tattered clothes, secures employment there to investigate for herself. She is horrified at the conditions which prevail.

At this time Barton visits to make his inspection. A fire breaks out in the building, and all escape but Elizabeth. Barton returns and carries out the unconscious girl. A short time later Elizabeth gives a party for the factory girls. Barton attends and seeks the girl he rescued, paying no attention to the expensively gowned Elizabeth. She seeing that he does not recognize her, dons her factory garb. Barton's attention is attracted to her immediately, and he is surprised to learn, after proposing, that she is his new partner. After their marriage, conditions at the factory undergo a radical change.

New Edison Series

The Edison Company will launch four new series of photoplays from stories written by authors well known in the literary and dramatic world. There will be no chain connecting stories in the different series, as each story will be of independent and complete interest.

"Below the Dead Line," a series of strong detective stories by Scott Campbell, deal with the exploits of a celebrated private detective, Felix Boyd, employed by the largest financial concerns in New York City. Robert Conness will appear in this character throughout the series. The first release, "The Case of the Vanished Bonds," will be October 17.

"Young Lord Stranleigh," a series which appeared in the National Sunday Magazine, by Robert Barr, embraces four two-reel subjects in which the young aristocratic lord will afford an excellent vehicle for Marc MacDermott. The girl with whom the lord is in love will be played by Miriam Nesbitt. The initial installment, "The King's Move in the City," will be released November 27.

"Olive's Opportunities" is the title of a series especially written for the Edison Company by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, the well-known writer, whose stories are full of virility and action. Mabel Trunnelle will be known as "Olive," the young girl brought up in a gypsy camp, whose parentage is a mystery. Irrepressible and full of the joy of living, she will go through many exciting situations. "A Gypsy Madcap" is the first story to be released, on November 24.

"The Girl Who Earns Her Own Living" is a series by Mark Swan, who has written exclusively for the Edison Company for about two years. In this series each story will show the struggle of a young girl to maintain a decent existence, and the girl in each story will be a different character. Each one, however, will be played by Gertrude McCoy. The first release of these dramatic and human interest stories will be "The Stenographer," on December 5.

Newman Company Grows

The Newman Manufacturing Company, with factories at 717 Sycamore street, Cincinnati, Ohio, 101 Fourth avenue, New York, N. Y., and 108 W. Lake street, Chicago, Ill., manufacturing a complete line of brass poster frames, rails, easels and brass hardware of every description for theaters, has found it necessary, owing to its increased business, to obtain additional manufacturing space. Accordingly, it has added another floor to its large plant in Cincinnati, and has added the latest and most improved machinery. This firm, which has been in business for more than 32 years in the production of brass theater fixtures of every description, and which is the originator of brass lobby frames, is ever on the alert for new and improved ideas in lobby displays. It advises that the advertising columns of this paper will in the near future carry a more complete and detailed information. Copy of its very latest 1914-15 catalog can be had upon request.

Keystone Pictures on Broadway

No fewer than four out of five Broadway theaters in a distance of six blocks used Keystone-Mutual comedies last week. Beginning with the Broadway theater at Broadway and Forty-first street, and including Hammerstein's, the New York, the Palace and the Strand, every house used one of these mirth-provokers. The only house running pictures in all of the theatrical district that did not use Keystone comedies is a theater devoted to the output of one manufacturer and owned by it. An attempt is being made to increase the output of the Keystone-Mutual plant, in order to take care of the business that is indicated by this deserved popularity.

Well Staged Fire Scene in Serial

Heiress Escapes Death

EPISODE eighteen of "The Million Dollar Mystery," Thanhouser's big serial production is distinguished by a very realistic fire scene which takes place during a masked ball. The suggestion of terror on the part of the guests and the panic which follows the appearance of the smoke are well done and show touches of clever direction.

The players who have appeared in the previous installments again do the majority of the work, being assisted by Clare Kroell, who does splendidly as the Princess Parlova. The "extra" players perform without a slip in the ball room scenes. The photography is clear and even throughout.

While reading a newspaper the Countess Olga finds the announcement of a masked ball to be given by Princess Parlova. She shows the paper to Braine and he tells her that the princess is an oath-bound member of the "Black Hundred" although she has not been active for many years. The countess at once goes to Princess Parlova's home and shows her a ring which Braine gives her. The princess is forced to obey any orders the countess gives so when she is told to invite Florence and Jim to her ball she at once writes an invitation, which Countess Olga mails.

The heiress and her lover are delighted when they receive the invitations and Olga manages to be on hand as they plan to go to the affair. She drives them to a costumer's and then telephones Braine who hurries to the spot and learns the style of costumes the lovers have secured, ordering another pair exactly like them.

The evening of the ball Jim calls for Florence, both being in Colonial costume. Countess Olga and Braine also go to the affair in the same attire, the appearence of the two couples being identical. Princess Parlova greets the guests as they arrive and tells the Countess Olga and Braine that all is ready for the working out of the plot they have laid.

After a few dances Florence and Jim rest in the corner of the reception room, both being masked. Braine tells one of the men conspirators who is also among the guests that the time to strike is at hand and the conspirator secures the next dance with Florence. Jim waits in the corner for his sweetheart to return. Braine takes up his position in another corner, the appearance of which is identical to the one which Florence has just left. When the dance is over her partner leads her to Braine and the heiress mistakes him for Jim.

He says he has something important to tell her and leads her to a room on the second floor where she is seized by several more conspirators and bound to a chair. Braine then returns to the ball room and meets Princess Olga and they leave together. Florence's chauffeur thinks they are Florence and Jim and drives them to the heiress' home where they are picked up by their own chauffeur, who has been instructed to follow, and are driven to their apartments.

The conspirators tell Florence unless she tells them all they will blow up her home at twelve o'clock, showing the infernal machine they intend to use. Jim, in the reception room, becomes uneasy about Florence and asks the princess if she has seen her. The latter tells him that she just left with him for home. Jim realizes now that something is wrong and hurries to the heiress' home where he learns from the chauffeur that he was driven home by him. The reporter cannot understand the affair at first and then decides it is another plot, so he hurries back to the princess' home.

A premature explosion of the infernal machine takes place and the house takes fire. The conspirators flee. Florence is trapped and as she is tied to the chair, is helpless. Jim arrives just as the smoke begins to pour out through the windows. He rushes upstairs and lets Florence down from the window by a rope which Jones, who has returned with him, secures. Jim then escapes himself and the lovers are again safe while the conspirators make their way home, angry that still another of their plots has been foiled.

"Fantasma"

Charles M. Seay, the Edison director, has about completed the five-reel production of "Fantasma" for his company. A great deal of time and care has been devoted to this forthcoming feature, which the Edison Company expects to be one of the most pretentious ever turned out by an American manufacturer. The scenario for "Fantasma" was made under the supervision of Mr. Seay. George Hanlon, Jr., of the famous Hanlon brothers, will be featured in "Fantasma."

Apex Secures Eaco Films

The Eaco films, with Edwin August as their star, have signed contracts with P. P. Craft, who is at the head of the Apex Film Company, with offices in the West Forty-fifth Street Exchange Building, New York City, to handle exclusively the Eaco releases in the United States and Canada through the Strand Film Company channels, and likewise with J. Simmonds, who represents H. Winik, of 35 Little Newport street, London, W., England, who will control the foreign rights.

Edwin August, who is one of the officers of the Eaco Films, in addition to acting and producing his three-reel features will supervise the production of the single reel western and comedy companies. Mr. August has in mind a series of fifteen comedy scenarios in which Hal August, who portrayed a great number of excellent parts at the west coast Universal studios, will be featured. Each comedy reel will be complete in itself, yet it will bear continuity to the previous one. In the single reel westerns, a well-known picture artist will play the principal roles. The western company will go to California, and Managing Producer August, with his company, and the comedy company, will make Florida their winter quarters.

An Ardent Picture Fan

Mrs. Eliza Abrams, mother of Mrs. Siegmund Lubin, wife of the Philadelphia motion picture manufacturer, celebrated her 81st birthday anniversary on October 5. Mrs. Abrams was born in Hanover, Germany, in 1883, came to this country 55 years ago, and settled in New Haven, Conn., where many of her relatives still reside. She witnessed the production of the first motion picture film 20 years ago in the yard of the home of Mr. Lubin, with whom she still lives. Mrs. Abrams is in good health and is a regular patron of several of the finest picture theaters in Philadelphia, where she witnesses the showing of the latest releases and judges them with a critical eye. Naturally she thinks that the Lubin productions far exceed all the rest. She often visits her son-in-law's plant and shows keen interest in the scenes that are taken during her trips there. She believes there are great things in store for the silent drama, and hopes to see the day when they will be recognized as the leading means of artistic expression throughout the world.

Mrs. Eliza Abrams.

Grace Cunard of Universal has written a splendid scenario from Conan Doyle's "Study in Scarlet" which is being produced by Francis Ford and in which he takes the leading character.

Famous Players Offerings

Unprecedented as was the first three months program of the Famous Players Film Company, released through Paramount Pictures, the second section even surpasses the former galaxy of celebrated stars and plays in degree of national prestige and popularity.

The program for December, January and February reveals the fact that the Famous Players Film Company had induced Florence Reed to appear before its camera in her first film characterization, which important event attaches even greater significance when it is disclosed that the subject selected for her is none other than "The Dancing Girl," the famous emotional drama by Henry Arthur Jones. "The Straight Road," generally conceded to be the masterpiece of the eminent dramatist, Clyde Fitch, is also introduced by the Famous Players to the motion picture public. Mary Pickford is represented on the program by a subject entitled "The Stepsister," which it is intimated will cause a genuine surprise, and by the charming romantic play, "Mistress Nell." "The Million," Henry W. Savage's great comedy triumph, is also scheduled for forthcoming release, presenting Edward Abeles in the principal role. The program further includes: "The Conspiracy," the sensational triumph of the last theatrical season, with John Emerson, its author, in his original role; "The Crucible," by Mark Lee Luther, starring Marguerite Clark in her second film characterization for the Famous Players; and the much-discussed production of Wilson Barrett's drama, "The Sign of the Cross," which is at present creating a furore in England.

It is also noticeable that John Barrymore returns for a second film appearance in H. A. Du Souchet's famous comedy, "The Man from Mexico," one of the greatest farce successes of the contemporary theatrical era; May Irwin, the eminent comedienne, in her foremost success, "Mrs. Black is Back;" the first film appearance of the popular star, Pauline Frederick, who has won signal success in the current hit, "Innocent," in a powerful drama, entitled "Sold;" and the first and only appearance in motion pictures of Gaby Deslys, in an original conception entitled "Her Triumph," in which Harry Pilcer appears in her support.

Releases "At the Old Cross-Roads"

The Select Photo Play Producing Company offers as its first release, the five-reel feature "At the Old Cross-Roads," in which Miss Estha Williams is featured. Miss Williams originated the role of Parepe in the stage version of the story and her portrayal before the camera is a creditable one. Southern darkies are used in the picture and they, together with the well selected exteriors, are important factors in the establishing of an atmosphere typically southern. There are a number of big scenes all finely staged and well directed. Frank L. Dear scenarioized and directed the play.

The Select Company has its offices at 71 West Twenty-third street, where S. G. Lindeman presides as treasurer of the company. The Select has chosen the Alliance Films Corporation through which to release and the date chosen for their first is October 19.

"The Ragged Earl," the second release on the Alco Program is from the studio of the Popular Plays and Players Company and features Andrew Mack.

Otis Turner, the Universal west coast director, is back from his long vacation and is arranging for the production of "The Suburban" a four-reel spectacular feature with horse racing as its theme.

William Garwood of the American Company is now under the direction of Thomas Ricketts. As Mr. Ricketts is a devotee of the artistic and as Garwood is essentially an artist with true artistic leanings, they should make a good combination and pictures of no little merit should result.

Carl Louis Gregory, who is the underwater photographer of "Thirty Leagues Under the Sea," is whipping the 20,000 feet of film he took at Yellowstone Park for the Thanhouser Company into shape for early release. Mr. Gregory is the first motion picture photographer to receive a permit from the government to take the views.

Lewis Durham's prowess as an athlete served him in good stead the other day at Santa Monica, where he is playing the heavy role in "A Crook's Sweetheart," in production by Thomas H. Ince's New York Motion Picture Company, under the direction of Scott Sidney. Durham is an ex-Giant, having been a mound man for John McGraw several years ago.

Adele Lane of the Selig Company tried to return to work last week but her hands were still badly marked through being bitten by the bear at the animal farm and the doctor ordered them bound up again.

Myrtle Stedman of the Bosworth Inc., is taking a rest because she cannot help it—she would rather be working, but producer Hobert Bosworth is putting on and taking the lead in "Little Sunset," one of Charles E. Van Loan's stories which has been made into a four-reel feature and in which little Gordon Griffith is doing fine work. It is a play for men and Miss Stedman is therefore filling in her time adding to her already extensive wardrobe.

That the influence of a certain line of parts has a tendency to shape the career of an actress in the moving picture field as well as in the legitimate drama is exemplified by Rose Tapley, one of the Vitagraph players, who has played the part of a mother countless times since she began posing before the camera. Miss Tapley asserts that she has developed the motherly instinct to such a degree it is impossible for her to get out of the environment, though she is a mother in fancy only.

Director Wilfred Lucas is steadily approaching the end of Universal's "Trey of Hearts" serial and will probably not be sorry when the end comes. He has been splendidly backed up by his company including Cleo Madison, George Larkin, Ray Hanford and Ed. Sloman and will have the satisfaction of having produced an extremely difficult and excitingly interesting series.

William D. Taylor the Balboa director took his company over Chatsworth Pass and into the park for some scenes in his latest production and states he obtained some splendid results. This is one of the most beautiful parts of California and is replete with rugged scenery.

All territory for the rights to the Alco Program has now been closed and the first release, "The Nightingale" with Ethel Barrymore in the role of "Isloa" will be simultaneously released in every city of consequence in the country.

Henry and Jules Kronjager, brother camera men at the Thanhouser-Mutual studios, have it all over the rest of their fraternity at the New Rochelle plant, because they are the only two that can pronounce all the names of the towns and cities in the war zone across the big pond.

"I thought your hair was black." This involuntary exclamation is one which Bessie Eyton hears frequently from women visitors to the Selig Jungle-Zoo. While Miss Eyton's hair photographs dark, it is of a most beautiful auburn shade and falls, in glistening ropes, almost to her knees.

Responding to the ever increasing demand by the motion picture public for the production and presentation of allegorical plays, the forces of Thomas H. Ince have commenced work at the studios of the New York Motion Picture Corporation on a three-part feature, to be entitled "Rumpelstiltskin." According to advance information that has sifted out of the Santa Monica plant, the piece will far surpass anything of its kind ever attempted in the motion picture industry.

Harry Edwards who is now a director with the L. K. O. company has just sompleted a short comedy which is a real novelty and in which no human appears—just a mother cat, two kittens and a rat. The rat is the villain which attacks the kittens and one of them runs and fetches the mother cat who dispatches the rascal in short order.

Eugene Pallette of the Reliance and Majestic Mutual companies, who has been confined to his home for about two weeks with an attack of grippe, is back in harness again and working with Director Jack Adolfi.

Little Mary Pickford, who has received more proposals of marriage by mail order than any other celluloid celebrity, declares she will not follow the example of the ambidextrous sisterhood and write her own plays. She says that when she wants a special play Willie Wing of the Selig Company knows just how to write it and she never did like the typewriter anyway.

The exchange world of New York was pleasantly surprised this week with the announcement of the appointment of M. H. Hoffman as general manager of the New York Universal exchange. Mr. Hoffman is a lawyer and a graduate of New York City College and New York University and practiced his profession in New York and New England for ten years before entering the film business. While an attorney, he became interested in a circuit of theaters and later W. E. Greene made him manager of his Springfield, Mass. film exchange. When the Universal Film Manufacturing Company took over the Greene exchange, Hoffman was made special representative for Universal in the middle west and then manager of the Twenty-third street, New York exchange. In his new duties, he will have the supervision of the Mecca and Twenty-third street exchanges of the Universal; at the former branch, he will be ably assisted by Emanuel H. Goldstein, and at the downtown branch by Sam Zierler. In addition to the metropolitan offices, the exchanges in Newark, New Haven and Springfield come under Mr. Hoffman's charge.

Walter E. Perkins, the quaint comedian who will be remembered for his remarkable intepretation of Augustus Keene Shaver in the Edison three-reel comedy, "My Friend from India," is being featured in another of H. A. Du Souchet's successes, "Who Goes There?" Mr. Perkins who starred in this play on Broadway as "Toppy" the young bashful lieutenant, will appear in the same role in the three-reel photo play now being produced by the Edison Company.

Maym Kelso, well known to thousands of southerners and New Yorkers for her work in the "legitimate" and on the screen, has issued an appeal to her fellow photoplayers to co-operate with moving picture exhibitors throughout the country to help along the "Buy-a-bale-of-cotton" movement which has the approval of President Wilson, his cabinet and other government officials. Miss Kelso, a loyal southerner herself, has bought five hundred pounds of cotton to help the cause along.

Jack Richardson and his wife have taken a larger house on Anacapa street, Santa Barbara, Cal., and are finding fresh inspirations in the glorious sunsets, which they see from their studio windows. Mrs. Richardson says that she never so fully appreciated the beauty of Santa Barbara before.

Lewis J. Selznick, general manager of the World Film Corporation, paid a hurry call to Chicago, returning last Tuesday. While in Chicago he closed a contract which will mean doubling the space of the Chicago office.

Henry Otto, now a "Flying A" producer, has started out in his new connection with a dramatic theme "When the Roads Part;" the story of two young thieves, their attempted robbery and discovery, the awakening of the girl's better self, her decision that their roads must part, and her final happiness. Miss Greenwood and Mr. Field are Laura and Joe, the pals, and Mr. Coxen the doctor, whose love for Laura brings about her regeneration.

The Elks paper has the following to say of a well known newspaper man, William E. Wing, who has made a notable success as a writer of photoplays: "Old Bill Wing, author of 'Get the Story or the Money,' and 'Honesty is a Scream Policy,' was born in a state producing many famous men who immediately moved away. He was the first model of the Bertillon system and served the state in several sections. He is a writer of high class humor which arouses the ostracism of jealous editors and is the only newspaper man who did not send the first exclusive dispatch on the hoisting of the American flag in the Philippines. He came from a line of low rakish ancestors and has done newspaper work along the same lines ever since."

Robert Edeson has been the leading attraction for the past week at the Strand theater, New York City, where he is starring in the Lasky five-part film success "Where the TTrail Divides." The story, which in its stage version was Mr. Edeson's greatest vehicle, has made a wonderful photoplay and affords Mr. Edeson especial opportunity. There are three hundred scenes, all aptly chosen, and there is fine photography, artistic character portrayals and a note of sympathy throughout the five reels of the dramatic film. "Where the Trail Divides" is a feature of sterling value.

The Cosmos Feature Film Corporation is now selling state rights on its new five-reel film version of the well-known play and book, "Lena Rivers." Buelah Poynter, who has been seen on the stage hundreds of times in this emotional play of deceit and its retribution, is being featured in the leading role.

"Ireland a Nation," the scenario and production by Walter MacNamara, is having a successful showing at the Forty-fourth street theater where it is run twice daily. The film is that of the history of the Irish nation for the past 116 years and was made in County Wicklow, Irish actors having been secured to fill the cast. It is a film for which Mr. MacNamara deserves high credit.

Louise Glaum has gone back to the New York Motion Picture Corporation and is again under the management of Thomas Ince.

The Photoplayers' Club of Los Angeles, about sold out its tickets for their jamboree on October 30 and 31, which high-jinks consists of a two nights' vaudeville performance by famous people. Such names as Filson and Errol, Deeley and Wain, Theodore Roberts, Jess Dandy, Ford Sterling, Charles Murray, Hobart Bosworth, Charles Chaplin and Will Ritchie will be on the program.

A second Albuquerque company, with clever Dot Farley in the lead, will start operations some time this coming week, in the California studios of that concern.

David Horsley has offered a prize of $50.00 to the person suggesting the best name for the Horsley brand of film which it is understood is to be released as a part of the General Film program beginning within a few weeks. This offer is occasioned by Mr. Horsley's decision to withdraw the name "Ace" which was first suggested, and his desire to secure the best possible name for the new comedies. The contest is open to anyone, whether connected with the film game or not, and the selection will be made by a committee of disinterested judges. Competitors are required to explain the significance or reason for their suggestion in a letter of fifty words or less, and the competition will positively close at noon on Saturday, October 24.

Through the courtesy of Louis J. Selznick, general manager of the World Film Corporation, two five-reel World Film features, "Germania" and "For the Honor of Old Glory," comprised the program of the Irvington Red Cross Benefit given at Irvington Town Hall, Irvington-on-the-Hudson, New York, Saturday, October 10. A large crowd was present among whom were many of the best known society women in the East and the pictures received a big innovation.

One of the men with whom misfortune seems never to catch up, is Kurt Waldemar Linn. Maybe it is because his good nature is always in the ascendency, maybe it is because he would not recognize misfortune should he happen to meet with it some day; but most likely it is because he does whatever he has to do, so well that the Fates are glad to be with, rather than against him. So it was that Mr. Linn last April, after a successful management of things Eclectic sought Europe as the market from which to choose the foreign pictures to be marketed through the Eclectic Company's offices. It was just when Mr. Linn had perfected his system at work, over there, that war was declared and he decided that the best place for him was New York. So ten days of ocean travel brought him back and after a two weeks rest he joined the Universal fold as manager of its export department, where he reigns by virtue of unquestioned ability.

Miss Valentine Grant, leading woman with the Sid Olcott Company is back in New York and ready for the making of new Olcott pictures. On her recent return from Ireland, where the company made a number of films, Miss Grant went to her home in Seattle, Wash., where she enjoyed a rest of several weeks. The Room of the Green Rug has profited greatly by Miss Grant's return, as it boasts of an addition of two sepia reproductions of Ireland's beauty spots. And that is not all—Fred Beecroft's ash tray now reposes upon a grass mat made by the Siwash Indians.

General Program

Their Soldier Boy—Biograph—October 19—The young clerk, volunteers as a soldier, despite the fact that he must leave mother and sweetheart behind. Months pass, and no word comes from him. His mother is evicted by her landlord, and is cared for by the girl who is a telephone operator. At last she has to go to the home for destitute old women and is accompanied to the station by the girl. The train pulls in, and from it alights the soldier boy, last of all the village company to return from the war, but safe and sound. Joy succeeds the sorrow of the women, and is intensified by their pride in their soldier boy.

The Adventure of the Smuggled Diamonds—Edison—October 19.—Octavius, worn out by his many experiences, takes a trip to Europe. On the return voyage he meets a charming young lady known as Miss Blair. The ship's news tells of a clever diamond smuggling expedition which has invaded Paris and states that the person carrying the jewels is now on the way to America. Octavius at once starts to investigate and select a violinist as his victim. Upon landing in New York he tries to have the violinist held but the custom officials ignore him. Miss Blair has borrowed Octavius' cane, as she pretends to sprain her ankle. When he goes to his hotel Octavius unscrews the top of his cane and finds the diamonds concealed there. Miss Blair comes to the hotel and when she sees the diamonds have disappeared from the cane she covers Octavius with a pistol and demands that he produce them. The police arrive and place the clever smuggler under arrest and Octavius adds to his fame.

She Landed a Big One—Essanay—October 19.—A slap-stick comedy, the action of which takes place in a fishing village. Wallace Beery appears as "Sweedie" and goes through some very funny antics. Like most production of this kind it lacks climax. Sweedie tells her beau that her love has grown cold, so he decides to jump in the lake and end it all. He is prevented from taking this awful step by a stranger in the city who goes to the "buxom Sweedie" after making the rescue, and tries to make himself a hero in her eyes. He fails to show his bravery, however in rescuing Sweedie some time later, when she has hooked a big fish and is being dragged out into the lake. He calls the police, and a chase in a motor boat ensues in which they catch up to Sweedie and assist her in pulling in her large "catch." The hook breaks and the monstrous fish gets away. Angry at their interference Sweedie dumps them all in the lake and sallies forth to again try her luck. C. J. C.

The Mad Mountaineer—Kalem—(One and One-half Reels)—October 19—Jim, a mountaineer, loves Melissa, his neighbor's daughter. The boy learns that Melissa has been fascinated by Burton, a sportsman. A fight ensues between Jim and Burton and the latter is hurled over a cliff. Remorse drives the mountaineer mad. Burton is not killed, however. Melissa later learns he is engaged to another girl. Her old love for Jim returns and she endeavors to cure him. Later, Jim is confronted by the man he thinks he has killed and the shock restores him to sanity.

It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. In that case please see that we are advised of your film titles and release dates, and furnished with a brief synopsis of the story. This department is intended for every film manufacturer, whether he uses our advertising pages or not.

Hesanut Buys an Auto—Kalem—(Split Reel)—October 19.—The adventures encountered by Kalem's cartoon comedian after he purchases an auto are crammed with fun. Up the sides of skyscrapers and over the Statue of Liberty he goes, causing a laugh a minute.

The Golden Hope—(Beloved Adventurer series)—Lubin—October 19.—When he is told the "Golden Hope" mine is worthless, Lord Cecil finds himself in a bad way financially and his English estates are about to be sold under the hammer. He goes west and arrives in the midst of a stampede for new gold fields. He has no money to pay the hotel keeper and offers the stocks in his mine but Betty, who has learned that the mine is in the center of the new field, warns him and Lord Cecil finds that he is worth millions. Carson tries to steal the stocks but Betty gives Lord Cecil a pistol and he easily conquers the invader. He then leaves for England to save his estates and Betty, still ashamed of her part in the first swindling affair watches him go sadly, little knowing he carries her picture in his heart.

The Blue Flame—Selig—October 19.—Collins, head of the "crime syndicate," plans to secure jewels from wealthy Garvey. At a ball the lights are turned out and when they are switched on again Collins is found dead and the jewels have been stolen. Little, a private detective, is called and after failing in several attempts finally solves the mystery. A complete review of this subject will be found on page 521, issue of October 17.

His Wedded Wife—Vitagraph—October 19.—Esther has to marry before her 21st birthday in order to inherit the fortune of a relative. She refuses a member of the lawyer firm who are plotting to get the money and consults the family doctor. As she leaves the house, Bentley, a friend of the doctor's, saves her from a thief and they are attracted to each other. Later Bentley is hurt and the doctor, thinking he will die arranges a marriage of convenience between him and Esther. Bentley's face is covered with bandages and the girl does not see it. She believes him dead and goes to the seaside. Bentley recovers and secures a letter of introduction from the doctor to his wife under an assumed name. They meet and when she learns her husband is alive she is heartbroken, as she has grown to love Bentley but when matters are explained she is again happy.

Martin Chuzzlewit—Biograph—(Two Reels)—October 20.—Old Martin Chuzzlewit disinherits his grandson, young Martin, when he finds that the boy is set upon marrying his ward, Mary Graham. Young Martin turns to his uncle and cousin for sympathy, but they spurn him, as he is now penniless. Seth Pecksniff, an architect, also ignores young Martin and seeks the good graces of old Martin. Tom, Pecksniff's assistant, with Mark Tapley, sweetheart of Widow Lupin who keeps the Dragon Inn, leaves for America to seek his fortune and Martin goes with him. Seeing that Pecksniff will inherit old Martin's money, young Martin's cousin schemes to marry Pecksniff's daughter, Mercy, who it is agreed will receive $15,000 at the time of her marriage. The cousin says he will inherit his father's property upon his death which he indicates will be soon. He then poisons the old man, the murder being seen by two insurance agents who accuse him later, when he attempts to have his life insured after his marriage to Mercy. Having failed in America Mark and Martin return home and while they are talking with Widow Lupin and Mary they see the cousin stab the insurance agent who has threatened to expose him. The cousin is accused by them of the two murders and old Martin, thoroughly sorry for what he has done to his grandson, makes him his sole heir and gives him Mary's hand.

The Man in the Dark—Edison—October 20.—Silver Joe, a ragpicker, finds a bit of paper in an alley, the handwriting of which carries him back to the years when he was engaged to a beautiful girl. He tells the story to his derelict companions. How on the eve of their wedding he had seen her with another man and how he had broken the engagement. One of his listeners starts as he hears the tale. Then he tells Silver Joe that he was the other man and that the girl was his sister. He was then being pursued by the police and could not come to her like a gentleman. Silver Joe goes to seek the girl but finds it is too late and so he goes back to his work of gathering rags in the alleys of the city.

Mother O' Dreams—Essanay—October 20.—Wonderful acting by Gerda Holmes, Ruth Stonehouse, Richard C. Travers and Bryant Washburn, coupled with a strong, convincing story make this production a dramatic gem. Its appeal is direct to the heart and the interest is kept alive from the first scene to the last. Sloan, being out of work, goes West to find employment, leaving his wife behind. A baby is born, and shortly after Mrs. Sloan is sent to a hospital, having contracted a contagious disease. A neighbor takes care of the baby, but upon hearing of Mrs. Sloan's death from an unreliable source, places the child in an orphanage. Later Mrs. Sloan recovers, and is unable to find any trace of her child. Years pass, and Alice, now a beautiful girl, dreams of a mother's tender love and a home filled with comforts, but only awakens to find the cold walls of the orphanage. Meantime Mrs. Sloan has been left a fortune by her husband. John Mason, a teacher in the orphanage, is a frequent visitor, and connecting the name, tells her of his pupil, Alice Sloan. A meeting is arranged, and Alice at last finds her Mother O' Dreams a reality. C. J. C.

The Wise Rube—Kalem—October 20.—Because his cousin Cy is fresh from the farm, Bill thinks him an easy mark. He learns his mistake, however, when Cy gets a corner on the affections of Jane, whom Bill loves. Cy wins the heart of Jane's father when he shows him a new way of transplanting a rose bush. Bill destroys the roots of the bush, hoping thereby to bring about the downfall of his country cousin. Cy, however, learns what has happened and secretly replaces the ruined bush with the biggest one he can buy. Not only does this move crush Bill, but it wins a bride for Cy.

Such a Mess—Lubin—(Split Reel)—October 20.—Jack Hodge writes Bess Podge asking her to elope with him. Their fathers are sworn enemies and when old man Podge gets the note he locks Bess in her room and sends his romantic sister to meet Jack and kidnap him. Hodge locks Jack up and sends his brother from Texas to meet Bess and kidnap her. The substitutes meet and elope and the parents turn their children loose, thinking all is safe, and they also elope.

Only Skin Deep—Lubin—(Split Reel)—October 20.—Bess and Rose, two sisters, are envious of a chum's engagement ring, and when they see a matrimonial advertisement, they decide to answer it even though the advertisement emphatically reads that only homely women need apply since the advertiser has already lost three pretty wives. With the aid of hairdressing and make up, they contrive to qualify for the position of a homely wife, and when Bess is eliminated she knocks out a few front teeth and tries again. This nearly snatches the victory from Rose. But Bess is finally outdone by an older and much homlier woman who captures the beauty prize and the girls are glad their beauty is only skin deep.

Jimmy Hayes and Muriel—Selig—October 20.—Jimmy Hayes joins the Texas rangers and causes much merriment by displaying "Muriel," a horned toad, which he declares is his mascot. Saldar, a Mexican bandit, creates a reign of terror among the settlers and the rangers set out to capture him. Jimmy Hayes is one of the party but later, when the rangers give up the pursuit, Hayes is missing and the others think he deserted under fire. In reality Hayes has pursued Saldar and his band, shooting them all, but being mortally wounded in the struggle. A year later the rangers come upon a bleaching skeleton and are startled to discover near it "Muriel," the famous horned toad, which proves that after all Hayes had been faithful to his salt. Tom Mix plays the role of Hayes and the picture contains many thrills.

Love Charm—Columbus—October 20.—Willie's sole ambition is to eat. He is always tired and his father becomes disgusted with him and chases him from home, much to the joy of the entire household. In his wanderings he comes upon a band of gypsies from whom he buys some wonderful powder which they claim will make his bitterest enemy love him. He returns home after using the powder, and is received with open arms by his father. All is well until his crusty old uncle arrives and it is up to Willie to make him love him. He hies himself back to the gypsies for more powder, but by mistake, is given the "powder of hatred" and the result is anything but pleasant for Willie.

Anne of the Mines—Vitagraph—(Two Reels)—October 20.—Anne, the daughter of old Tom, the superintendent of the mines, saves the life of Arizona Kid and becomes engaged to him. They day before their wedding Arizona's wife and children, whom he has deserted, come to the town and Anne forces the man to care for them. Old Tom orders Arizona from his house and the renegade swears revenge. He succeeds in getting old Tom drunk and he is discharged. When Albert, the new superintendent, arrives Anne shows her hate for him, though Albert becomes friendly with old Tom and all the other miners. Arizona becomes jealous of Albert and plots to kill him by blasting the shaft in which he is working. Anne arrives in time to save Albert but is herself imprisoned in the shaft. Arizona Kid, realizing what he has done, gives his own life to rescue Anne and the new superintendent and the girl are united.

The Fable of the Long Range Lover and the Lollypalooze—Essanay—October 21.—Another of the George Ade series with Lillian Drew and Harry Dunkinson in the leading roles. The action builds up a clever climax and the slangy subtitles are certain to cause laughter. A release that is worthy in every way. Blackstone Cooley, a studious young lawyer, could not see the girls for dust. One day while walking down the street he ran squat into a dame who looked like a million dollars to him. At last he realized that he had spotted the queen of the human race. From that time on he tried in every way possible to learn her name and address, but nary a soul did he know who could arrange an introduction. He worried himself sick, and the doctor ordered him away to a summer resort. Still she was constantly on his mind. One day she blew in at the summer hotel, and after two years of waiting, he met her. That was plenty, her line of gab queered her from the start. Next day Mr. Cooley beat it for home. Moral: Many who look the limit do not listen very well. C. J. C.

The False Guardian—Kalem—October 21.—Just as he is appointed guardian of his niece, Helen, aged John Graham dies. Butts his valet, conceives the idea of assuming Graham's identity. Aided by Stone, the rascally butler, Butts plans to send Helen to an insane asylum and seize her fortune. Tom, the girl's sweetheart, learns of the diabolical scheme and pursues the auto which is conveying Stone and Helen to the asylum. As the result of an accident, the auto is wrecked and Stone is mortally injured. The man confesses. Butts is arrested and sent to prison.

Two's Company—Edison—October 21.—Charlie spends much of his time trying to propose to Marion. He has secured a book entitled "How to Propose" and has studied it from cover to cover. It is no use, however, for their friends, her parents, her sisters and brother, circumstance and every other conceivable thing interferes each time he is ready to pop the question. They row far out into the lake, only to be followed by Marion's big sister who swims faster than Charlie can row. At last in desperation Charlie bribes a balonist to let them go up in the air in his craft and then he at last proposes in peace and is accepted on the spot.

The Hopeless Game—Lubin—(Two Reels)—October 21.—John Throp and Mabel Border meet on an ocean liner and become engaged. The last day out she learns that Jack is a professional gambler and breaks the engagement. He tells her that he is going to live straight and when he has made good he will come back to her; she promises to wait. Herbert Murry, a worthless fellow courts Mabel to secure the fortune which has been left her, though he cares nothing for her. Jack tries to earn an honest living in the West but cannot secure work. He takes up card playing again and becomes owner of the gambling house. A man is killed in the house and Jack realizes how wrong it is and gives all he has won to the man's widow. Mabel learns of the affair and marries Herbert, as she thinks Jack has broken his word. Jack works on a ranch and two years later is a partner. He returns East and finds that Herbert has spent all of Mabel's money and steals from his employers to pay debts. Hoping to save the couple he gambles once more and wins from a stranger. He takes the money to Mabel and finds that the loser was her husband and that on account of his losses he committed suicide.

The Rajah's Vacation—Selig—October 21—Hennessy and Morris, two rival sporting editors, agree to handle some press work for a circus, upon an understanding that they are to receive $100 for their services. The show arrives in town broke and the two editors are advised to attach "Rajah," an elephant, in order to get what is due them. Rajah, however, proves to be a real "white elephant" on their hands for the bills for his board and lodging put the editors in deeper debt than ever. They rent him to local stores for advertising purposes and obtain ample remuneration, but Rajah spoils their dreams of a fortune by running wild in the streets and causing much damage. They are finally relieved to have a showman appear to take Rajah off their hands, just when all seems lost. N. G. C.

Under False Colors—Vitagraph—October 21.—Marie, the maid of Mrs. and Miss Moneytoburn, dresses in her mistress's clothes and assuming her indentity meets Private Jack Warring, who claims he is Lieutenant Halt. The next day Marie calls at the fort to see the Lieutenant, but is informed by Captain Mars that there is no such man. Mars, however, falls in love with Marie, believing her to be Miss Moneytoburn. He sends Jack to the Moneytoburns' home with flowers which Jack presents as his own. Mars then comes to call, discovers Jack hiding and denounces him. Jack again calls and Marie confesses that she is only the maid and is surprised when Jack tells her that he is only a private. The Moneytoburns return home and are at first indignant, but when they learn that Marie is a bride they forgive her.

His Loving Spouse—Biograph—(Split Reels)—October 22.—Murphy's wife is a tartar, and to get even with her he buys a dummy from a gymnasium and sets it up in the yard to practice boxing upon it. To heighten the effect, he dresses the figure in some of his wife's clothes. Passers-by see him and think he is beating his wife, so they call the police. His wife also has seen him and during his temporary absence she takes the place of the dummy which apparently comes to life and gives Murphy a drubbing. The crowd that collects sees that Mrs. Murphy is well able to take care of her husband, and goes off.

They Called It "Baby"—Biograph—(Split Reel)—October 22.—An Indian brave is to marry the chief's daughter, and a dog is required for the wedding feast. Mabel and Dolly are playing with "Baby," a lap dog, when an Indian seizes the darling and makes off with it. The girls raise an outcry, "The Indians have stolen our Baby!" The police attack the Indian camp and after a very funny series of battle scenes the girls rescue their pet whereupon the men exclaim in disgust "So that's Baby!"

Slippery Slim, the Mortgage and Sophie—Essanay—October 22.—Slippery Slim, Justice of the Peace, serves a notice on Hiram Clutts threatening to forclose his mortgage unless Sophie marries him the next day. Hiram agrees that Sophie shall marry him as he demands. Sophie tells Mustang of this and they plan to elope that night. Mustang calls for her in his buggy, but they fail to make their escape unnoticed by Hiram. He chases them with a shot gun but is unable to catch them before they reach Slim's office. They disguise themselves, and Slim, not knowing who they are, performs the marriage ceremony. They then take off their disguise and Slim falls in a faint at seeing his disastrous mistake.

Her Mother Was a Lady—Lubin—(Two Reels)—October 22.—Nan O'Hara, a little Irish girl whose mother "was a lady," returns some valuable papers to Bob Jennings, a young business man, saving him from losing a contract but losing her job at a lunch counter as a result. Bob secures her a position as companion to his mother, who wishes him to marry a society girl. Nan and Bob fall in love but Bob's mother discharges Nan and tells her Bob is engaged to the society girl. Bob finds Nan at her old place behind the lunch counter and helps her during the noon rush while a party of his society friends are gathered for a luncheon at which Bob's engagement to the society girl is to be announced. As soon as the lunch counter has been cleared Bob and Nan are married by a minister who happens to stop for lunch and Bob leads his bride home where the guests still wait for him. His mother is at first angry but soon forgives her son and receives Nan into her home.

The Mill of Life—Vitagraph—October 22.—After giving his nephew Rolland, a college education John Lathan, owner of a large mill, takes him into partnership. Rolland becomes fascinated with Helen Grant, a young mill girl who is engaged to Harry Ames. Harry and Helen are married and Rolland plays upon Harry's weakness for drink and eventually has him discharged for neglecting his duty. He then gives Harry a letter to a friend in America who he says, will furnish him with a position and takes Helen back to her old position in the mill. Rolland tries to pursuade Helen to elope with him, but Harry's friend Mark, cables the husband to come home at once. Helen is discharged when she refuses to consider Rolland and attempts to commit suicide, but is rescued by her husband. When Rolland's uncle learns of his villainous work he disowns him and Helen and Harry find happiness together.

Bootles' Baby—Edison—(Two Reels)—October 23.—Gilchrist, a stern and heartless army officer, neglects his wife and baby. The wife steals into the barracks and puts the child on Bootles' bed, thinking it is her husband's. Bootles cares for the child and eventually meets and marries the wife when Gilchrist dies. A complete review of this film will be found on page 505 of the October 10 issue of Motography.

A Woman's Folly—Biograph—October 23.—Thinking to advance her social position, a young widow has represented herself in society as an unmarried woman, and when she falls in love with Doctor Thornton and marries him, she has not the courage to confess her deception, but pays clandestine visits to her boy who is at the house of her aunt. The doctor's suspicions are aroused by her actions, and he decides to follow her. But a block in the street traffic permits her motor car to escape, and in his haste to follow the doctor runs down a little boy who is playing near the curb. None of those who witness the accident can tell where the child lives, and the doctor rushes him to his own home where, on examination, the boy proves to have sustained no injury. That evening Thornton takes the child to the address he gives and entering the house finds his wife, who is nearly distraught by the disappearance of her son. Explanations ensue, and the doctor gathers his wife and the child into his arms.

The Private Officer—Essanay—Two Reels—October 23.—A private soldier and an officer love the same girl and she returns the affection of the former until a lovers' quarrel comes between them. She then becomes engaged to the officer. The officer proves unworthy of his rank and is unfit to appear at guard mounting. The private, who is the officer's double in appearance, takes his rival's place and saves him from disgrace for the girl's sake. His act is rewarded when he regains her love. A complete review will be found on page 519 of the October 17 issue.

Micky Flynn's Escapade—Kalem—October 23.—Micky, an escaped convict, picks the pocket of Levy, a counterfeiter. He is seen by a policeman, who compels the counterfeiter to accompany him in the pursuit. Micky gives Rose, his sweetheart, some of the counterfeit money. The people she passes it on raise a howl and go after her. Chance throws Levy, his confederate, Rose and Micky together and they attempt to escape in an auto of the vintage of '61. They are captured after a rip-roaring chase and lugged to jail.

The Girl in the Tenement—Lubin—October 23.—Mary Davis, a girl of the tenements, meets and admires the little daughter of Dick Meredith, a wealthy manufacturer. Dick discharges Ellis, a laborer employed by him and Ellis comes to Mary's home to tell the girl's father of his plan to get even with Dick. The next day Ellis becomes intoxicated and kidnaps Dick's little child. Mary sees the act and sends for Dick, who is at his country club. Ellis locks the girl in the Davis home and accidentally knocks a lamp over as he falls asleep on the table. Mary saves the little girl from the flames and Ellis is burned in the building. Dick sees the rescue and takes Mary to his home. Later he learns to love her and they are married.

A Tonsorial Leopard Tamer—Selig—October 23.—Mose Jackson, proprietor of a colored barber shop, is enamored of Lucinda Snow, a domestic in the employ of George Marston, a retired animal hunter. Lucinda, however, is bewitched by the gaudy uniform of Gallus Brown, a Pullman porter and Mose, in despair, seeks to forget his troubles at the circus. Beholding Signor Leonardo exhibit his cage of performing leopards, Mose is hypnotized by the signor's glittering uniform and is convinced it will help him to win back the love of Lucinda. Unfortunately Signor Leonardo has purchased some catnip for his pets and placed it in the pockets of his brilliant uniform. When Mose steals the coat and hastily leaves the menagerie the leopards pursue him, in order to obtain the catnip. Mose thinks they want to eat him and frantically flees. The situation is saved by a fortunate meeting with Leonardo and Mose convinces Lucinda that he has been exceedingly brave. John Lancaster and Lyllian Brown Leighton have the leads and cause many laughs by their antics. N. G. C.

A Costume Piece—Vitagraph—October 23.—Frank Allen plans to elope with Betsy Cooper despite the objections of Betsy's father who is a judge. The housemaid discloses the plans of the elopement to Judge Cooper and he plans with the sheriff to follow the lovers and arrest them. The judge takes Betsy to a masked ball while the sheriff shadows Frank. "Gasoline Pete" wanders into the ball room and is mistaken by Betsy for Frank. Frank arrives just as Betsy and the other man leave in an automobile. He follows in another car, overtakes them and exchanges places with "Gasoline Pete." The judge and sheriff capture Pete, but Frank and Betsy are married by the time the pursuers reach them, so the judge makes the best of it and treats the affair as a joke.

The Broken Rose—Biograph—October 24.—From childhood Dick Guild had been constructively inclined, one of the greatest tragedies of his early years being the ruthless breaking of a rosebush by a destructive boy. But he learned that it was possible to make the broken rose grow afresh, and in manhood the lesson was put to good effect when the girl he loves cast aside by the destructive man, stirred in him the same feeling of pity and desire to help which made him plant the broken rose again. But the destructive man again seeks to break the rose, and in protecting it Dick for the first time in his life retaliates. In the struggle which follows the destructive man totters over a cliff and is himself broken at last. The evil gone out of their lives, Dick and his Rose live happily ever after.

A Question of Clothes—Edison—(Split Reel)—October 24.—Henry Harvey, a man of affairs, gives orders to arrest all tramps in order to keep them away from the village. He then goes to the country, where he takes a swim in the lake. Weary, a tramp, steals his clothes and goes to the village where he secures a position on account of his appearance. Harvey is forced to return to the village in tramp clothing and is arrested. Weary learns of the affair through the papers and returns the stolen clothes. Harvey has a different view of things and shakes hands with the man he formerly would not have recognized.

Buster Brown's Uncle—Edison—(Split Reel)—October 24.—Buster's uncle arrives for a visit. Buster and Mary Jane fasten roller skates to his feet as he sleeps in a Morris chair and holler fire. Uncle has a difficult time and the children are put to bed. They plan another trick, however, and as uncle goes to bed in preference to meeting the guests they place two alarm clocks under his pillow. He is frightened when they go off and rushes into the ball room in his pajamas. Buster is saved from a spanking by the guests and makes another of his unique resolutions.

Broncho Billy-Favorite — Essanay—October 24.—Having refused to accompany either Broncho Billy or the mail carrier to a dance at the town hall, Broncho's sweetheart accepts the invitation of his best pal. Broncho takes the defeat gracefully and decides to leave the country, while the mail carrier tries to force her to go with him. She pulls a gun on him. He snatches it away from her, then leaves a note telling that he will turn the "Plaything" over to her sweetheart if he calls for it at the saloon. Her sweetheart is afraid to do this, but tells Broncho Billy of the affair and he immediately goes to the saloon, where he overpowers the mail carrier, taking the gun away from him. He then departs. The girl upon hearing who really recovered the gun, starts in pursuit of Broncho, overtakes him and induces him to return.

The Demon of the Rails—Kalem—October 24.—Mabel's sweetheart, Billy, freight engineer, is suspended because of neglect of duty. Several days later, Mabel learns that Olmstead, of the Fast Express, has gone insane during his run. She notifies Billy. At the risk of his life, Billy boards the speeding train. He overcomes the crazy man after a terrific struggle and averts a horrible wreck by the fraction of a second. His heroism brings about his reinstatement and makes possible his marriage to Mabel.

The Crooks—Lubin—October 24.—Red Eyed Zeke and his gang, resting in their mountain roost, hidden from eyes of all honest beings, plan to rob the Goldbull residence. They arrive at the mansion and enter through the front window. Chief Hoggenheimer and his trusty force are enjoying a brief respite, when they are visited by Poker, chief of detectives. Mr. and Mrs. Goldbull, hearing their home being wrecked, awake and get busy; she calls the police and he gives battle to the invaders. The force get news of the attack and hasten to pinch Zeke and his henchmen; excepting the Chiefs who decide to remain and battle for the poker championship of the city's adherents. The force arrive and break up Zeke's party and chase them, endeavoring to bring them to justice. They meet on the banks of the city's reservoir and all battle, in an endeavor to save themselves from a watery grave.

The Tragedy that Lived—Selig—October 24.—John and Mary are lovers in the year 1860. Mary flirts with a scoundrel named Starling and John, discovering them, slaps Starling's face and tells Mary "If you are false to me now you will be false to me afterwards!" That night Mary wanders into the portrait gallery and falls asleep. She dreams that two of the portraits of her ancestors, a man and a woman, come to life and re-enact a tragedy of one hundred years ago corresponding almost exactly to her experience with John. A duel is fought in which the John of a hundred years ago is killed. Awakening Mary endeavors to find her John, her terror growing when she learns that he has gone to fight a duel with Starling. Mary seeks out the scene of the conflict but arrives too late. The tragedy that lived is born again. Kathlyn Williams, Wheeler Oakman and Charles Clary have the leads and hold one's interest till the end. N. G. C.

Good-bye, Summer—Vitagraph—(Two Reels)—October 24.—Upon the death of her parents Valerie is given to Louis Martin, a friend, who, though he is very kind to her, does not understand the girl. Preston Sperry asks Martin for consent to marry Valerie and Martin agrees, so the girl becomes a bride. She is far from happy, however, as Sperry is cold and staid. The birth of a little son brings some happiness to Valerie, but again she is crushed by her husband's criticisms of the manner in which she tries to raise the boy. Valerie again takes up her art studies and meets Hugo St. Clair an artist, who appreciates her artistic nature. They fall in love and go to Europe together. The child calls continually for its mother, but Sperry is stern and will not write her. At last love of her child brings Valerie back to her home, where her husband coldly receives her. She resumes her former dull life, her only thought being the care of her child.

Mutual Program

Our Mutual Girl—(Chapter 40)—Reliance—October 19.—The day following the disappearance of Betty Hamilton's jewel, Ralph Hamilton determined to go to Margaret and demand that she return the stolen goods. But he found that Margaret and Aunt Abbie had gone to town, so composed himself to wait.. Meanwhile, Aunt Abbie and her niece were feasting their eyes on Simcox creations. Also, they went up in the Flatiron Building and enjoyed a panoramic vision of New York. When they reached home, Ralph was still sitting on the porch. Irritated with waiting, Ralph instantly demanded his sister's gem. But just then Ralph saw skulking in the bushes a suspicious-looking man. Ralph had the fellow by the shoulder, and Margaret recognized Baby Lily's father. The whole story came out and gradually, the remarkable tangle in which Margaret's foundling, Margaret herself, Ralph's own cousin, his sister, and this former chauffeur of his aunt's, whom he now remembered perfectly—all became clear to him. Betty Hamilton was called on the 'phone. It was decided that if he would promise to keep away, Baby Lily's father would be set free. Margaret and Betty arranged that Lily should become her aunt's ward. Ralph was pleased with the way the affair had turned out. But Our Mutual Girl, while liking this troublesome young man, was determined in secret that he should not soon forget the part he had recently played.

Dad and the Girls—Beauty—October 20. A really funny Beauty subject which depends upon father's affection for his stenographer, for its comedy. Mother arrives and fires the stenographer she finds father embracing. She then engages the homeliest girl at the employment agency as father's stenographer but father, assisted by his son, makes an excuse for firing her and the son then manages to have his fiancee engaged for the position. When mother arrives as father is hugging the latest stenographer, son saves the situation by pointing out that father was but congratulating the girl upon her engagement. Joe Harris, Fred Gamble, Afton Minerr, and Emma Kluge have the leads. N. G. C.

Environment—Majestic—October 20.—Bob Campbell, ne'er-do-well, falls in love with Bella Cortwright, daughter of the president of the city bank. She persuades him to try to get a steady job and be somebody. He promises, but finds it very hard to overcome his evil reputation. Bob chances to meet James Crawford, and is inveigled into helping him rob the bank. While Campbell is standing on guard Bella happens along. She praises Bob for his pluck in trying persistently to get honorable work. Ashamed of the position in which, all unconsciously, she has caught him, he gives chase to the burglar, who jumps aboard a deserted train at the station, and starting the engine, makes his getaway. Bob manages to swing himself up behind, and making his way to the locomotive, engages the crook in a hand to hand fight, in which he flings him from the moving train. Returning, he finds the bank robber dead. Bob refunds the stolen money, receiving the bank president's thanks in the form of a better position, and Bella for his wife.

Old Jackson's Girl—Thanhouser—October 20. Jim Jackson is suspected of being a horse thief, but evidence against him is lacking. His daughter, Beth, is attracted to Bob Davis, a young "nester," but he is interested in Ruth Camby, the daughter of a wealthy ranchman. Davis opposes Ruth's father, refusing to dispose of his property to him. Ruth has no longer any use for him. Davis is reluctant to renew attentions to Beth, as she is crude, with little education. Jackson is caught on Camby's land, and Camby is killed. Jackson, vindictive toward Davis, manages to saddle him with the crime, and Camby's cowboys take the law into their hands. Beth overhears the plot and rides to Davis' cabin in time to warn him. When their ammunition is nearly exhausted, she, unknown to him, disguises herself in a suit of his clothes, and, running from the house, leaps on his horse and rides off down the trail, the posse in hot pursuit. She is wounded. Meanwhile, her father has been captured by the sheriff. Fatally hurt, he clears Davis of the crime. And the young man then realizes that Beth is worth a dozen Ruth Cambys.

In the Open—American.—October 21. A thrilling little western drama of the type for which American has long been famous. William Garwood, as the hero, Shorty and Sherlock Holmes—Two Reels)—Broncho—October 21.—Shorty reading "The Sign of the Four," is fired with ambition to become a detective. He pulls enough hairs from the horse's tail to make himself a beard, acquires a "sleuth" hat, and arms himself with a huge microscope. He trails everybody in camp until the force, to get back at him, frame up a robbery. Nora, the cook, pretends to have lost her diamond pin and Shorty undertakes this "mystery case." That night the village postoffice is rifled, and Shorty is taken prisoner by the burglars, who bind him. While they are reconnoitering, Shorty burns the ropes off his wrists with his microscope. And when he hears the robbers returning, he throws himself back on the ground as though still their captive. The minute they have their backs turned, Shorty covers them with his pistol. He shoots one, and marches the other before him to the village sheriff. Ella, the postmistress, falsely suspected of the theft, is released when Shorty appears with the real thief.

Out of the Deputy's Hands—Reliance October 21.—Deputy Sheriff Martin of Arizona is in love with Lola, a waitress at the Gold Dollar restaurant. He comes into Gold Dollar on the trail of James Kinney, who is wanted for murder. Kinney is discovered at work in the mine under an assumed name, and the sheriff learns that he is attentive to Lola. This enrages Martin. During an accident, Kinney goes down into the mine with a gang of men. Martin joins him, and they work side by side until they collapse from exhaustion. Then Kinney confesses to Martin that he killed a man named Marcus for beating Lola, who, he claimed, was his step-daughter. The two men are dug out of the mine. Martin resigns as deputy sheriff and escorts Kinney safely away. Then Martin and Lola are left to one another.

The Power of the Angelus—Two Reels—Domino—October 22. In an effort to forget the elopement of his sweetheart, Mercedes, and Carlos Ferrara, Juan Puyan enters a monastery. Several years later Mercedes frustrates Ferrara's scheme to rob the monks of a precious chalice by notifying Juan who is now Superior Father. When the Mexicans awaken to a true realization of the sacrilege they are about to commit they turn on Ferrara and tear him to pieces. Mercedes, who aroused the Mexicans' faith by ringing the Angelus, enters the convent and devotes the rest of her life to charitable works.

The Power of the Angelus—Domino—October 22. — Don Gomez, a Spanish Grandee, his daughter Mercedes and her fiance Juan Puyan extend hospitality to Carlos Ferrara. Carlos falls in love with Mercedes, whom he persuades to elope with him. Juan and the don follow them, arriving just too late to prevent the marriage. The don disowns his daughter, Juan, broken hearted becomes a monk. Carlos proves to be an adventurer, and several years later as leader of a gang of bravos, runs a disreputable road house. A Mexican gardener learns that a ship would arrive at sunset with the Sacred Chalice, of gold and precious stones. The Mexican informs Carlos. Mercedes overhears and runs to the monastery to inform the monks. She finds Juan there as Father Superior. Juan takes all his monks with him to protect the Chalice and leaves Mercedes to ring the Angelus. The Chalice is delivered to the monks and on their way back to the monastery with it they are waylaid by Carlos and his men. A fierce fight ensues. It is interrupted by the ringing of the Angelus, when through force of habit all the Mexicans bow their heads in prayer. Carlos urges them on, but they turn on him and tear him to pieces. The monks return to the monastery with the Chalice. The father finds Mercedes in sorrow and when she asks his advice, tells her to carry her sorrow as he did to the foot of God's Holy Cross. Mercedes sobbingly kneels at the foot of the cross.

The Spark Eternal—Kay Bee—October 23.—Dan Fadden, East side gunman and member of the Gopher Gang of which Schwartz is leader, is in love with Lola, an East side girl. The Gophers give a ball, which is broken up by rival gangsters. Lola is shot and taken to the hospital. Upon recovery she is given a place as housemaid in Dr. Deering's home. Schwartz compels Dan, as a member of the gang, to go to the Doctor's home to rob it. Dan writes Lola to leave her window open so that he will be able to enter the house without detection. Lola lets Dan in and leads him to where he can see Mrs. Deering, the doctor and the children seated in the living room, the doctor reading to the children. The scene appeals to Dan and he decides to reform. He and Lola leave the Deering home, go to the priest's house and are married.

A Blotted Page—Reliance—October 23. John Richards, his wealth swept away and himself deserted by his wife and family, returns to his dismantled home, intending to commit suicide. One servant is left to greet him and she follows him to the library in time to prevent him killing himself. Sane once more, he listens to her story. Her husband committed suicide when he lost his first earnings in a mining proposition, and her baby died. She determined to end her life, but a child, left motherless, brought her back to the realization that she had yet something in the world to live for. She placed little Mae in a home to be cared for and entered Richards' employ in order to support the child. Richards learns it was his father's firm, the source of his own fortune, that ruined Martha's husband. He determines to work hard to help Martha bring up the child, and thus retrieve character and the will to live.

The Final Impulse—American.—October 23. Jack the foreman's assistant, in love with Marian, the foreman's daughter, is jealous when a stranger in the camp pays attention to Marian, though the stranger seems to be most wrapped up in the camp blacksmith's little girl. A girl whom the stranger had deserted one day arrives and the stranger flees. Jack heads a posse in pursuit but the stranger foils the posse by starting a construction train, working on an electric railroad, down the grade toward the posse. Just as death is about to overtake the posse, the blacksmith's child wanders out upon the track and the stranger, to save the child's life, pulls down the trolley wire, though the deed costs him his life. Winnifred Greenwood, Ed. Coxen, Geo. Fields are featured.

Harold's Toupee—Royal—October 24.—Harold observes that his friend, Teddy, captivates all the girls. Teddy has a luxuriant head of hair, Harold is afflicted with baldness. He buys a bottle of every kind of hair restorer in stock. One of the tonics has an odor which drives the hotel clerk and the pretty girls at the inn to Harold's room to "shoot that skunk." Harold escapes unseen, and buys a toupee. The toupee gets caught in a curtain over his head in a fashionable restaurant, and when he laughs, off it comes. The wind blows it down the street. A scamp runs off with it in Harold's hat and feeds it to a goat. It comes off when he goes in swimming. Finally, he loses his toupee in a brook, but the mishap ends with winning him a girl.

Mr. Cinderella—Thanhouser—October 25.—Jimmy was called Mr. Cinderella because his life was as unhappy as that of the girl in the fairy tale. He lived with his step-mother and two step-brothers. When the county fair came round, Jimmy was made to stay home and chop wood, while they went to the fair. Now Jimmy had a fairy god-father. He pitied Jimmy, so he changed his ragged clothes into a uniform, turned a cigar into an automobile, and Jimmy went to the fair in great shape. There he met the Queen of the Pop-corn Trust and "they lived happily ever after."

millionaire father's stenographer, Madge. Burton, Sr., discharges her. But the young man follows and they are married. By so doing he separates himself from his father altogether. Later, while he is working as a mechanic, his wife is hurt in an accident, and she will be a cripple unless an expensive operation be performed. Desperate, he determines to burglarize his father's house in order to get the needed money. While he is ransacking the library two burglars break into the house. Wallace attacks the thieves, the noise arouses the father, who eraches the scene in time to see the burglars put to flight by his son. When he learns the truth, a reconciliation follows. The operation on Madge is successfully performed the next day.

Country Innocence—Two Reels—Imp October 19.—Winnie and Jim are sweethearts until Graham, a city man, induces the girl to elope to the city with him. The girl returns disgraced. Out of pity for the dying woman Jim marries her, and her child grows up believing Jim her father. Years pass, and Dick Carson, a trapper, falls in love with the beautiful young Winnie. In the meantime Graham has married, and has a son, Edmund, about Winnie's age. They come to the woods to spend the summer, and Edmund sees and admires Winnie. Dick Carson gruffly scolds the girl for receiving the city fellow's attentions, and she resents his interference. Dick takes the matter to the elder Graham, but receives no satisfaction. Finally Edmund and Winnie attempt to elope, but on the way they meet with an accident in which the boy is seriously injured. Winnie limps painfully back to the Graham house where she finds her foster father, Jim, who has just informed Graham of the girl's true identity. While going for a doctor Graham becomes caught in one of the bear traps he has set for Dick. During the night Edmund dies, and in the morning his father's inanimate form is found in the jaws of the monster trap.

The Mistaken Bath House—Sterling —October 19.—Looie has an exciting day at the beach. On the way out he gets in the way of a car, and is carried to the beach on the fender. He is fascinated by one of the female bathers, and decides to kidnap her. He obtains a horse and wagon, hitches the bath house to it, and gallops away. On opening it he discovers that the occupant is his wife. In the meantime the shapely bather has been swept out to sea in her bath house. Her lover rescues her, and then whips Looie for insulting the lady. The masher's wife arrives in time to save him, and they make up and return home together.

Vivian's Transformation — Crystal — October 20.—Joe's invitation to Katrina to go to the beach is met with the statement that she has no nice clothes. He suggests a plan and the result is that Katrina looks so stylish that everybody at the beach admires her. In a jealous rage, Joe buys a knife and a bomb and immediately things begin to happen.

The Trey O' Hearts—Twelfth Installment—Two Reels—Gold Seal—October 20.—At the end of the last installment we left Judith taking care of the unconscious Alan. Rose and Barcus, searching for the pair, pass nearby without seeing them. A band of Hop's friends come across his horse, and set out in pursuit of Alan. Trine picks up Marraphat at Mesa, and also takes up Alan's trail. They meet the lynching party and arrange to cover one of the desert's two roads while the roughs cover the other. Trine finds Judith and Alan and the former gets the drop on him, and appropriates his car to escape from Hopi's friends. In the meantime Rose and Barcus have taken possession of a prospector's shack overlooking the pass. By a clever shot the lynchers puncture one of the auto's tires, but its occupants escape anyway when Barcus blocks the pass by dynamiting the mountain side after the machine gets by.

The Nihilists—Nestor—October 20.— Thomas Madison, a prosecuting attorney, becomes a marked man for Russian Nihilists by openly declaring that he is going to concentrate his efforts to rid the city of them. His brother, Frederick, breaks his arm and has it reset by Dr. Petrosky, a prominent Nihilist. The lot of assassinating Thomas Madison falls to Petrosky's step-daughter, Zene. She is shocked on having him pointed out to her because of his great resemblance to Petrosky's patient. On speaking of it to Frederick he informs her that Thomas is his brother. On the day set for the killing she notifies Thomas of his danger. A band of detectives call on Petrosky to arrest him and find him dead, asphyxiated by the fumes of some poisonous fluids he has used in preparing the infernal machine.

The Countless Count—Joker—October 21.—Betty meets Ernie at a select summer resort. Father makes a match for his daughter with a count. To save her, Eddie, Ernie's chum, disguises as Betty for the wedding while Ernie and the intended bride elope. The deception is discovered and Eddie escapes, closely pursued by the count and Father. They are all arrested by some policemen, who discover in the count a criminal wanted by the police.

Secret Service Snitz — Sterling — October 22.—Snitz attempts to capture the moonshiners. He meets a mountain girl and falls in love with her. Her sweetheart discovers his advances, and a fight and chase ensues. The moonshiners follow him and run into the arms of his aids. Snitz is a hero in the fight which ensues, and wins the girl.

Olaf Ericson, Boss—Two Reels—Rex October 22.—Olaf Ericson is lord of all he surveys in the lumber country, until a stranger and his daughter arrive, and Ericson receives a slap in the face from the girl for attempting to dominate over her. This awakes in him a greater admiration for her. One day the girl and Al, a lumber-jack, go canoeing. The boat upsets, and Al selfishly leaves the girl to her fate in his efforts to save himself. Ericson happens to witness the accident, and saves her. A secret service officer visits the camp in search of two criminals, a man and his daughter, who have been reported to be in the vicinity. Ericson recognizes the strangers by the man's description, but denies knowing them. The detective and the stranger come upon each other in the woods, and a pistol duel results in which both are killed. The girl bares their past to Ericson, telling him they visited the mountain country in hopes of starting anew, away from the city's temptations. The boss declares his love, and finds that it is returned. A happy marriage results.

Suspended Sentence—Powers—October 23.—Mrs. Harrison sends her baby boy to bed supperless for being mischievous, and dreams that the child runs away. While hunting for him she meets two other women on a similar errand. They come to Baby-Dreamland, are arrested and sentenced to prison for "exercising tyrannical authority" by Judge Baby Harrison. She is happy on awakening to find her little boy sleeping peacefully.

Cupid Pulls a Tooth — Nestor — October 24.—While extracting Alice Sterling's tooth the dentist, John Carter, becomes interested in her and obtains permission to call. Father objects to him, and incurs his hatred by kicking him out. Shortly afterwards one of father's teeth begins to ache, and he calls on Carter's chum to have it pulled. Carter is visiting the dentist at the time, and after getting the old man securely tied in the chair, tells him that he is going to have either all of his teeth or his daughter. Father gives up his daughter.

When Their Wives Joined the Regiment—Joker—October 24.—Mrs. Groan and Mrs. Grundy are suffragettes, and spend their time campaigning while their husbands do the house work. The latter are officers in the militia, and are one day called for duty. Disguised as men their wives join their regiment. The husbands discover their identity, and put them through a series of back-breaking exercises. They protest and are forced to cook and wash dishes as punishment. They admit that their place is at home, and are overjoyed to be allowed to return to their housework.

The Mysterious Hand—Three Reel Bison—October 24.—One of "My Lady Raffles" series. Detective Kelly has two crooks almost in his grasp, but is thwarted in his plans to capture them by a girl employed in the boarding house. Five years later finds the girl and the two crooks occupying a magnificent suite of roms, the girl being known as "My Lady Raffles." Kelly is assigned the task of guarding the gifts at a fashionable wedding. One of the presents is a cedar chest. After the party, Kelly, sitting alone in the darkened gift-room, sees the chest lid raise and a hand reach out to grasp the most valuable of the gifts. He attempts to capture the hand's owner, but the crook escapes. He learns that it is the same girl who frustrated his plans some years before. He visits their apartment and catches her off guard. On the pretense of getting dressed before accompanying Kelly to the station the girl escapes through a secret panel and, from an auto, waves an exasperating good-bye to the furious detective.

Smallpox on the Circle U—Eclair—October 25.—Texas Bill attempts to win Jean Marlow by eliminating everybody else from the contest. This he accomplishes by coaxing a new doctor, Dr. Kent, into declaring Won Lung a victim of smallpox and quarantining all of the cowboys except himself. The doctor does his part before meeting Jean. They are old sweethearts. They renew their engagement. The cowboys learn of the trick played on them and vent their wrath on Texas Bill, the disappointed suitor.

The Bride of Marblehead—Two Reels—Victor—October 25.—Nathan, a young fisherman, becomes captain of Jasper's boat, and starts on a long cruise. A short time after leaving port his crew mutinies, and throws him into the sea. He is rescued by a passing ship, but is unable to make his way back to his home for more than a year. In the meantime Jasper attempts to win over Nathan's sweetheart, Nancy, and finally succeeds in obtaining her promise of m marriage. Shortly afterward Jasper meets an unkempt, ragged person whom he recognizes as the "dead" Nathan. Knowing that his meeting with Nancy would end his hopes of marrying the girl Jasper plans a diabolical way of ridding himself of this obstruction. He arranges a night meeting between the former lovers, telling Nancy that the man she is to meet is the same one that is responsible for Nathan's death. Believing this, Nancy kills the man. She learns his identity and wreaks vengeance on Jasper.

The Little Blonde Lady—Rex—October 25.—A girl's older sister is engaged to a man whom she does not love and who, to the younger sister, appears as an ideal lover. When the man fails in business the big sister casts him aside, but when he returns, wealthy, she greets him with open arms. The little sister, hoping that the man will love her, arrays herself in "grown-up" clothes. On seeing her he realizes that it is she that he has loved all the time and despite the protests from the older sister he proposes to "the little blonde lady" and she finds great happiness in accepting him. The older sister realizes too late that she has failed to recognize the true worth of the love she spurned and finds herself sad and alone on her sister's wedding day.

Feature Programs

Alco

The Ragged Earl—Popular Plays and Players—(Five Reels)—October 12. Andrew Mack, makes his screen debut in one of his favorite rolls of the legitimate stage, ably assisted by Ormi Hawley. Mack, as the ragged earl, has frequent brawls of one kind and another with various personages in the story and comes out victorious in all. When the earl is informed that he is penniless and that he must marry his wealthy cousin, interesting events develop, for Hardcastle, a neighbor, is in the same financial crisis and hits upon marriage as a solution. Splendid settings and good photography makes the picture worth while. C. R. C.

Alliance

At the Old Cross Roads—Select—(Five Reels)—October 19.—Parepa Van Doza, a former slave, seeks employment in the home of Reverend Thornton, whose son, Dayton, in a drunken brawl, kills James Martin and seeks safety in the hills. He sends for Parepa, but later, tiring of her, drives her from their cabin. Passing a church, she enters and confesses to Reverend Thornton, who forces Dayton to return and marry Parepa, after which the couple go North. Eighteen years later, Dayton returns with daughter Anabelle and a quarrel is about to develop between Dayton and Tom Martin, son of James, but Tom's love affair with Dayton's daughter prevents. Later Dayton makes known to his daughter that she is the child of Parepa, a colored woman, and Parepa, in revenge, kills Dayton. At her trial for murder, it is proven that she is white and of Spanish origin. See review on another page of this issue.

The Path Forbidden—Excelsior—(Five Parts)—October 19.—A double exposure story in which Octavie Handworth is featured. She appears in the role of a mother and her two daughters. This is the first release of the Excelsior Company and a complete review will be found on another page in this issue.

Eclectic

The Perils of Pauline—Eclectic—(Fifteenth Episode—Two Reels)—Pauline, owner of a new auto, decides to enter a race, though Harry objects. Owen and Balthazar engage Ferrar as a tool, and engage Harry in a duel. Harry foils Ferrar's plan to injure him with a poisoned sword and wins the duel. Balthazer then attempts to kill both Harry and Pauline in the race by spreading sharp metal pieces across the track, in the hopes of puncturing the tires of their car, but Pauline and her lover manage to escape, while Balthazar is pursued by the maddened crowd. See review page 525, issue of October 17.

The Count that Took the Count—Eclectic.—Count de Bloomer, in search of an heiress, reaches town and Henry Newrich lays plans to have the count marry his daughter, though the girl is loved by Harry Smith, to whom her father objects. The count meets Mike Sullivan, drunk, and hands him his card. This leads to Mike being mistaken for the count and entertained by Newrich. The supposed count's action thoroughly disgusts Newrich and eventually he gives his consent to Smith's marriage with his daughter.

The Warning—Eclectic (three reels).—Lester Goodrich, son of a minister, leads a fast life and is taken home from saloon by his father with his father's lecture strongly impressed on his mind. The boy dreams that he robs his home, goes to a gambling resort and narrowly escapes arrest and that he later throws his sweetheart in a park lagoon and drowns her, when she refuses his embraces and later kills one of his pursuers, for which he is brought to trial and sentenced to prison. When he awakens from the awful dream he promises his parents to mend his erring ways. See review, page 526, issue October 17.

The Ticket of Leave Man—Eclectic—(Three Reels).—Allen Bencroft's father plans to retire from business, leaving all to his son. The latter much worried over his debts, forges a note for two thousand pounds in the name of his chum, Livingstone. Bencroft reports the forgery and Livingstone is sent to Australia for five years since Allen is ill with brain fever and unable to testify. Years later Allen visits Australia and falls in love with Helen Girard, daughter of the Governor of the penal colony. In a runaway Helen is rescued by Livingstone, but Allen claims to be the hero when she recovers consciousness. Later, Livingstone again rescues Helen and again Allen claims to be the hero. Allen back in London attempts to recoup his losses and stock by scuttling the ship on which Helen and Livingstone are passengers. The vessel goes down, but Livingstone saves Helen and is able to prove Allen's guilt and eventually wins the girl's love. See review on page 549, this issue.

Colonel Heeza Liar—Naturalist—Eclectic.—One of the J. R. Bray cartoons in which the colonel mistakes an elephant for another object with disastrous results and which ends in a chase in which the colonel is used as a tennis ball in a game between the elephant and a mountaingoat.

Katzura River—Picturesque Japan—Eclectic (natural color).—On same reel with Colonel Heeza Liar—Naturalist, superb views of Katzura, a beautiful river in Japan, splendidly colored.

Miss Cinderella — Eclectic. — Ben Chambers, an eligible young man, is guest at Mrs. Chauncey's house party. Two old maid daughters seek his hand, but Chambers meets the third sister, whose beauty the others have sought to hide, and falls in love with her. While fishing, he catches her dainty shoe on his hook and later seeking the owner, finds his Cinderella. See review, page 526, issue October 17.

General Special

The Red Cross Nurse—Columbus—(Three Reels)—October 19.—Yvette Breuil, an orphan, receives a legacy and takes up aviation at a school, where she meets and becomes engaged to Serge Danilоff, son of a commanding officer of the Servian army. Serge's father objects to the engagement and orders his son home. As Servia is to fight Turkey, Yvette joins the Red Cross and goes to the front. Pietro, General Daniloff's servant, is a Turkish spy and leaves with the Servian army's plans, to inform his Turkish master, but en route is shot and taken to the Red Cross hospital where Yvette attends him, finding the servian plans and documents which prove Pietro a spy. She attempts to reach the Servian lines, but is captured by the Turks and imprisoned. Escaping in a Turkish uniform, Yvette makes away with an aeroplane and flies to General Daniloff, who, appreciating the service she has done his country, consents to a marriage with Serge.

Paramount

Hypocrites—Bosworth—(Four Parts)—October 19.—A modern play with Lois Weber featured. The characters are seen in the prologue as monks and nuns, and then brought up to the present time with modern settings and twentieth century people. Gabriel, a monk, tries to perfect an image of Truth. When the statue is unveiled by the Abbot, Truth is discovered to be naked and the people rush upon Gabriel and kill him. Only two people can look upon Truth unclinching—a child and the woman who loves Gabriel. In the modern part of the story, Gabriel is a Minister and finds his congregation bored by his denunciation of hypocricy. The story of the prologue is repeated in modern times. Not only double and triple exposures, but even sextuple exposures makes the picture remarkable.

Scene from Famous Players "Wildflower."

The Million Dollar Mystery—Thanhouser—(Two Reels)—Episode 18. A complete review of this film will be found on page 567 of this issue.

Warners

The Drift—Warner's—(Three Reels). A Marion Leonard picture with its society settings. John Evans and Thomas Barnes, young bankers, room together. Evans steals from the bank and Barnes borrows of him and loses at a whist party. Later learning that Evans stole the money, Barnes goes to Marion Harley, daughter of his hostess and asks that his whist losses be returned. Marion, however, notifies the police and Barnes is convicted. A year later Marion meets Evans, falls in love with and marries him, but later learns her husband is the thief for whose crime Barnes is serving time. Though it nearly breaks her heart, Marion notifies the police, has her husband imprisoned and Barnes released. C. R. C.

World

The Mystery of Edwin Drood—Schubert—(Five Reels)—October 10.—Edwin Drood and Rosa Budd are engaged, not for love, but through an arrangement made by their parents. John Jasper, uncle of Edwin, unknown to the latter, loves Rosa. His passion for her drives him to the use of opium. Neville Landless also loves Rosa and following the disappearance of Edwin, after a quarrel in Jasper's home, Jasper casts suspicion upon Neville, who is arrested. One day Neville's sister, Helena, disappears and later a stranger, under the name of Mr. Datchery, appears and takes rooms near Jasper. A woman in black, who keeps a London opium den patronized by Jasper, also appears. It was at this point that Charles Dickens' death ended the story, but Mr. Terriss who wrote the film version has cleverly solved the mystery.

Miscellaneous

The Road to Yesterday—Biograph—Klaw & Erlanger—(Three Parts)—Elspeth, a romantic Miss of today, finds herself transported on the road to yesterday where she is transformed into Lady Elizabeth. All her modern acquaintances appearing under ancient names and i ancient dress. It is not until the end that she discovers the original of Reformado Jack, the lover of yesterday to be Greatorex the man she loves today.

The Press Agent Says—

That Marguerite Snow, in the titular role of "Zudora," the New Thanhouser-Mutual serial, is wearing clothing that totals up to $17,000. And the world has proclaimed "Peggy" the best dressed woman in pictures.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors. Synopses of current films are not printed in MOTOGRAPHY as they may be obtained of the manufacturers.

The Old Fogey

A 3-part American drama made by Pathé. Say, do you ever think of that golden well-loved day in the long ago when you went down the dusty road all bordered with white and yellow daisies, on your arm a fair young girl in pink, and your goal the great white tents of the circus? The air vibrated with the hooting of the calliope and the barkings of the Ballyhoo men, and your heart vibrated in harmony. That's just what the old fogey did in this circus picture but the girl in pink left him to follow a lion tamer and live her life under the "big top". When she came back many exciting things happened. A film that all will enjoy. 1—3—6 sheet posters.

Whiffles Has a Toothache

"Rosemary, That's for Remembrance"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

ADDA GLEASON, Edith Johnson and Earle Fox are the principals in a pretty two-reel love story entitled "Rosemary, That's for Remembrance" which is to be released by the Selig Polyscope Company on Monday, November 2. The little tale is splendidly told and flows smoothly along to a happy ending. While there is nothing spectacular or sensational in the entire two reels, it is sweet and clean, acted with perfect naturalness throughout, and should prove an excellent offering for an audience of any sort.

Earle Fox makes a typical college boy of Harvey Greerson, Adda Gleason is the bashful mountain miss who learns to adore her college hero, while Edith Johnson appears as a beautiful society bud. The remainder of the cast is fully capable of performing the work required and the stage settings are realistic and convincing.

Dorinda, a bashful mountain girl, left alone by the death of her parents, comes to the Greersons to live, though Mrs. Greerson is at first reluctant to have the girl make her home with her, for all her love and affection is being lavished upon Harvey, her only son, a senior at Princeton.

Dorinda, however, proves so likeable and sweet that the Greersons never regret giving her a home, and upon the return of Harvey from college the two young people find much to admire in one another. One day Harvey surprises Dorinda in the garden arranging some flowers and, noting a sprig of rosemary in her hand, he asks her if she knows what it signifies. When she replies in the negative, Harvey hastens to point out to her in a volume of Shakespeare Ophelia's line in "Hamlet" reading "There's rosemary, that's for remembrance, pray, love, remember," which makes a profound impression on Dorinda.

Just as a love affair between Harvey and Dorinda seems certain, the former is called to Washington by a college friend, who offers him the position of attaché at one of the legations. His preparations to leave cause Dorinda much sorrow and, unable to bear saying a verbal good-bye, Dorinda writes him a farewell note which she tucks under his door, and then leaves for the home of a friend. Harvey, finding the note and realizing how he is going to miss Dorinda, plucks a sprig of rosemary, which he plants in a small flowerpot and leaves just outside her door. Returning Dorinda finds the rosemary and understands its meaning.

In Washington, Harvey beholds a beautiful unknown at the Embassy Ball and, though she coyly encourages his attentions, he is unable to obtain an introduction to her. However, all thoughts of Dorinda have fled from his mind and from then on all his attention is directed toward the beautiful society belle.

Returning home for a week-end visit, Harvey clearly shows Dorinda that he has ceased to care for her and the little maid's heart is well nigh broken. Her humiliation is still greater, however, when, on Sunday, after church, Harvey encounters his Washington society girl with the Pryors, who prove to be aristocratic relatives of hers, with whom she is visiting. Through the Pryors Harvey obtains an introduction to her and learns that her name is Margaret Snow. Joyously he accepts an invitation to attend a reception given for her by the Pryors. The night of the reception Dorinda steals over to a window of the Pryor home, and through it beholds Harvey's proposal to Margaret. Overcome with sorrow she steals away.

A few days later, Margaret, sketching on a hillside, beholds a picturesque old man, drinking from an old fashioned well. Harvey, appearing at the moment, she asks him if he knows the old man and is amazed to have him reply that it is his father. Instantly her affection for him becomes lukewarm, for aristocratic Margaret does not fancy the prospect of such plebian relatives. Harvey then begins to appreciate her shallowness.

Later, when one of the Pryor children becomes seriously ill, and Margaret, who has been left alone with them, is frightened, Harvey receives a note asking him to get a doctor in a hurry. Encountering Dorinda at that moment, Harvey shows her the note and asks her to go to Margaret and do what she can, while he hurries after a physician. Reluctantly Dorinda consents, and on the way to the Pryors is thrown from her horse and rendered unconscious.

Harvey and the doctor find the unconscious girl in the roadway and take her into the Pryor home where she is revived. Dorinda's suffering touches Harvey's heart and he at last realizes that it is she and not Margaret whom he really loves. Margaret quickly understands the situation and, joining the hands of the two young people, she steals silently away.

On the end of the second reel is a short Doc Yak Seligette in which Doc has some exciting times with the neighborhood cats. The cartoon comedy is fully up to the laughable standard set by Sidney Smith, the creator of Doc Yak.

Frances Nelson, former Biograph leading woman has joined Universal and will play leads with the Victor company, opposite Ben Wilson.

The Mysticism of "Zudora"

"The Mystic Message of the Spotted Collar," the title of the first episode of "Zudora," gives an intimation of the mysticism of the forthcoming Thanhouser serial. Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman, the creator of this photoplay has woven into the plot every possible bit of imagery, and his characters bear the imprint of the master craftsman who shaped them. The vision in the secret chamber where Hassam Ali, portrayed by James Cruze, sees in the scented smoke from an incense-filled brazier, those events in his past life which bear directly upon his present wicked activities, offers a splendid insight into this weird oriental character and shows plainly Hassam Ali's all-devouring greed for Zudora's inheritance.

Then when Zudora, played by Miss Marguerite Snow, the Countess Olga, of "The Million Dollar Mystery," enters, and with a charming Cinderella innocence lays her hand upon Hassam Ali's shoulder, the contrasting emotions—the girl—the designing fakir-uncle; presents a situation of dramatic intensity seldom shown upon the screen.

The girl smiles up into Hassam Ali's face and he returns the smile, but when her glance is elsewhere, the anxiety, the infernal lust for Zudora's wealth, effaces his gentle smile and the real Hassam Ali beams in feverish glare upon the girl marked for his victim.

There is a letter which figures in Zudora, the appearance of which upon the screen, must be that of an aged document. Director Frederick Sullivan searched New York City for paper of the required size, quality and age. He was unsuccessful. Finally he obtained the back portion of a will, filed in the Delaware county courthouse in 1876 by an early settler whose property reverted to the county because of a felony committed.

This paper was just what Director Sullivan desired and it is upon this almost historic paper that the letter was written.

"The Master of the House"

Preparations on a scale not commonly attempted are being made for the production of Thomas H. Ince and C. Gardner Sullivan's powerful drama of modern society life, "The Master of the House," at the New York-Mutual studios at Santa Monica, Cal.

Mr. Ince regards the story as one of the best of its kind he ever has written, and has instructed his staff to leave no stone unturned in their efforts to produce a winner. Unusual opportunity is afforded by the story for exceptionally brilliant settings. The action of the piece lies in the homes of the rich, and for this reason pretentious equipment is required. Drawing rooms, ball rooms, dining halls and magnificent exterior backgrounds are being arranged with skill and the entire production promises to create a sensation.

Richard Stanton is assuming the title role and directing the production. He is capably assisted by Rhea Mitchell, Gertrude Claire, Ida Lewis and Arthur Maude. The latter two have been engaged especially for the piece. Mr. Maude is the well known English actor and kinsman of Cyril Maude, while Miss Lewis has appeared in a number of prominent Broadway successes. "The Master of the House" is to be released in the Mutual program.

"Sanford Quest, Criminologist" is being produced by Otis Turner at the Universal, featuring Anna Little.

Alice Joyce.

"STAY just where you are!" Keenan Buel directed his company and then sat down upon an inverted camera-box to wait for the sun to come from behind six or more clouds.

So the woman's club at attention on the Kalem out-of-door stage at Cliffside, N. J., remained so and Mr. Burgess and another man who were of the picture but not that scene, passed away the time in respective employments; Mr. Burgess by practicing a double shuffle with one foot and the other man by meditatively walking the length of the platform and flapping the tails of his afternoon coat at each turn.

Still the clouds remained; still Director Buel telepathed them to move on; still Mr. Burgess shuffled and still the other man meditated and flapped.

"That's all for today," he of the camera-box finally and wearily announced, and the stage emptied. Alice Joyce was the last one to leave. Mr. Buel commended us to each other and we went up into the big house which is owned by George Laird, the man who about sixty years ago invented the "Bloom of Youth" complexion beautifier, and who is responsible for various warnings posted about the studio grounds, one of which reads, "$5 Reward for the Arrest or Conviction of the Thief Who Is Caught Stealing This Fence."

Part of the big house is given over to the Kalem Company for dressing and dining rooms. Miss Joyce's dressing-room is on the second floor and we had just reached it when the sun came from behind the clouds and shone brightly. "Maybe they'll want you now," I suggested as I sat down in the portion of the big rocker that did not sag.

"No, not now," Miss Joyce returned, slipping into a blue crepe kimona and applying cold cream to her make-up, which promptly and obligingly came off on the end of a towel. Then she applied some powder from a red satin, heart-shaped box and began to brush out her hair. Between strokes she said she would be glad to get back into New York to live, that it was getting too cool for comfort at the open-air studio and that she liked even better to be with the company that goes to Florida for the winter.

"It has been nice out here for the summer, but in the fall one wants to be right in New York; there is everything one wants in New York." She paused while she twisted her hair into a rope, made a figure eight of it and settled it down nicely on top of her head. "But my best reason is that I have just bought a new car and have to leave it in a garage in Manhattan every night and then ferry over here. And that's inconvenient." She deftly slipped bone hairpins into the pile of soft brown hair, tucked an extra pin into it at the back and the result was a becomingly simple coiffure.

"So often," I remarked from the portion of the big rocker that did not sag, "your hair looks as though it had only about three pins in it."

"And often it only has about three in it," she replied, debating in front of her wardrobe as to what she should wear.

"But always its arrangement is artistic," I finished, and then we talked about clothes—Miss Joyce's clothes—and she brought out several gowns that she made herself.

"These are just 'camera clothes' because I only wear them in pictures," she explained, producing a dress that looked like silk but that was crepe. "I get an expensive pattern, but inexpensive material, and I choose something that I'm sure will photograph well. Then, in a short scene, a kind of a 'fill up' scene, I wear one of these dresses and in a longer scene I wear really good clothes. But now that I have experimented," she went on, hanging away the several dresses, which were tributes to her industry during waits between scenes, "now that I know I can sew, I'm going to try making something really nice."

Taking a tailored blue suit from the wardrobe, she reflected upon it, at arm's length, and then decided it would do. She examined the effect of a turquoise blue vest showing beneath the navy blue coat, decided also that it would do and while she donned this costume talked about her work both before and since she became a Kalem star.

"I've worked since I was thirteen," she began with the first hook on the turquoise blue vest. "I was born in Missouri but lived in the South—the South was my father's home and the West my mother's. Then my mother and brother and myself came East and I went to work as a switchboard operator in a hotel. And there's where my chance to do modeling came to me."

She paused to decide between the choice of a black or blue velvet tie for the top of the vest that was a turquoise shade, and selecting the blue, she continued:

"An artist who used to come often to the hotel asked me to pose for a head he was doing one day, and that was the first of many sittings. I did that entirely for a while and worked for many artists. C. D. Williams was the one I have known the longest; I frequently meet him and his wife and it seems a long time since the days I worked by appointment in the different studios. I used to meet Florence La-Badie often then; she was doing the same kind of work I was, modeling for front cover designs, mostly. And Gertrude McCoy was one of us, too.

"After that I did photographic modeling, fashion plates and posing for shampoo ads because there was more money in it. Then a friend suggested my trying motion pictures. I came to the Kalem Company on trial and this is my fourth year with them. Until last winter I worked in New York, but last year I went to Jacksonville, Florida, and was there for months, and this winter I hope to do the same.

"And Mr. Moore? You don't play together now, do you?" I asked, thinking how well a coral touch would become the black hat with the gray feather she was tacking on it.

"No, right after we were married he was made a director and has his own company in New York. I suppose I could work with him if I requested to," she added, viewing the effect of the dull blue ribbon she had knotted at the base of the gray feather. "I don't like that," she commented, discarding the blue ribbon.

"Coral would be beautiful there," I suggested from the rocker that was deep and that now sagged on one side.

"I run to one color at a time," offered Miss Joyce as she looked through a box of ribbons and bright beads. "Just now it's blue; I've worn blue things for days and I have no idea what color it'll be next. Sometimes it's brown or black—I wonder how this would do?" holding up a string of coral beads. They "did" beautifully across the soft gray feather

"You were talking about Mr. Moore's directing," I reminded her when the beads had been securely placed.

"Yes," she resumed, "I suppose I could play opposite him again but I think it better for us to be in separate companies. I believe that married people make the mistake of being together too much; were I in his company I might want things one way and he another. We might hurt each others work that way. Besides, we would have nothing new to talk about in the evening. So I think it better the way things are."

The hat with the feather and the coral touch was wonderfully becoming and we started out for the ferry that would bring us to Forty-second street, New York. Miss Joyce talked of her mother, who is at Asbury Park, and of her brother, who is dancing at New York theaters, and she told of her marriage to Tom Moore last spring. And as she talked patrons of the ferry and the Forty-second street car discovered in her the person they had seen many times on the screen.

"We had been chums for more than a year"—she referred to Tom Moore—"then we had a quarrel and didn't speak for months. It was while we were in Jacksonville that we made up and one night in a restaurant, decided we would get married. We left the table and when we came back after the ceremony it was just as we had left it, so we had our wedding supper there. Arthur Houseman of the Edison Company was with us and we had a jolly party."

The car stopped at Broadway and we elevatored to the tenth floor of the corner building. There, in the room of the green rug, Alice Joyce selected the spot whereon her picture is to hang, and when seven o'clock came round she left to keep her seven-fifteen appointment with Mr. Moore.

"The Butterfly" Is Next

The World Film Corporation announces that Clara Kimball Young's second feature film is to be based on Henry Kitchell Webster's story, "The Butterfly," which is one of the most popular of the current works of fiction. It enjoyed great popularity when it appeared as a serial story in the Saturday Evening Post. Clara Kimball Young is finishing the work on "Lola," the Owen Davis story, which shows her in a field that is uniquely her own, and one in which her admirers will be glad to see her. In "Lola," James Young appears, as well as Ola Humphreys, the famous dramatic star who has just returned from a prolonged tour of Australia, where she has appeared as a star. It is planned to release "The Butterfly" in December.

"Three Weeks"

B. S. Moss, president of the Reliable Feature Films Corporation, 701 Seventh avenue, New York City, on Thursday evening, October 8, offered at the Maxine Elliott Theater, New York City, a five reel adaptation of Elinor Glyn's celebrated love drama "Three Weeks" at a private showing to a specially invited audience. The picture was adapted and directed by Perry N. Vekroff, and was so satisfying from the standpoint of photography, acting and stage direction, that already the Reliable Corporation is said to be flooded with rental offers. The action of the story is laid in Veseria in the Balkans and in Lucerne, Switzerland, and follows closely the Glyn novel. Briefly Queen Sonia of Veseria, temporarily exiled from her kingdom, journeys to Lucerne and there encounters Paul Verdayne, who immediately falls in love with her. By chance Sonia discovers that Paul is the exiled crown price of Veseria, who disappeared some twenty years before. Sonia then yields to Paul's love-making and is even spurred on by a desire to give Veseria an heir to the throne of whom the country shall later be proud. News that the king is dying sends Sonia hurriedly back to Veseria with her child, and results in Sonia being killed by the dying monarch, who hopes to end the succession to the throne by her death. In the epilogue of the picture we see Paul, years later, at the cathedral where he obtains his first glimpse of the child king. When the cathedral is cleared of its worshippers Paul comes from behind a pillar, kneels before the altar and prays for the welfare of the young king.

Mrs. Laemmle and Children Safe

President Carl Laemmle of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, received a telegram from Rotterdam which informs him that Maurice Fleckles has succeeded in obtaining the release of Mrs. Laemmle, Mrs. Fleckles and the two Laemmle children, Julius and Rosabelle, who have been detained in Germany since the beginning of hostilities. This greatly relieves the tension, inasmuch as nothing had been heard from them for over a month. The party sailed from Rotterdam October 15, and will arrive in New York the twenty-fourth, on the Holland-American liner, Rotterdam.

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw in Lubin Feature

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

EVELYN Nesbit Thaw makes her debut as a motion picture actress in "Threads of Destiny," a five reel Lubin masterpiece produced by Joseph W. Smiley, by arrangement with Fred Mace, after a scenario by William H. Clifford. Supporting Mrs. Thaw are a number of the talented Lubin players and Mrs. Thaw's little son, Russell William Thaw, has a small part.

The story is a race drama showing the persecution of the Jews in Russia and is well told, splendidly photographed and capably acted. Undoubtedly the exhibitors of the country will find "Threads of Destiny" a great drawing card, despite the fact that the exhibitors in Chicago territory will have to present a more or less expurgated version of the story, on account of [illegible] by the celebrated Major Funkhouser's censorship board. Some of the "cutouts" made in the picture by the Chicago censors are most drastic and uncalled for. In certain instances the elimination of sub-titles is going to confuse audiences who view the picture, as the cause for some of the action, clearly told in the original subtitles, will now be more or less obscured by the changes which the censors demanded. However, enough of the film remains so that the story will "get over" and, on account of the publicity which has been given to the featured member of the cast, will undoubtedly pack every theater in which the feature is exhibited.

Miriam escapes, following the uprising of the Jews.

As a screen star Mrs. Thaw shows real dramatic ability and in several of the scenes rises to great emotional heights. Joseph Smiley has the "heavy" role and makes of Ivan Rusek, the chief of the Russian secret police, a vivid character, whose tragic end seems well deserved. The stage settings are carefully chosen and the scenes laid in Russia are convincing beyond all question.

The story begins with the death of old Isaac Grunstein, a Jew who has been exiled to Siberia. On his death bed, Isaac sends a message to his daughter Miriam (Mrs. Thaw) by Rachel Shapiro, who shares his exile, warning her against Ivan Rusek, the chief of the Russian secret police, who has made himself the self appointed guardian of Miriam, with whom he is known to have fallen deeply in love.

Rachel delivers her note to the old rug dealer.

An opportunity offering itself, Rachel escapes with Alexis, her lover, and starts to make her way to the seacoast, where she can embark for America, the land of the free. Alexis and Rachel encounter many perils on the road but finally reach the province of Kunda, over which Ivan Rusek reigns with a hand of iron, just at the time when Miriam returns from the convent in which she had been placed by her self appointed guardian.

Miriam, at first awed by the magnificence of the Rusek residence and the stern dignity of its owner, gradually finds herself falling under the spell of the man who has provided for her education and who now offers her a luxurious home. One day, however, Ivan attempts to force his caresses upon the girl and Miriam awakes to his real character. She struggles against his advances but is overpowered and locked up in her own boudoir.

Just at this time Rachel appears and manages to convey to Miriam the note which old Isaac has entrusted to her. When Miriam learns that Ivan is the very man who caused her father to be transported to Siberia, and that his reputation as a roué extends all over Russia, she positively loathes him and welcomes the uprising of the Jews of the neighborhood, which results in the defeat of Ivan's Cossack guardians and her own release from his home.

Years later, we behold Miriam on a ranch in Arizona, the wife of Feodor Tomsky, a thrifty young Russian, and the happy mother of a little boy (William Thaw) while as neighbors she has a whole colony of Russian settlers, chief among whom is Alexis, the lover of Rachel. Rachel herself is now the friend and companion of Miriam. Life on the Arizona ranch moves smoothly along and all are learning real happiness for the first time in their lives, when Feodor receives a note from his cousin in Russia, announcing that he is to visit Arizona on a mission for the Czar. The note is signed Ivan Rusek, but asks that Feodor will permit him to appear incognito while on his visit.

Miriam is amazed and horrified when she beholds in Feodor's cousin the hated Rusek, and all her fears prove well grounded when, a day or two later. Ivan tells her that he will reveal her whole past to Feodor, unless she consents to depart with him. Terrified, Miriam consults with Rachel and the latter hastens to warn Alexis of the presence of the much hated Rusek. When Feodor is compelled to spend a day in the distant town, Ivan takes advantage of his absence to insist upon Miriam meeting him that night in a lonely cabin at some distance from the ranch. By means of a forged note Alexis postpones the meeting time and after consultation with other Russians in the colony has a bomb planted in the lonely cabin. Ivan goes to keep his appointment and is blown to atoms when the bomb explodes, thus releasing Miriam forever from fear of his further attentions.

"The Million Dollar Mystery"

Some splendid water scenes make episode nineteen of "The Million Dollar Mystery" one of the most interesting of the Thanhouser series. The entire cast, near the close of the second reel, plunge overboard from boats, launches or other craft, and it becomes well nigh a submarine drama, though, ere the picture ends, the hero and heroine are once more on terra firma and the villainous conspirators are still "in the drink."

Shep, the Thanhouser dog, really is entitled to a place among the principals in this episode, for he performs like a real star, and undoubtedly does much to add to the interest of this particular portion of the fascinating serial.

Florence Gray, seeking her dog, chances upon a spot in the woods, where she beholds Countess Olga rolling aside a heavy boulder and entering a subterranean passage. Her curiosity aroused, she follows Olga, and manages to conceal herself in a niche of an underground cave, where the conspirators are meeting.

After the various members of the band have assembled, Florence learns that Braine possesses a paper which will relieve millionaire Hargreave of further persecution, and she craftily manages to procure the document without Braine's knowledge.

After the meeting has broken up, Braine and the conspirators depart and Florence conceals the priceless paper in her hair, doffs the riding boots she is wearing, and plunges into an underground stream which she hopes may lead her to open air and freedom. Jimmy Norton, meanwhile, has been seeking Florence, accompanied by Shep, her collie, and is led up to a big stone which guards the entrance of the subterranean meeting place, but, though Shep barks loudly at the entrance and endeavors to make Norton investigate farther, the latter cannot believe the dog is on the right scent, and so passes on.

Braine, at last, discovers that he no longer has the paper, and returns to the cave to seek it. There he discovers Florence's discarded riding boots, and immediately suspicions that she has the paper, and has escaped by way of the underground stream. Entering a row boat he paddles along the perilous channel and emerges at last into the harbor, where he beholds Florence gamely swimming for shore. Overtaking her, he drags her aboard his boat and prepares to carry her to one of the conspirators' dens. Jimmy, however, has seen the struggle from the shore and plunges in, to swim out and rescue Florence, followed by Shep. Further complications are added when others of the conspirator's band board a fast launch and mingle in the fray. In the scuffle aboard Braine's boat, Braine, Jimmy and several of the conspirators are thrown into the harbor, and in the fight in the water, eventually Jimmy overcomes his opponents, and boarding a launch with Florence sets out for shore, leaving the conspirators to rescue themselves as best they can.

Prizes Awarded

The judges in the comedy scenario prize contest conducted by the New York Morning Telegraph and Chartered Theaters Corporation have awarded the three prizes as follows:

First Prize—Roy L. McCardell of New Rochelle, N. Y., for three-reel comedy, entitled " A Jay in Peacock Alley."

Second Prize—Miss Elaine Sterne of New York City, for three-reel comedy, entitled "Without Hope."

Third Prize—Miss Caroline Benbrooke Wells of St. Louis, Mo., for three-reel comedy, entitled "A Puritan's Conscience."

The contest was inaugurated on June 15 and closed September 15 of this year. During the three months 3,654 manuscripts were received. But 511 of this number stood the test of the first reading. From the remainder it is probable that fifty high-class motion picture comedies will be retained as worthy of production.

The comedies submitted in the contest were subjected to the most critical reading and the prize winners were only decided after more than a score of expert scenario readers and writers had passed upon their merits in conjunction with the judges. The three comedies awarded the prizes of $1,000, $500 and $250 respectively are certain to endure in motion picture presentation because of their originality, dramatic and picturization values.

Julius Caesar Next

The George Kleine offices announce that "Julius Caesar," the mammoth six-part spectacle which required eighteen months to complete and the services of nearly 20,000 people, will be ready for booking through the various Kleine branch offices on or about November 10. Advance reports hail "Julius Caesar" as the greatest of the Roman cycle headed by "Quo Vadis." The big subject is correct historically and quite the most pretentious from an educational standpoint, ever produced.

"Sir Galahad of Twilight"

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

THE American Film Manufacturing Company has again made use of the wonderful scenery which surrounds its California studio in "Sir Galahad of Twilight," a two-part film to be released on October 26. Numerous glimpses of mountain grandeur are given throughout the two reels, but perhaps the most impressive is at the very beginning of the first reel when the camera is pointed out over a chain of the Santa Ynez mountains and one range rises gracefully over another as far as the eye can see.

Such beautiful backgrounds alone are enough to make the film a success but the director has merely used them as a setting for a highly dramatic, heart interest story of the forest in which the character of a primitive trapper stands out above all others as a Sir Galahad of the present day. Harry Von Meter gives an excellent portrayal of this role and is ably assisted by William Garwood and Vivian Rich as the stranger and the trapper's wife. Jack Richardson, Perry Banks and Reaves Eason appear in minor roles, but the entire plot revolves about the three leads.

Jacques and Clotilde.

The climax is led up to carefully and it is not until just before the fade-out that the point of the story is made. The double exposure work is not quite up to the American standard but this fact is unimportant in comparison to the splendid manner in which the entire production has been rounded out.

Old Louis Dorchet and his daughter Clotilde, a girl of the forest, live on Twilight mountain. Jacques Lennaux, a big, honest trapper, has seen Clotilde grow from childhood to womanhood and loves her, but knowing she regards him only as kind of a father he keeps his love a secret.

One day the fiirl finds a picture of Sir Galahad in a deserted camp and knows that the only man she could love would be a man of his type, though she knows nothing of Galahad. Daily she goes to a place on the mountain where she can see the sun set over the distant ranges and upon returning home one evening she finds her father dying of an illness which has long troubled him. His last wish is that Jacques marry her and take care of her always, so the ceremony is performed just before old Louis passes away.

Months pass and Jacques makes a trip to the settlement to sell his furs. Two strangers arrive at Twilight; Dick Kenton and Jim Martin. Martin, a worthless fellow, insults Clotilde but Dick comes to her rescue. Fearing that he will come to blows with his friend Martin leaves their camp and goes to the settlement while Dick escorts the girl to her cabin. She shows him the picture of Galahad and tells him that he reminds her of the knight. Dick tells her the story of Galahad but laughingly denies the likeness.

In the settlement Jacques chastises Pedro, a half-breed, for abusing a horse and, a short time later, when Martin arrives at the saloon and tells of his friend and the girl back on Twilight, the trapper knocks him down. The words of the stranger, however, cause Jacques to return to his cabin at once. Martin hires Pedro to kill the trapper in order to square matters for the blow he received. Back on Twilight Dick falls in love with Clotilde but she tells him she is married and asks him to be noble and go away so that she can always remember him as her Galahad.

Pedro stabs Jacques and leaves him bleeding to death in the mountains. Dick finds him and brings him to the cabin. As the trapper recovers, Dick often calls to see him and Jacques notices the love of the stranger for his wife and, knowing that he stands between them, he conquers his desire to kill the man who saved his life, goes to the spot where Clotilde used to view the sunset and leaps to the rocks below.

Again Dick finds him and Jacques tells him to take Clotilde and be good to her. The girl-wife arrives just as the man who has loved and cared for her passes away and Dick tells her that Jacques, and not he, was her Sir Galahad. When the body of the trapper is laid away in a rough stone covered grave, a cross is erected above it bearing the inscription "To Jacques Lennaux, Sir Galahad of Twilight Mountain."

The cast is as follows:

Jacques Lennaux, the trapper.....Harry Von Meter
Little Clotilde.....Vivian Rich
Old Louis Dorchet, her father.....Perry Banks
Dick, the stranger.....William Garwood
Martin, his partner.....Jack Richardson
Pedro, the half-breed.....Reaves Eason

When You Trip to Bayonne

There are many things to see over at the Centaur plant in Bayonne, N. J. Chester Beecroft can show you many of them but it takes David Horsley himself to show you others of them. There's that new camera he has just tried out and which will fade in and fade out visions and flash-backs at the will of the operator. It is an invention with a big and popular future awaiting it, though Mr. Horsley has not decided to put it on the market; he thinks he will keep it for his own studio and allow its use only in other chosen ones. This camera, which has four speeds and is but a trifle larger than the one in present use is one of the sights that Mr. Horsley can show you. There is a polisher which does one thousand feet in fourteen minutes and there is a filter, also his invention, which is one of the Centaur sights.

And then, there is the Horsley baby, in its rose-ribboned basket in the rose-tinted, rose-lighted room on the second floor of the Horsley new home, which is but a minute's auto ride from the studio. Chester Beecroft was one of the three who tip-toed into the baby-presence in the wake of Mr. Horsley. And he (Mr. Beecroft) held an apologizing hand on the top of his head while the new acquaintance was being made, for the brunette-covering of Master Horsley's head is much more generous than the varying blondeness of Mr. Beecroft's. And truly, Baby Horsley looks like his father. "John," so far, is the name highest in favor with the Horsleys, though among the suggestions sent in for the naming of the baby, were "Pat Powers" and "Carl Laemmle." "Shamrock" was another bright thought and the doubtful reason that accompanied it was "There's nothing too good for the Irish." A two-minutes film was made of master Horsley when he was seven days old.

A return to the studio finds cartoonist Harry Palmer at work, the studio in preparation for a scene, the tinting expert jubilant over a sepia-and-clear-white test and the press department calling for Mr. Beecroft.

Cinema Camera Club's Dance

The Cinema Camera Club made of its invitation party-dance on the night of October 10 a well managed and a pleasant affair. Pabst Coliseum, where the dancing party was held, was gayly decorated in tissue paper streamers of many colors and the lights turned up on the dancers were of many hues. The balcony was divided into boxes and these were representative of the respective film companies. There was a grand march which began at midnight, and had as its head Clara Kimball Young and the new president of the Screen Club, James D. Kirkwood. Miss Young was a gray silken maiden of Hong Kong, she and "Jimmie" Young having chosen this costume in that city two years ago on their around-the-world trip. In her hand Miss Young held a Chinese lantern in which a candle gleamed during the march-figures, in which other lights were momentarily extinguished. Mabel Normand, on from the west on her eastern rest-trip, was one of the marchers and there were many others of screen note, among whom were Edward Earl, Bessie Learn, Hughie Mack, Herbert Brenon, Alec Francis, Jessie Stevens, William Tooker, "Andy" Clark, Sally Crute, Jack Pickford, Mabel Green, Ned Finley, Alice Learn and William Wadsworth. Mary Pickford enjoyed the march from the Famous Player box and afterward joined the dancers. Ad Kessel and C. O. Baumann were in attendance, as also were Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Zukor, Mr. and Mrs. C. Lang Cobb, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Charles Seay, Miss Bessie Bannon and Frank A. Bannon, James A. Young, Joe Varnham, Carl Gregory and David Thompson of the New Rochelle studio, Joe Brandt, Bill Barry, A. Kauffman, Owen and Matt Moore, Fred Mace, Marguerite Leveridge and others. Buttons requesting "Let us have universal peace" was the Universal's contribution to the evening.

The Cinema Club, its officers and committees are respectively credited for the enjoyable evening. They comprise:

Frank G. Kugler, president; Edward Wynard, first vice-president; John C. Arnold, second vice-president; Philip E. Rosen, financial secretary; Harry H. Keepers, corresponding secretary; William C. Marshall, recording secretary; Alfred H. Moses, Jr., treasurer; Eugene Gaudio, sergeant-at-arms.

Albert H. Moses, Jr., was floor manager and Edward Horn and Percy Hilburn acted as assistants.

"The Ordeal" to Be Released

The Life Photo Film Corporation's latest release, "The Ordeal," which has created a storm of discussion in German diplomatic and business circles, is about to be exhibited in New York. The appointment made between Acting Secretary of State Lansing, and Mr. Goldburg, secretary of the Life Photo Film Corporation, for the purpose of having a representative of the government review the picture in Washington, has been postponed until the coming week.

Negotiations are in progress for the sale of the rights to this picture for England and France, a large sum having been offered by a representative of one of the biggest film-producing concerns in London. Mr. Roskam, president of the company, maintains that it is a strong argument for peace, in view of the fact that it shows the horrors of war. In the making of the picture, the company built its own village and streets, including several buildings, which, in the course of the production, were destroyed by fire and shell. The picture will not be released through the ordinary channels in New York, but will be shown in one of the large regular theaters, and run as an independent production, along the same lines as "Cabiria" and other master productions.

Has Initial Showing

Selig's Suffrage Film

ON Wednesday afternoon, October 14, at the Auditorium theater, Chicago had its first glimpse of "Your Girl and Mine," the eight-reel suffrage film which was produced by William N. Selig for Mrs. Medill McCormick and the National American Woman Suffrage Association. The theater was thronged with the elect of the Illinois Equal Suffrage Association and notables in all walks of life, and the picture received round after round of applause as one telling point after another was made.

Olive Wyndham.

Gilson Willetts is responsible for the scenario and Dr. Anna Howard Shaw for the argument. Both have successfully accomplished what was no easy task, for the presentation of "Votes for Women" arguments in celluloid, in such a fashion that an appeal would be made to people of all classes, was a truly gigantic undertaking. Photographically the picture is fully up to the high standard set by the Selig Polyscope Company, some of the examples of double printing, which are used to show the symbolical figure of Equal Suffrage appearing on different occasions, are worthy of note, and the skillfully worded sub-titles help to drive home the suffrage argument.

Olive Wyndham, formerly of the Little Theater, New York, Katherine Kaelred, a featured Broadway star, and Sydney Booth, leading man of "The Yellow Ticket" company, now playing at Powers Theater, Chicago, are among the noted thespians in the cast, but in reality Miss Wyndham, John Charles, who has appeared in the support of Helen Ware and Louis Mann, and Clara Smith, a well known character woman of the picture screen, have the bulk of the big scenes, and are most deserving of praise, for the other players only appear momentarily. Miss Grace Darmond makes a winsome figure of Equal Suffrage and, if all suffragettes were as fair to look upon, it is safe to say "Votes for Women" would be a reality in every state in the Union today.

Katherine Kaelred.

Briefly the story tells of Ben Austin, who marries Rosalind Fairlie, an heiress. After her wedding Mrs. Austin finds that the law compels her to settle her husband's debts, that the law makes her home his, to do with as he likes, that the law permits him to will away his children and place them under the guardianship of his father. Mrs. Austin has an Aunt Jane, who is an ardent suffragist, and eventually the latter induces Mrs. Austin and thousands of her sisters to work for the cause of suffrage, pointing out that that is the only way in which their rights under the law can be protected. The closing scenes of the eight-reel picture show the governor signing the bill which gives votes to women, and Lieutenant Governor Burbank tendering the pen, with which the governor has signed the bill, to Mrs. Austin, now divorced, with the suggestion that it be used to sign their marriage contract. During the action of the film story such problems as child labor, tenement house fire escapes, and an eight hour day for women and children are vividly presented and suffrage cleverly suggested as a remedy for these present day evils.

The picture is in three acts, the first two of three parts each, while but two parts are needed for the third and closing act.

The large audience gathered in the Auditorium was briefly addressed by Mrs. Medill McCormick, Gilson Willetts and Mrs. Grace Wilbur Trout before the picture went on the screen. Mrs. McCormick told briefly the plan for raising money by the showing of the suffrage picture in the states in which suffrage is before the voters this year; Mr. Willetts commented in a few words upon his purpose in writing the scenario, and Mrs. Trout thanked Mrs. McCormick for her work in having the film production made, praised George Tyler for donating the Auditorium for the afternoon, and irritated the nerves of the film people present by referring to the films as "movies," though of the latter fact she is probably blissfully unaware.

Getting War Time Pictures

In securing war time scoops with a motion picture camera the representatives of the Selig-Hearst News Pictorial met with many odd and unusual adventures. S. H. MacKean of the International News Service has supplied a photograph showing the Hearst-Selig auto within the Belgian lines which is reproduced herewith. In this picture J. M. Parker, the cameraman for the News Pictorial, is shown in his automobile, being held up by Belgian peasants who have erected a barrier across the village street to prevent raids by armored motor cars. Mr. Parker is the gentleman with the slouch hat, and the other man with him in the car is a correspondent for the Hearst newspapers.

In the photo on page 594 Belgian soldiers are shown commandeering Mr. Parker's automobile at Louvain. Although relieved of his car, Mr. Parker made some extremely interesting pictures in and about Louvain, both before and after it had been burned by the Germans and the Hearst-Selig weekly claims to have scored a beat on all the other topical picture weeklies with these scenes.

"Beauty" Star in Unconventional Garb

Margarita Fischer, star of the "Beauty" brand of the American Film Manufacturing Company, usually is seen in evening garb or fashionable morning or afternoon attire. She is so very pretty that her personality is associated with the delicate things of life rather than its rigors. But she has a habit of doing the unexpected and doing it so well that one suspects that, after all, it is just what one had expected. Now her pretty pink arms are scratched and her ankles and toes are scarred because Harry Pollard, director of the "Beauty" company, has staged a one-reel picture in which Miss Fischer appears as a child of the rocky waste. Under the name of "Nieda," which gives the play its title, the charming little woman plays opposite Mr. Pollard, with Joseph Harris as an old man of the mountains.

New Film Exchange

With its vaults full of interesting and spectacular features, the Montgomery-Simmons Film Service, Inc., has opened offices at 126 West 46th street, New York City, where it will book the entire output of the Kinetophote Corporation.

The Montgomery-Simmons combination is an interesting one to the motion picture trade in general. George N. Montgomery has been associated closely with the exhibiting and exchange ends of the trade in many places and his knowledge of the trials and tribulations of the exhibitor is broad and comprehensive. Ira H. Simmons has come up in the business with rapid strides, having left the position of booking manager for the World's Film Corporation and the Shubert Film Company to engage in booking activities with Mr. Montgomery. Marcus A. Miller, a man known to all New York filmdom, is vice-president of the concern, while Saul G. Lippman is manager of the New York exchange.

Buys Celluloid Waste

A manufacturing company in England has advised an American consular officer that it purchases from time to time large quantities of celluloid waste, and would be pleased to be put in touch with American firms in a position to supply its requirements. Further information can be obtained by writing Bureau of Manufactures, Washington, D. C., and referring to file number 13,980.

Edison Story of Mixed Identities

Reviewed by Charles Condon

A TWO-REEL adaptation from "The Window that Monsieur Forgot" entitled "A Question of Identity" is to be the Edison release of November 13. The scenario is by Mary Imlay Taylor, and Charles Brabin's fine sense of dramatic poise and artistic settings is evident in the direction and handling of the play.

The action takes place in France and revolves about the mistaken identity problem. Twin brothers are separated in infancy and grow up ignorant of each other's existence. One commits a crime and the other suffers for it, until the connecting link in their lives is furnished in the person of Cardinal Journet who, as a priest, had been present at the deathbed of their mother and learned of her separation from her husband, he taking one of the twins and she the other.

A pretty romance keeps the interest alive and fresh in the story, and its happy conclusion in the couple's marriage after the solving of the identity puzzle. The existence of several well-developed counter-plots leaves the honors of the leading roles to be divided among Mabelle Trunnelle as Lois, the sole witness to De Lousan's murder, and who has the alternative of seeing justice blindly punish an innocent man for the crime, or of convicting her sweetheart; Augustus Phillips in the dual role of Robert and Richard Barrington; Edward Earle as Claude de Brissac, a reckless, but not bad, youth, who is unjustly sentenced on circumstantial evidence; and Carlton King as the charitable Father Journet, later appointed cardinal. Mrs. William Bechtel as de Brissac's mother, and Bessie Learn as his sweetheart, Clarice de Lousan, have exacting, though minor, roles and are seen to advantage in them.

The most stirring scene, probably, is the trial of Claude de Brissac, showing Mr. Earle on the stand vainly attempting to refute the circumstantial evidence against him. A close-up shows his expressions and gestures of helpless despair when he is adjudged guilty.

Claude de Brissac incurs Chevalier de Lousan's displeasure and is ordered from his house while courting his daughter, Clarice. Shortly afterwards de Lousan is found dead in front of his home, with de Brissac, standing over him with a pistol in his hand. He is tried and convicted.

Lois, a resident in the house across the street, has witnessed the killing, but, believing that the murderer and her fiance, Richard Barrington, are the same, she conceals her secret. Lois knows that Claude is innocent, for she saw a man fire the shot from behind a clump of bushes before de Brissac came upon de Lousan's body at the foot of the stairs. Robert is amazed at Lois' avoiding him and seeks advice from Cardinal Journet. Lois, in a quandary as to what course to take, does the same.

Years before the cardinal had been present at Mrs. Barrington's death, and had promised to find work for her son, Robert, Richard's twin brother. The boy was apprenticed to a jeweler. He fell in with bad companions, and was forced by them to murder de Lousan. It was he and not Richard whom Losi saw shoot. On seeing Richard, the cardinal recalls the twin brother. Robert resists the police and is killed in a pistol duel with them. Claude is freed, and Richard and Lois are re-united.

GERTRUDE McCOY and Richard Tucker play the leading parts in "The Hand of Iron," an Edison drama of military life. The theme is based principally upon the dilemma in which a young officer is placed by adhering strictly to the fort's rules to the chagrin of the young lady whom he loves. Finally his sacred regard for duty compels her admiration, and the affair ends happily.

Most of the scenes are exteriors, taken on a bluff overlooking the Hudson river, and are so suggestive of the position of a military stronghold that one does not notice that there are no actual fort scenes shown.

Lieutenant Steele is so strict a disciplinarian that he becomes unpopular among his fellow officers. Lieutenant Yardley, his rival for the hand of Helen Taylor, the colonel's daughter, causes Steele to be severely reprimanded by the commander by doing slip-shod report work and throwing the blame on Steele. The lieutenant takes the reproof in silence, but warns Yardley that should he attempt to repeat the trick he will expose him.

one evening in preparation for her moonlight party, and tells her that it is against the rules. Helen becomes vexed at this and calls upon her father for permission, but, to her further discomfiture, he bears Steele out in his statement. She plans revenge on her suitor by encouraging him to the point of proposing, and then insulting him. She later regrets her spiteful action, and despises Yardley for attempting to take advantage of his rival by pressing his own suit.

The colonel receives a hurry call for troops to prevent a riot among the strikers in a nearby town, and sends Steele at the head of a company. At great risk to himself he quells the disturbance and arrests the strikers' leader. This excites Helen's admiration, and on his return she apologizes for her former action. Admiration follows its natural course and the picture ends in Helen's acceptance of Steele's second proposal.

Houston, Texas, Has De Luxe Theatre

The City of Houston, Texas, now proudly boasts of one of the best equipped and largest theaters in the country devoted solely to motion picture entertainment, since the opening of John E. Davis' new "Zoe" theater, on Saturday, October 10.

The Houston Chronicle of October 11, writes of the opening of the Zoe as follows:

Amid the strains of "America" as rendered by an excellent orchestra the new photoplay theater, the Zoe, was formally opened yesterday afternoon with a reproduction of the New York Hippodrome performance of "America." Hundreds of persons poured into the building for each show, filing down the long foyer between rows of beautiful floral pieces sent by friends of the new showhouse. All expressed pleasure with the seating arrangement of the theater, and especially with its acoustics, which will greatly add to the value of the pipe organ to be installed this week.

Mayor Ben Campbell, Rev. William States Jacobs, Rabbi W. Wilner and C. J. Kirk were the speakers who welcomed the new theater into the pleasure life of Houston. Shortly after three o'clock the crowd was called to order by John E. Davis, proprietor of the theater, who announced the opening of his show. He stated that the name, "Zoe" (pronounced Zo-e) is the Greek word meaning "life," with which he expected to see the theater imbued for years to come.

"The invention of moving pictures was one of the greatest of the past century," said Mayor Campbell, "for it provides a cheap and yet valuable education. It also reaches that class which is not naturally studious, as well as those who are fond of books. Nearly everybody goes to see the moving pictures and in them they learn history, geography and other things that the schools often fail to impress on the minds of students, and they also teach patrons the manners and ways of people in other parts of the world. The news pictures show events more distinctly and more impressively than the newspapers can tell about them. As an educational factor in the city, as well as an exponent of high class and instructive entertainment, I am glad to welcome the Zoe theater.

Dr. William States Jacobs welcomed the new theater as a new pulpit from which could be taught lessons in morality and religion as impressive and forceful as any taught from a church pulpit. He was followed by Rabbi W. Willner, who also welcomed the new theater as a power for good, after which C. J. Kirk made a short talk in behalf of the Red Roosters and members of the Press Club, who were honor guests at the opening.

The new theater is in the Foster building on Main street adjoining the Mason block and was just completed last week. It has a seating capacity of 650, of which 30 are box seats. It has two of the latest model Simplex, motor-driven projectors and a screen 13 by 17 feet, which is one of the largest in the city. This is a "day or night" screen and pictures may be seen on it in a lighted room. Floral pieces were sent by Jesse H. Jones, Josiah Pearce, M. E. Foster, the Paramount Film Company, F. M. Sanford, district manager for the World Film Company, Buchanan & Gilder, and others.

Numerous telegrams of felictation were received during the day, one of which was from Mary Pickford, as follows:

"If I may be permitted to retain the name of my latest character, 'Such a Little Queen' sends the king of exhibitors congratulations on the majesty of his new theater and earnestly hopes that she may only appear in such subjects as your royal house deserves."

MOTOGRAPHY extends its best wishes to Mr. Davis on the opening of his house and congratulates the city of Houston on possessing such a temple of entertainment.

Features Policewoman

Mrs. Alice Stebbins Wells, the first regular policewoman in the world, who has been a member of the Los Angeles police department over four years and who has delivered lectures in more than 100 cities in the United States and Canada, is preparing to enact the leading part in a four-reel moving picture to be staged by the Balboa Amusement Producing Company at its studios in Long Beach, California. The scenario, "The Policewoman," written by the company's phtoplay editor, F. M. Wiltermood, depicts the many activities of a policewoman and shows the scores of ways in which she benefits a community.

Mrs. Wells, who is still a member of the Los Angeles department, believes the film will have great educational value throughout the world, in showing the ever-present need of policewomen in cities to aid and protect girls, unfortunate women and erring youths. She created her position as policewoman.

Twenty-One Ems Ten-Point

By Ed Mock

WE are not inordinately addicted to complaint. There are, after all, but one hundred and forty generations between us and Adam—one hundred and forty father-to-son steps between the Garden of Eden (not a film) and now. We live in one of those generations—the one hundred and fortieth—and few of us complain against our father. We are all glad to be here. In the main, we like each other. Our objections are never so much against the individual. His methods may give us concern, for the moment, but time passes. The one hundred and forty-first generation may be able to solve the riddle. ¶A few years ago, for example, certain of the film manufacturers wanted a film journal that would combine the advantage of covering the trade thoroughly and if possible, reach out to include the film fan. Some of these manufacturers spent large sums of money in an effort to reach the m. p. theater-goer. They were so tremendously serious about the matter that it went home with us. We set about to make a trade journal that would lose none of its functions as such and at the same time make it so attractive that the film fan would grab it off the newstands of this and other countries. The old yellow and black cover gave way to the duotones on white. Departments were incorporated that would have interest for film fans in general. The association of film makers' names with the names of their particular stars gave both the publicity that each wanted. The sales increased on the newsstands. Our work was bearing fruit—we were happy. Some day we were going to demand more money for a circulation that covered every film manufacturers' requirements! ¶But film makers, through a scheme of complex manipulation and control, are hard to understand. Most of them have large departments whose sole ambition is to get as much publicity as possible for the smallest given expenditure. This trait of human nature while easily comprehended, contemplates all media with the single exception of one preordained contemporary down east. This exception gets the money and gives up the shortest measure of the free ride. With one accord this is the film-makers' adopted bible. His advertisement must be planted in that one spot. ¶As a publisher whose business is the conduct and making of various trade journals it is interesting to point out that no circulation statement has ever been given out by the book with the big pull. It got its start by trading space and assuming debts of a house organ. It doubtless circulates more free copies than competing journals, because it has the sinews of war. At the Dayton convention last summer there was a cart load of copies that went to the furnace man who is probably starting fires with them now. In the mind's eye of the trade, this paper seems to be all-sufficient, though never read. Its editor-in-chief has told us that because we hadn't studied conditions we were having a hard time of it. ¶Studying conditions is the easy part of life. Reaching the right conclusion is something else. You never see Motography in the trade, not because it fails to cover the field, but because it is of sufficient charm and worth to be carried away. There isn't a theater where pictures are shown that Motography doesn't reach. There isn't an exchange or an important auxilliary branch of this business where the magazine hasn't been pilfered within a week. Besides, the sales increase on the newstands.

To offer complaint would be sheer folly. If men believe one thing today, they are apt to believe something else tomorrow. If we cannot solve the present problem, those who come along after us will have something to do. The circulation of this journal to the trade is chronicled in every worth-while authority in this country. We haven't developed a manufacturing clientele that looks into these things. When the agency men took hold they immediately concluded that Motography was a popular, because its record was in evidence while its competitors showed blank. The agency man is a great economic joke. Pay him liberally for a job you created for him and he's there with both his number eights. We simply refuse to pay him.

The dopester of the film maker—the publicity agent—has never attained his rightful place in the business. When Procter & Gamble appropriate a half million dollars for advertising, the buck is up to their advertising manager. They have nothing more to say. When the money is gone, they have a look at the sales ledger and go back and make another appropriation. If the sales were up the same man succeeds himself in the advertising. If they are down, they get a new man. The publicity man of a film manufacturing concern starts out with no fixed amount to spend. He's in the dark right off the bat. He must design stories that "get by;" create posters that will sell; invent heralds that exhibitors will cry for; write ad copy that will please the boss! He is supposed to make money in his department. Exhibitors are his clients. They pay a profit for the advertising matter he sponsors. This is clearly what his department shouldn't be, but due to the unsolved plan of trying to advertise a product that has a fixed market, he is immediately at cross-purposes with himself and his employer.

tising doesn't help the sale of a film—that all money spent for film advertising is wasted. None of the men who tell us this are in the money-wasting business. None who do not advertise, if not here, somewhere.

Scene from Essanay's "Whatsoever a Woman Soweth."

The subject will have to go over to the one hundred and forty-first generation. Of course, we know that advertising hasn't hurt any film thus far issued—that a million dollars a year will fall far short of paying the advertising bills intended to create interest in the films. And by this we mean straight space account, without including posters, banners, heralds, house organs, photogravures, photos, slides and the various other recognized forms of film publicity. The point of contention, even though obscure, is in the fine discrimination that the average boss exercises over his press-agent. When the buck is put up to the men employed to handle advertising there will be less to misunderstand in this matter of alleged philanthropy. Most of us rely upon the egg that has been candled.

We believe in the film manufacturer who maintains his own publicity department. We believe in the hard working men who are engaged in those positions. We do not believe in the avalanche of criticism that finds its way to their ears. Good advertising copy is always that. The best of it is still subject to petty criticism. The point is frequently overlooked that the copy is intended to make sales. When film factories adhere to a selling plan that denies the advertising copy its intended function, the ad man should be immune, but he seldom is. He works hard, nevertheless and his work is purely along construction lines. He has faith in his house and in its product and his copy is meant to create a demand on the film booker. When he can accomplish this he should have full credit, whether the factory turns out more or less positives. Some day, when film makers get down to running film manufactories at a manufacturer's profit first, advertising will have a larger meaning. As it rests today No. 141 will have something to dope.

THE BRYLAWSKI SCALE WINS.

THE United States Senate has passed the war tax bill with an amendment to the theater section which substitutes the scale proposed by Secretary Brylawski of the League for the original flat tax. Motion picture exhibitors, instead of paying $100 apiece regardless of the size of their theaters, will pay according to a sliding scale from a maximum of $100 down to $25. The amendment saves almost a million dollars for the industry.

The lesson to exhibitors in the success of this amendment will bear repeating many times. It is plain that without the work of the League this million dollars could not have been saved. When we consider the total cost to our industry of all the organizations, successful and otherwise, which have appeared in its brief but turbulent past, it is quite apparent that the saving in this one case alone will pay several hundred per cent on the total investment. If the associations had never accomplished any other good, the engineering of the war tax bill would be ample reason for enthusiastic and universal support of the principle of organization.

But the war tax bill is really only one instance of association usefulness. The League has sacrificed nothing to secure the amendment; not only is its value unimpaired, but it has actually gained in experience and wisdom. It is ready for the next fight for justice and equity.

Only a minority of the exhibitors of the country have so far given their support to any association. It is true that the non-members have profited with the members, necessarily. That is always the mark of good association work, and the members whose promptly paid dues go to support the work and make it possible do not begrudge the benefit to outsiders. But that should be a reason for, instead of against, association membership. Naturally, with more members, more good can be accomplished.

With this object lesson before them, it is to be hoped that the exhibitors who have so far resisted the spirit of organization will change their attitude and encourage it by entering an association immediately and urging all their friends in the trade to enter also.

CHILDREN SEE THEM

BEFORE a meeting of the Mother's Assembly of the State of New York, E. C. Fellows delivered an address on "The Movies." Mr. Fellows' comments were wholly commendatory, and he doubtless gave many of the mothers present a new view of the achievements and the possibilities of the pictures. In summing up he said:

The problem of the child and the movies is important. Of course, the films are not put out especially to fill the need of the children, but children see them, and it remains for parents to inform themselves of the pictures shown and make the proper selections for their children to visit. Fifteen per cent of the movie audiences are children under sixteen, and it is probably that in time there will be movies designed especially for children.

It seems to us that here is the gist of the whole censorship discussion. Children see them and it remains for parents to inform themselves of the pictures shown and make the proper selections for their children to visit.

Parental supervision and discipline, or rather the appalling lack of it that is so largely manifested, is coming in for a great deal of criticism lately. Courts in passing on cases of delinquency have frequently placed the blame on parents; examination of youthful criminals has shown that the real criminals were the parents, who, with hands upraised in horror, declared they knew nothing of their children's doings.

Thanks to the high mindedness of a large majority of present-day producers (and not to such agencies as the Chicago censorship) there are no pictures now appearing which could possibly injure the most delicate morals of adolescence. It is, therefore, not necessary that parents see the pictures to protect their children; but it is necessary that they see them to assure themselves that their children are being benefitted rather than harmed.

Comparatively few parents would allow their young sons and daughters to attend a legitimate theater performance without first investigating the nature of the play before giving permission. Very few parents ever investigated a picture program before handing their children the price of admission. Yet those same parents have been loudest in their denunciation of the motion picture, and have said nothing about the legitimate drama. We are forced irresistibly to the conclusion that the mere fact of cheapness has been the controlling influence in this attitude. They did not care how Johnny or Kate spent a nickel or a dime; they were very particular how they spent a dollar.

The parents of this country's children have thrown the whole responsibility for the morality of their children's entertainment on the motion picture exhibitors and manufacturers. That the picture men have met the test and come out with flying colors, does not excuse the indifference of parents in general to their children's affairs.

WISCONSIN SCHOOLS.

WISCONSIN, always a leader among the states in experiments for the good of its people, is putting into nearly half its high schools this fall a series of weekly social-educational evenings with films and slides. The bureau of visual instruction of the University of Wisconsin's extension division is responsible for the work, and has a record of 400,000 sets subscribed for as against 215,000 sent out by New York state's visual instruction department last year.

Children who are regular attendants at motion picture shows are already exhibiting a much broader knowledge of most of the essential branches than their fellows who depend upon books and pedagogy for their information. We have no hesitancy in predicting that inhabitants of states like Wisconsin, which use visual methods of instruction, will ultimately show a higher order of intelligence than those of states which persist in ignoring the modern method of teaching.

A NOVEL ADVERTISEMENT.

The Triangle News, a four-page paper issued by the Triangle Theater Company of Chicago, Ill. is a distinct novelty inasmuch as it not only treats matters pertaining to the theater and its program but also touches upon issues of importance to the neighborhood, such as street lighting etc.

While it fully explains all matters that the patron is interested in about the theater and is therefore certain of popularity it is most interesting to those living in the neighborhood of the house aside from this fact because of the live community news which it carries.

Colonel Risks Life to Save Son's Honor

Strong Military Subject

"HIS Dearest Foes," the two-part drama to be released by the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company on Friday, November 6 is a story of a strong man, his weak son and a devoted wife and mother. The setting is a post of the British army in India and the characters are all connected with the military life of the colony in some way.

E. H. Calvert has the leading role, that of a lieutenant Colonel, who is a man of sterling worth, and Bryant Washburn appears as his weak offspring. Helen Dunbar in the role of the commander's wife and John Cossar, Lester Cuneo and Harry Dunkinson in minor parts round out the cast.

The story opens by showing the dissipated life led by Lieutenant Gerald Calhoun, son of Lieutenant Colonel Calhoun, commander of an English garrison in India. Every moment that the young man is off duty he drinks and gambles and, as he has no luck, he is soon deep in debt. He determines to make a desperate effort to regain what he has lost and borrows his mother's sapphire ring, which he places on the gambling table as his stakes in a game with an Indian rajah. The rajah holds the best hand of cards and Gerald, fearing the result of losing the ring, resorts to cheating. He is discovered and denounced by his fellow officers.

His father learns of the affair and is heartbroken. A messenger must be sent on an errand through the lines of the hostile natives and Colonel Calhoun orders Gerald to make the dangerous trip, hoping the boy will redeem himself by either successfully carrying the message or giving his life for his duty.

The boy is a coward, however, and begs his father to send someone else but the colonel will not listen to him. Gerald then goes to his mother and pleads with her to use her influence over his father. She goes to Colonel Calhoun and tries to get the officer to excuse their son from the trip that will probably take him from them, but the strong man remains firm and will not release Gerald from the duty which he has imposed upon him. Mrs. Calhoun, her heart breaking, turns upon her husband and tells him that all the love she ever had for him has been killed by his determination to send her boy into the jaws of death. She leaves him and the strong man fights to control the emotions which oppose each other in his heart.

Gerald drinks heavily to forget the work before him and in the evening, when the time comes to start on the journey his father finds him stupified and unable to mount his horse. As the colonel looks at his son all the ambition of his life dies and he buries his head in his hands. Then he rises, once more a determined man, and writes a note to his wife bidding her farewell. And as the hour for the messenger to leave is at hand he rides out toward the lines of the enemy himself.

The first rays of morning light wake Gerald from his drunken slumber and he is filled with remorse. He looks for his father but finds that he is not about the post and realizes that he must have taken the message himself. Mrs. Calhoun sees the cowardly nature of her son and denounces him. She forces him to saddle their horses and they ride out together to find some trace of the man who is so dear to both of them.

About a mile from the edge of the settlement they come upon the colonel, lying face downward on the road where he fell when the natives fired on him. They carry him back to the garrison where the surgeon declares that he will live. Gerald fully realizes how unworthy he is of the uniform he wears and goes to his father's room, where he declares his intention of leaving the army and going away to become a man. Colonel Calhoun sees the light of manliness in his son's eyes and knows that the boy means what he says so he bids him farewell and tells him that when he feels he had made good they will welcome his return. And as the boy rides away Mrs. Calhoun, realizing the injustice she has done her husband, comes to his bed and asks his forgiveness.

The cast for the production follows:

Lieut. Col. Calhoun.....E. H. Calvert
Erme, his wife.....Helen Dunbar
Lieut. Gerald Calhoun, his son.....Bryant Washburn
Chief Commissioner Wilkie.....John Cossar
Rajah Allem Shah.....Lester Cuneo
Dr. Graham.....Harry Dunkinson

Eleanor Woodruff's Hardships

Eleanor Woodruff, Pathe leading woman, stars in the forthcoming three-part drama "The Ticket of Leave Man." In the story a young man is convicted of a forgery committed by a friend and sent to a penal colony in the tropics. He falls in love with the daughter of the colonel in charge of the camp and when his sentence expires sails for home by the same boat on which she is a passenger. The ship is wrecked and the girl and man cast away together on an uninhabited island. Some time elapses—their clothing is worn out and needs replenishing so the girl clothes herself in sacking. Miss Woodruff shudders when she tells of this experience. "You see," she says, "the scenes on the island were taken down in Bermuda. Day after day I had to appear on a picturesque stretch of beach not far from a fashionable hotel, clad only in what was once a grain bag, with legs bare to my knees and arms also exposed to a broiling sun. The cool and attractively garbed guests at the hotel would come and gaze at us as we went through our parts, much as though we were visitors from Mars or some other outlandish place. It just made me furious to hear their would-be clever remarks about my costume, as I worked away under that torrid sun, supremely uncomfortable in that scratchy sacking. 'My word' said one man with a monocle, 'look at our friend Eve just escaped from the blooming garden!' I can tell you I was mighty glad when we finished that shipwreck stuff."

"Motherhood," a "Beauty" subject, has the material for an exceedingly beautiful picture. The role of the young girl, bride, and wife, gives Miss Margarita Fischer opportunity to display her infinite variety.

Notables Visit Essanay

Col. Leroy T. Stewart, superintendent of delivery of the Chicago post office, and several Washington postal officials visited the Essanay laboratories, 1333 Argyle street, recently to study the method of making motion pictures, in order to perfect the government photographing system. The Washington officials took motion pictures of the Chicago post office, showing the process a letter goes through from the time it is dropped in the box until it is delivered. The pictures will be displayed at the Panama Pacific exposition. The officials who visited the Essanay factory with Col. Stewart are W. R. Spillman, superintendent general delivery system, of Washington; James H. Callan, his assistant; W. S. Clime, in charge of the Washington department of photographic illustration, and J. T. Lynch, assistant superintendent of mails, Chicago.

Government Using Picture Machines

That the practical value of the motion picture is thoroughly appreciated by the various departments of the United States Government has been amply proved by the use made of it in many ways. No departments make more extensive use of the screen, however, than do those of the Army and Navy. In those two departments alone, there have been installed over sixty Power's Cameragraph motion picture projection machines. They have been placed at West Point and at Annapolis, in the principal army posts throughout the country, and on a number of battleships, where they are used not only for entertainment purposes, but for instruction in military and naval tactics. Among the most recent of these installations have been machines on the battleships Utah and Montana.

Wurlitzer Catalogue

The Rudolph Wurlitzer Company of Cincinnati, Ohio, has just issued a new and extremely interesting catalogue of its automatic musical instruments. The catalogue contains forty-eight pages and cover, is printed on calendered stock, illustrated with innumerable three-color cuts, and contains detailed descriptions of hundreds of different types of Wurlitzer instruments. The motion picture exhibitor will find some instrument to interest him, no matter what size his house, for the catalogue contains data and illustrations on instruments of every sort, from those moderate in price and simple in operation, to those costing thousands of dollars and requiring a musician of note to operate. Any exhibitor who has not received one of the Wurlitzer catalogues can obtain one by addressing the Wurlitzer Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, and mentioning that he saw the announcement in MOTOGRAPHY.

Bergen Goes Over Falls

Thurlow Bergen, the popular Pathe reading man who appears in Wharton productions, tells of some exciting times he had during the taking of the latest Pathe-Wharton picture. Mr. Bergen has this to say of his unenviable experience: "I looked at those falls that Mr. Wharton wanted me to go over and my heart sank. I don't mind a swim, I'm just naturally fond of one, but to shoot the chutes in ordinary clothing and go bumpety-bump over a rocky flight of steps with tons of cold spring water thundering on top of you, why that's another thing."

LILIE LESLIE of the Lubin stock company at Philadelphia, is a native of Australia. It was there she started theatrical work and was in a company with Joseph R. Smiley, who is now her director at the Lubin plant. She went to England and stayed there for several years, doing splendid work, and then sought the States as a new field. It was after considerable experience here that, one day, she again met Mr. Smiley. The idea of working before the camera was a new one to her and during a trial at the Lubin studio, her work was found to be especially good before the camera so she was made a member of the stock company. Then, last May, in a picture in which Mr. Smiley and Miss Leslie played leads and which called for a screen wedding, they gave the public a real marriage ceremony. She was Mrs. Howard Jeffries in "The Third Degree."

Lilie Leslie.

KEMPTON GREENE'S years of service with the Lubin company number three. He had an inconspicuous beginning; he says so himself. And it all came about because he chose not to leave the city on one of his vacations. Instead, he went with a friend to Philadelphia and there got a chance to play small parts with the Lubin company. When the summer and autumn had passed he was still there; and then Mr. Terwilliger gave him a role in "The Cry of the Blood." Last winter he was chosen to go to St. Augustine where he played a number of important parts to the accompaniment, many times, of unforgettabe risks. Wayward sons, dissolute brothers and bad brothers generally, comprise the variety of roles that seek him especially. "But my ambition is beyond all these varieties," says Mr. Greene. "It is to abandon acting entirely and produce light comedies."

Kempton Greene.

ARTHUR D. HOTALING is chief comedy producer for the Lubin company, but those who are aware of his twenty years in the employ of Mr. Lubin know him to be expert in all branches of motion picture manufacture. Years ago, under his management, at San Souci Park, Chicago, Mr. Lubin opened a picture theater, said to be the first in this country. Later, Hotaling had charge of the Lubin exhibit at the Pan-American Exposition. Today he is managing director of the studio at Jacksonville, Florida, with four producers under his supervision, and a company of forty-five players. For a long time it was not known that Hotaling wrote all his own productions, or rather, in many cases, produced his story without script or notes. Now he directs exclusively and assumes entire control of the business of his studio. He has no fads or avocations.

Arthur Hotaling.

FLORENCE HACKETT, two and a half years ago, was assigned by the Lubin management to Arthur Johnson's company. At first she played minor character parts, "second" parts were regularly assigned to her, and gradually the motion picture public came to associate her with Mr. Johnson's photoplays. Since then she has scored a series of successes in widely different roles in Mr. Johnson's two-reel productions. To-day Florence Hackett parts are written for the actress, parts which demand emotional strength and the ability to efface the player's personality completely. Her hobby is the study of clothes and the wearing of beautiful ones. She has original and entertaining theories regarding the science of dress and has embodied her ideas in several magazine articles. Miss Hackett is a charming person to meet and before becoming a Lubinite, was on the stage.

A Realistic Jungle Film

Rarely has a more realistic or sensational film been produced than "The Junglemaster," a three-reel 101 Bison picture to be released Nov. 7. The picture deals with life in the African jungles and illustrates in detail the way in which the beasts of the jungle are hunted down, shot or caught in traps. Perhaps the most intensely interesting thing of the film, particularly to those who are acquainted with the Universal menagerie, is the work that is done with Posie, the Universal's man-killing lioness, who is regarded as one of the most ferocious lionesses in captivity. She has one man to her credit and several others will bear to their graves scars that were earned in encounters with her. Knowing this to be true, Rex Roselli, in the capacity of animal trainer, not only enters her cage and strokes her soft coat, but he goes so far as to take from her one of her whelps.

In photographing the animal hunt, one of the cleverest effects ever attempted is successfully secured. A hole was dug in the ground and a net set for the lion. Then in another cave, separated from the first one by a small board partition, a camera was placed. The camera, on the ground above, of course, caught the lion as he rushed into the trap and as he fell, the camera below caught him as he dropped into the net and began his struggles to get away. Roaring, scratching, clawing and biting at the entangling meshes, he threshes about in their clutch in a frantic effort to escape and every motion is caught by the camera on the other side of the partition.

Roskam Has Lucky Escape

Fate and good fortune seem to be following Mr. Edward M. Roskam, president of the Life Photo Film Corporation, in everything that he has undertaken or is interested in. While driving along the Palisades with Charles Hirliman, the superintendent of the laboratory, his automobile became unmanageable and skidded, sending the two thousand pound machine over a ten foot embankment. Luckily the machine did not turn turtle, and Mr. Hirliman, with wonderful presence of mind, shut off the motor, stopping the machine ten feet from the edge of the Palisades. Although the machine is a total wreck, neither Mr. Roskam nor Mr. Hirliman received any injuries.

Fulco's New A. to Z. List

Exhibitors throughout the United States are this week receiving copies of the Fulco A to Z List No. 5, which has just been issued by E. E. Fulton & Company of 154 West Lake Street, Chicago. No. 5 is by far the most pretentious catalogue that has been issued by the Fulton Company and contains data, illustrations, prices, and descriptive matter relating to practically every article or supply used in or about a theater. The house behind the book is certainly to be congratulated upon the tasty and comprehensive catalogue it is offering its customers.

The catalogue contains one hundred and forty-eight pages of text, which is bound in a neat buff cover, lettered in green and purple. Following a salutatory by E. E. Fulton, illustrations of all portions of the Fulton offices and a brief and breezy little department called "Fulcoisms," one finds fully illustrated, described and priced such articles as projection machines, generators, compensarcs, ampere and volt meters, rheostats, lugs and switches, carbons, rewinders, lenses, film cements, stereopticons and calcium lights, fans, screens, stage scenery, lighting fixtures, easels, poster frames, posters, ticket selling machines, tickets and ticket choppers, slides, cameras, fire extinguishers, and opera chairs. The last fifty pages of the catalogue are taken up with a detailed list of machine parts and repairs for all the standard projection machines so lettered, numbered and illustrated that any child could readily order the part desired.

If you haven't yet received your copy of the A to Z List address the E. E. Fulton Company, and one will be sent you by return mail.

A World's Record

This week Alfred Hamburger, Chicago motion picture magnate, becomes the proud possessor of the world's record for the longest continuous run of a photoplay. For the past twenty-three weeks he has been showing the graceful, garmentless and beautifully formed Annette Kellerman in "Neptune's Daughter" at his Fine Arts Theater on Michigan Boulevard, Chicago, to a total estimated patronage of 200,000 people. When "Neptune's Daughter" was put on last spring, its premier was advertised in seven consecutive full page ads in a Chicago daily newspaper and engraved invitations were issued for several hundred to attend the first night. After a few weeks of abnormal patronage a long run was assured.

A De Luxe Booklet

MOTOGRAPHY is in receipt of one of the souvenirs of the initial presentation of "Salomy Jane" in motion pictures, which occurred at the St. Francis Hotel, San Francisco, on October 8, 1914, which is indeed one of the most tasty and comprehensive brochures ever issued by a film manufacturer. It contains thirty-two pages and is bound in pretty covers, printed in two colors. Each right hand page of the booklet contains a large halftone of some interesting scene in the photoplay, prettily printed in sepia, and surrounded by a border sketch symbolical of the country in which the story is laid. The right hand pages contain only the line descriptive of the particular scene illustrated on the opposite page. The California Motion Picture Corporation is indeed to be congratulated upon the de luxe advertising it is giving its initial release.

Panzer Dominates Latest Pauline Story

Reviewed by Charles Condon

OWEN is truly a dauntless villain. The end of each release of the "Perils of Pauline" series leaves the disappointment and grief all on his side of the Marvin account, but each succeeding episode finds him back on the firing line all aglow with some hitherto untried combination of thrilling and dangerous experiences into which to entice or thrust the fair Pauline and her champion, Harry Marvin.

The sixteenth episode of this series is not quite as hair-raising as its precedents, but it is marked with considerable exciting action, a better and more detailed plot, and particularly with splendid acting and remarkable settings. Paul Panzer especially is afforded an unusual opportunity to allow his facial expressions to interpret his thoughts. To say that his work in this release as compared with the others is merely better, would do him an injustice.

A log cabin in the Adirondacks furnishes the background for a few of the exterior scenes, and only the knowledge that photography in such a hut is an impossibility, betrays the studio as being the location of its interior settings. A thoroughly equipped chemical laboratory is another of its commendable interior scenes. Additions to the reguar cast are made in the person of M. O. Penn as the scientist, Dr. Laroux: Eleanor Woodruff as Pauline's friend, Lucille; and Victor Benoit as the fake doctor, Savelli.

In hopes of learning a new danger with which to beset Pauline Owen secures a position for his assistant, Balthaza, in the laboratory of the eminent scientist, Dr. Laroux. The doctor has just discovered the germ of a peculiar disease which seizes its victims with a mad desire to submerge themselves in water. The gypsy steals a test tube containing the germ culture. Owen pours some of it in Pauline's box of candy, and prides himself on the success of his plan when she eats a few of the chocolates.

Harry becomes lonesome while camping in the mountains, and 'phones Pauline to pay him a visit. She complies, accompanied by her friend Lucille. Owen follows on a motorcycle. On the way he enlists the services of Savelli, a dope fiend and former practicing physician, and gives him the partly filled test tube. The sight of a few bills is enough to induce the man to administer the germ culture to Pauline should his services be called upon.

Shortly after Owen's arrival at Harry's cabin the poison begins to affect Pauline. At Owen's suggestion Savelli is summoned. After giving the girl the poison remaining in the tube, the doctor insists on operating upon her for appendicitis. Harry becomes suspicious, seizes a gun, and forces Owen, Savelli, and Lucille down into the cellar. He then hurries to the home of Laroux. When he returns with the doctor, Pauline is nowhere to be seen. The scientist recognizes the empty test tube on the table and realizes its significance, and orders a search made of the district lying near the river.

By the aid of the doctor's field glasses Pauline is seen paddling down the river, now and then stopping to lean over the canoe's side to play with the water. After a brief argument with Owen, Harry appropriates his motorcycle, and rides off of the landing into the river. Not a moment is to be lost, for by this time Pauline has overturned the canoe and is struggling about in the water. Harry swims with her to shore, where she is revived by Laroux. As usual the hypocrite, Owen, is the first to offer his sympathy and assistance.

CUPID'S darts began to fly in the opening scene of the Pathe comedy, "A World Without Men," and continued the siege through three reels, accomplishing their purpose in the marriage of a girl trio of man-haters. So obstinate were the girls that their conversion was the more humorous.

The picture was made in the Pathe-German studio, and its action and situations do not conform strictly with the American sense of humor, but it has a good comedy plot and will take well with the average audience.

Augusta and her two sisters, Ethel and Clara, solemnly vow to wage war on any of the male sex who dare to make advances to them. Augusta, the eldest sister, is particularly hateful in her attitude towards men, and resigns from a number of positions because her employers address her in what is not an iron-bound business manner.

While her older sister is kept busy accepting and quitting positions as a stenographer, Ethel teaches music in their apartment. Clara, the other sister, is a medical student and obtains an appointment as assistant to the handsome, young Dr. Squibbs in a local hospital. One night the sisters' code of rules is shaken by the unceremonious entry into their apartment of a young attorney, Carl Waldeck. He is allowed to escape uninjured when he explains that he is fleeing from the father of the girl upstairs, to whom he has been paying a visit.

Augusta secures a position in the law office of Speck and Waldeck, and makes such a favorable impression on Mr. Speck that when she assaults the office manager for being fresh, the attorney discharges him and gives her the position. Waldeck returns from his vacation, and is surprised and pleased to find Augusta working in the office. The pleasure dies out when the girl resumes her tyrannical role. Waldeck refuses to submit to her rulings, and she threatens to resign. Intent on curing her, the lawyer takes the shortest course by accepting her resignation and paying her before she can recover from her surprise. To add to the indignity he orders her from the office before she has time to leave voluntarily.

Such treatment from a mere man astounds Augusta, and, before she realizes it, she falls in love with Waldeck. Ethel, who is now employed by the firm of Speck and Waldeck, has fallen before the charms of Clarence Hallroom (who looks the part) and promises to marry him, admonishing the man not to let the news get to Augusta. Dr. Squibbs has proven quite unlike Clara's conception of the beast, man, and they shortly come to an understanding.

One day Augusta receives a call from Waldeck who, on being refused entrance through the door, makes his way in through the court window by means of an ironing-board reaching from the window of the opposite apartment. By pretending to be in love with her sisters Waldeck arouses Augusta's jealousy. The rest, then, is easy. Seeing that his love is returned, the young lawyer openly declares his love for her and is rewarded by winning the last of the man-hating trio.

Strikes It Rich

"The Golden Hope" is the sixth number of the "Beloved Adventurer" series now being released by the Lubin Company, one each Monday. Again Lord Cecil is penniless and at his wits' end to satisfy his creditors and save the ancestral home from the money sharks. He returns to America in a desperate attempt to battle with Dame Fortune. There he suffers hardships and even offers the stock of the Golden Hope mine to the landlord of the poor hotel where he lives to satisfy his bill and to be permitted to stay on for a few more weeks. The landlord laughs at the offer, and Cecil is very hard pressed when it is noised about that a new gold field has been struck and the Golden Hope is the richest claim, worth at least a million. The swindler sets to work and endeavors to secure the stock back but the little western girl discovers the true situation and comes to the rescue of the confiding Englishman. Arthur Johnson and Lottie Briscoe are very charming in this number and do credit to Emmett Campbell Hall's excellent story.

Pretty Soft For Reviewers

The reviewers are sighing quite some sighs of relief. They have found the projection room de luxe, situated and lying no farther from Broadway than 126 West Forty-sixth street, where the Kinetophote has just introduced a goodly number of them to about forty or more luxurious willow chairs in which to lounge while viewing Kinetophote features. There seems to be a general spirit of acclaim that such is so.

Mr. and Mrs. Reaves Eason, of the American studios, chaperoned a merry crowd, including Marty Martin, Miss Perkins, Miss Kroman of Tacoma, Wash., Arthur Milletts, and Mr. Tedmarsh, on a barbecue and beach party at Hope Ranch Beach, Calif.

Howard Estabrook has been engaged to play the role of "Travers Gladwin" in George Kleine's film version of the Cohan & Harris success, "Officer 666."

Henry Otto, "Flying A" director, was at one time on the opera stage.

Brevities of the Business

Louis Scherer, location man for the Universal west coast studios seems to have been born under a lucky star. He says so himself, and circumstances carry it out. Returning from a long hunt for a location for "The Trey o' Hearts" the other afternoon, he attempted a sharp curve at some forty-odd miles per hour. Fortunately the ground at that spot was soft, and when the car went wild he landed gently. Then the car rolled over twice and stopped right side up, the engine still running and everything in place. A rope, a plank and a few grunts soon remedied the sticky mud, and away he went again.

Syd Chaplin, the English comedian and brother of Charles Chaplin of Keystone fame, has signed with the Keystone Company and left New York for the Los Angeles studios last Friday. Mr. Chaplin seems certain of success with the Keystone Company, as he has been star comedian and producer for Fred Karno of London for the past eight years.

Fred Quimby, formerly manager of the Empress theater, Missoula, Mont., is now road representative of the World Film Corporation, working out of the Salt Lake City office, under the direction of Harry C. Drum, who is the general western representative of the corporation.

Kathlyn Williams was seen lashing a fierce Bengal tiger away from its victim in a scene the other day. This is the first time that the notable Selig actress has encountered these treacherous beasts during her exciting picture career at the Selig Jungle-Zoo. Despite the danger of the scene, Miss Williams entered the arena armed only with a whip and attacked the tiger fearlessly. Watchful keepers, with weapons, stood about the iron bars ready to give assistance in case of alarm, but the nervy leading woman mastered the Bengal at her first attempt and put a punch in one of the new, single-reel, Selig animal pictures.

Michael Ettelson, formerly representative of the Eagle Feature Film Company, is now at liberty and is in the field for a position with some film company. Mr. Ettelson is a college man vastly experienced in the motion picture business, and is thoroughly familiar with both the manufacturing and exhibiting ends of the game.

On completion of "The Man Who Could Not Lose" by Richard Harding Davis, Carlyle Blackwell and his Favorite Players will start on another story by the same author with the scenario entitled "The Last Chapter" which is the heading suggested by Mr. Davis for his tale "The Unfinished Story."

Don Meaney and wife arrived at the Universal west coast studios in Hollywood, California, last week, where Mr. Meaney has gone to take over the handling of Universal City publicity and anything else that may be desired in the way of special stories of big features requiring the pen of a master hand. Mr. Meaney is well known as a publicity writer and was formerly engaged in newspaper

There is some talk of a resumption of dividends on New York Motion Picture Corporation, to take place the first of the year, but on a basis of 1% per month instead of 2% as formerly paid. Mr. Crawford Livingston succeeded Mr. C. J. Hite (deceased) on the board.

The net earnings on the Mutual Film Corporation down to September first were reported at a rate considerably over 20% on the common after payment of the preferred dividends.

There has been considerable trading in all of the film stocks, as it is generally understood the enforced regime of economy that has prevailed since the beginning of the European war has diverted many of the patrons of regular theaters to the screen. An additional factor is represented by the closing down of most of the foreign film factories, leaving a deficit of films for American consumption to be provided by the American manufacturers.

Lester Cuneo, who takes the part of Captain Osborne in "The Private Officer," to be released by the Essanay company, surprised the officers at Fort Sheridan, Ill., where some of the scenes in the play were made, with the technical knowledge with which he carried out his part. They understood, however, when they discovered he had had eight years training in a military school, besides being a member of Company A, First Regiment, Illinois National Guard.

The only trouble that the W. H. Bell Feature Film Corporation of Chicago seems to meet with in releasing "The Christian" is in arranging repeat dates for the theaters that have booked it so far. The picture is in eight reels featuring Edith Storey, Harry Northrup, Donald Hall, and Earle Williams, and is much above the average feature. The Vitagraph-Liebler company produced it.

Al. E. Christie, the man who created and made the "Nestor Comedies" what they are left the west coast last week for a visit to Chicago and New York and will take in London (Ont. not Eng.) either going or coming. It is from London that the popular "Al" started as a property man and it was at Staten Island that he joined David Horsley and started the "Mutt and Jeff" series which made such a hit in the early days of the film industry.

Max Stern, who for several years has been with the American Booking Offices of New York, has been appointed road representative of the World Film Corporation, Pittsburgh branch.

A great fight occurs in "The Carpet from Bagdad," just completed by Director Colin Campbell, at the Selig Jungle-Zoo. Wheeler Oakman and Guy Oliver, the two leading men, battle, bare-fisted with a swarm of blood-thirsty Arabs.

The Commercial Motion Pictures Company, an allied corporation of the Life Photo Film Corporation, is now running its factory at Grantwood, N. J., twenty-four hours per day on three shifts of eight hours each. Contracts have been entered into with the William Fox Amusement Co. and the Box Office Attractions Company whereby all the features being made by these two companies are being turned out in the laboratory of the Commercial Motion Picture Company.

Great activity is in evidence at the western scenario offices of the Universal. Several competent men and women have been taken on and the books of many of the celebrated writers of present day fiction are being carefully gone over, it being Editor George Hall's plan to choose some of the best to be adapted to motion pictures.

Frederick Sullivan, the Thanhouser director who is producing "Zudora" is a nephew of Sir Arthur Sullivan, of "Pinafore" fame. Mr. Sullivan inherits the musical genius of the family and has composed several settings of merit to the poems of Edgar Allen Poe.

Adele Lane of Selig's has not yet recovered sufficiently to return to her work and she does not hesitate to say that her nerve is about gone as far as acting in animal pictures is concerned.

To be sure that his pictures are thrown on the screen in the best possible manner while on his present tour of the country, John Bunny has purchased a private Power's Cameragraph motion picture projecting machine.

Miss Beverly Bayne, the pretty brunette of the Essanay company, is an accomplished water color artist as well as a star film actress. Miss Bayne spends most of her time between acts in her dressing room at work on her pictures. She paints altogether from the original and critics have pronounced her work excellent.

Accompanied by a truck-load of paraphernalia and the physician who always goes with them on their trips from the studio grounds, the Gold Seal company, under the direction of Wilfred Lucas, has left for San Gabriel Canyon in the heart of the Sierras where are to be staged the greater part of the scenes in the fourteenth installment of "Trey o' Hearts" series.

Refusing to leave any word as to her whereabouts, and with a muttered something about "a beach, fresh milk to drink, daily dips in the briny deep, long walks and hours of long undisturbed sleep," Ruth Ann Baldwin, one of the Universal's talented force of scenario writers has left the west coast studios for her vacation.

After dodging comedy for years, Director E. J. LeSaint of the Selig studio at Edendale, Los Angeles, frightened his friends by injecting fun, voluntarily, into a story handed him. As a proffered comedy always has been the signal for LeSaint to fire from the hip, some alarm is felt regarding his health.

Clay E. Brehm, manager of the Cincinnati branch of the World Film Corporation, was instrumental in launching an organization of picture men in Cincinnati, which has taken the name of the "Feature Film Renters' Association." The association is to meet monthly, and Mr. Brehm feels that it will become an important factor among the feature film interests of Ohio.

Edward Earle and Gertrude McCoy are experiencing a few hot and cold thrills in putting realism in Edison pictures. While working in "The New Partner" a few weeks ago Mr. Earle ruined a suit of clothes in rescuing Miss McCoy from a burning building, and a week afterwards had the extreme pleasure of diving into the icy waters of Sheepshead Bay to save Miss McCoy from a watery grave in "A Moment of Madness."

Jane Cowl has been signed by the All Star Feature Corporation to appear in the picturization of Eugene Walters' play "The Easiest Way" which is to be released by the Alco Film Corporation. Augustus Thomas is congratulating himself upon this opportunity to school Miss Cowl in the ways of the screen.

B. A. Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc. has signed a contract with Mabel Taliaferro. Miss Taliaferro is to appear in the Madison Square theater success "The Three of Us," which is to be released by the Alco Film Corporation.

Lionel Barrymore, who is starring in a coming production of the Kinetophote, "The Span of Life," says that playing in "The Span" is a rather novel experience, in that he remembers being taken to see the stage production of the piece at either the Twenty-third Street theater or the Fourteenth Street theater when he was in short pants. How long ago that was, deponent saith not.

The Cines Company of Rome, Italy, has announced that Maurice Magre of Paris, won first prize in the International scenario contest which closed recently. The title of the winning script which carried with it a cash prize of $5,000 is "The Tresor of Rampsinite." The second prize was captured by Messrs. A. Jondola and J. Dictallevi with "Leonardo Da Vinci."

Richard C. Travers plays the role of Dr. Warren, an army surgeon, in "Surgeon Warren's Ward," an Essanay drama soon to be released, with special aptitude, as he is a graduate physician with a degree from Cornell University. In a scene in the north woods, where Dr. Warren takes refuge after being falsely accused by a brother officer, he is also at home, as he was born and raised in the Canadian woods and lived there until he came to the United States for his education.

"European Armies in Action" the four-part Kleine war film was held up an example to emulate in the subtitling of similar pictures, by the mayor and the chief of police of Seattle, Wash., last week. The fairness and impartiality in presenting the various armies as they appear in the Kleine picture, had much to do with altering the chief's intention to bar all war pictures in Seattle.

William H. Crane is among the latest players to be secured by the Famous Players Company. He will appear in "David Harum," the production in which he achieved what was probably his greatest success.

Alvin B. Giles, formerly of the Advance Motion Picture Company, Chicago, and now of Dallas, Tex. was a caller in Motography's offices on Tuesday, October 20.

Little Maury and Loel Stewart of the "Five Stewarts" formerly of the Biograph, are the trade mark figures of the Royal Film Company and will appear in the fore-piece and trailer of each Royal picture.

Sir James M. Barrie, the distinguished English dramatist, whose every visit to America is a distinct event in theatrical and literary circles, last week received his first glimpse of a motion picture studio when he visited the Famous Players Film Company. Sir James spent several hours with Adolph Zukor and Daniel Frohman, and made a complete tour of the Famous Players' immense studio and laboratory.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Hearst-Selig Weekly No. 67.—Selig—October 19. Views of New York suffragettes leaving New York city en route to Rochester; glimpses of fire prevention day in Chicago; distant scenes of the world's series ball games in Philadelphia and Boston and close-up views of some of the players, pictures of Washington D. C.'s "Buy a Bale of Cotton" movement; and a number of interesting scenes from the European war zone, among which views of Belgian artillery in action are particularly prominent.

The Midnight Ride of Paul Revere—Edison (Two reels) October 20. A film story of Paul Revere's historical ride on the night of April 18, 1775. See review on page 517, issue of October 17. Augustus Phillips featured.

A No-Account Count—Kalem—October 20. Melinda is so homely that Hardup finds it impossible to land a husband for her. Count De Bluffe is invited to call and Melinda visits a beauty doctor. On his way the count has his clothes stolen by Weary Bill, a tramp. The latter impersonates the count and is about to wed Melinda when De Bluffe arrives. Vowing vengeance, Bill, the following day, as De Bluffe and Melinda are about to be wed, removes the bride's wig and De Bluffe, amazed, flees.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 68—Selig—October 22. Views of the start of the balloon race at Pittsfield, Mass., athletic meet at Fresno, Cal., the Industrial Exposition at Paterson, N. J., and intimate glimpses of the latest in fashion's world. In the war section, the destruction of Malines by the German guns is shown, also scenes in Ostend which was lately occupied by the Germans. A most interesting topical.

Wood B. Wedd and the Microbes—Edison—October 26. Wood B. courts Seraphine Brown, who believe in everything hygienic and eugenic, and he has to submit to many humiliating experiences. He finally decides he is called upon to endure too much and gives up his matrimonial designs. See review on page 518, issue of October 17. William Wadsworth featured.

Rivalry and War—Essanay—October 26. Kroutmeyer owns a bakery and Schmidt a delicatessen store adjoining. The two have trouble all the time, but all that has preceeded is tame compared to the trouble which follows when the two are nominated for alderman on opposing tickets. Kroutmeyer steals Schmidt's crowd by serving free beer at his campaign rally. Following a reconciliation, the two Germans open a department store, but trouble again develops when they fall in love with the same girl. Wallace Beery, Leo White and Betty Brown have the leads and laughs are frequent.

The Lynbrook Tragedy—Kalem—(Two reels) October 26. Ruth Malloy, whose father has become a human derelict, because of Vivian Gregg, a theatrical star, loves Mitchell, a young playwright. Ruth learns that Vivian is enslaving Mitchell. Ruth's father drifts into town, determined to slay the human vampire to avenge his wrongs. Ruth comes upon him just as he is aiming a pistol at the actress. Mitchell's eyes are opened. He sees in Malloy the fate which must be his unless he conquers his infatuation for Vivian. Ruth's love helps him and for the first time Vivian, who has grown to love Mitchell, realizes her infamy as she gazes upon the wreck that was once Malloy. A shot is heard and rushing into the library Vivian Gregg is found dead. Alice Joyce featured.

It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. In that case please see that we are advised of your film titles and release dates, and furnished with a brief synopsis of the story. This department is intended for every film manufacturer, whether he uses our advertising pages or not.

The Hold-up—Lubin (Seventh of "Beloved Adventurer" series) October 26. Lord Cecil, returning east, enroute to England, meets Silas Meggs, who is returning to Jane Henderson, his sweetheart of forty years ago, with the fortune he set out to win for her. The train is held up and Meggs is robbed of all his money. Lord Cecil, seizing the opportunity, knocks out one of the bandits and with his gun defeats the remainder of the band and eventually restores the money to Meggs. Arthur Johnson featured.

The Cave Dwellers—Vitagraph—October 26. Sonny Jim finds a cave in the hillside and with some boy friends explores the cavern. Attempting to smoke, all but Sonny, who took only one puff of his pipe, become deathly sick. The excited parents, meanwhile, search for their children, and learning their whereabouts, the fathers don masks and frighten the youngsters. As a result of their scare the children decide the life of the cave dwellers is too exciting for them. Bobby Connelly featured.

The Ticket-of-Leave Man—Biograph (Two Parts) October 27. Bob Brierly in London meets Dalton, a crook, and his pal, Moss. Tricked by Dalton and Moss, Bob passes a counterfeit bill on Mrs. Willoughby, with whom resides May Edwards, a singer, and is sentenced to serve a prison term. Later, discharged on a ticket of leave, Bob visits May and returns the money to Mrs. Willoughby. Dalton and Moss discover Bob and again implicate him in crime. Bob escapes arrest and ultimately helps Hawkshaw, a detective, to trap Moss and Dalton, after which Bob marries May.

Mulligan's Ghost—Columbus—October 27. Mulligan, out of a job, finds Murphy flirting with Mrs. Mulligan and plans a fake suicide. The finding of Mulligan's clothing helps his widow to collect the insurance and she promptly transfers her affections to Murphy. Mulligan, officially dead, dare not object and has to remian in the attic while Murphy and Mrs. Mulligan are married. The ceremony over, Mulligan declares his wife a bigamist and, frightened by his threats, she returns the insurance money to him. Mulligan then relents and the two sail for Ireland.

The Mystery of the Sealed Art Gallery—Edison (Twelfth of "Chronicles of Cleek" series) October 27. Cleek is called to investigate the theft of a necklace in the home of Parovitch, an African traveler. Cleek learns that the maid had met a monkey in the art gallery the night of the robbery. Further investigation leads to the discovery that Parovitch's nephew, supposed to be blind, has obtained entrance to the art gallery through a secret passage, while disguised as a monkey. The nephew is arrested. Benj. Wilson featured.

An Unplanned Elopement—Essanay—October 27. Frank Melbourne, society man, quarrels with Dorothy, his sweetheart, and to spite her, becomes engaged to Amy Carrington. In a friendly wrestling match with his friend, Courtland, Frank injures his opponent and the papers report that Courtland has died of his injuries. Amy ends the engagement and Frank turns for sympathy to Dorothy. When Frank is about to sail for Europe, Dorothy goes to see him off and is carried away. They are married in Paris, and return to find Courtland on the dock to meet them, the newspaper story having been a mistake. Francis X Bushman and Ruth Stonehouse have the leads.

She Married for Love—Lubin—Octobtober 27. Mrs. Muggs insists upon her daughter, Rose, marrying the deacon. Rose meets Harry Bounce an acrobat, and learns to tumble. When she turns cart wheels in the village street, walks up the church steps on her hands and performs on the Minister's clothes line, the Deacon calls the engagement off. Rose's mother refuses to allow her to return home, but is reconciled when Rose writes home that she is making $250 a week on the stage. Eva Bell featured.

Love and Title—Lubin—October 27. Jasper Green forbids his daughter to marry Count Linski, and when she insists, her father bribes the iceman to pose as the count's wife. The next day the iceman with four children appears and claims to be Countess Linski. The count chases the iceman and the children into the lake. A reconciliation follows and Jasper gets a dowry.

Why the Sheriff is a Bachelor—Selig—October 27—Tom Mix appears in a role which requires dramatic acting in this film and gives a very convincing character portrayal of a sheriff. The settings are of a rugged western type and the photography is clear. There is a shadow of the old time western film in this offering. The sheriff loves Alice and they are happy together until her brother holds up a stage and the sheriff is forced to arrest him. Alice pleads for his release and when the sheriff refuses to waver from his duty she tells him that her love for him is dead.

C. J. C.

Underneath the Paint—Vitagraph—(Two reels) October 27. Arthur Kellogg rescues Tryphena Winters, an actress and her little sister, Salome, from starvation. He later falls in love with Tryphena, but the latter insists she must first win success on the stage. Kellogg, Sr., tries to induce Tryphena to give up his son, but when the latter refuses, Kellogg disowns Arthur. Later Kellogg, Sr., offers Tryphena a stage engagement if she will denounce Arthur and after sending Arthur an explanation of her conduct, she agrees, but the note miscarries and consequently when she denounces Arthur, the latter believes her sincere and plunges into gay life. Conscience-stricken at the wreck of his son's life, Kellogg, Sr., destroys himself. Arthur visits the theater where Tryphena is now a star and after obtaining the long-lost note, interrupts the performance to ask if she sent the note. Upon learning that she did, a joyful reunion takes place. Helen Gardner featured.

The Lost Melody—Edison—October 28. The story of how Rogers and Mary, two sweethearts, separated by Mary's father, are eventually reunited through their mutual love of music. See review on page 517, issue of October 17. Edward Earle and Mabel Trunnelle featured.

The People's Choice Who Answered the Call of Duty and Took Selzer—Essanay—October 28. Patsy Boliver, proprietor of a Seed Store, is picked by the Political King Pins as the Goat for City Clerk. Patsy is convinced that the Peepul want him to run and Falls For the Jolly handed out by the King Pins. His Bank Account is drawn on until he is broke and then the poor simp wakes up to the fact that he has been stung. Thomas Commerford as Boliver is immense and Rapley Holmes, Harry Dunkinson, Frank Dayton and Billy Robinson appear as the King Pins. N. G. C.

The Menace of Fate—Kalem—(Two reels) October 28. Ethel, the little daughter of the wealthy Wiltons, is stolen by Effie Sprout, a woman of the slums. Fifteen years later the girl has succumbed to her environment, though the gentle traits she has inherited come to the surface from time to time. Doctor Wescott becomes interested in Ethel and tries to develop her better self. In attempting to burglarize Wescott's room, Ethel is injured. While in the hospital, she repulses Wescott's advances, until the latter succeeds in arousing her jealousy. Ethel then attempts suicide, but Wescott saves her and in doing discovers her identity. At the end of her her illness, the girl's better nature returns to remain and she becomes Wescott's wife. Alice Hollister featured.

The Mountain Law—Lubin (Two reels) October 28. The Hurf-Tyler feud is ended and Bob Tyler slips away to meet his sweetheart, Betty Hurf. Old Jim Tyler interrupts the tryst and Betty threatens him. Later Bill Hurf, a coward, returns to the hills and in a quarrel with old Tyler shoots him. Bob, thinking Betty has shot his father, claims to have himself killed him in a quarrel. The Tylers decide the feud is on again and an exciting battle follows between the mountaineers, which is only ended by the arrival of the sheriff and his posse. At the trial of Bill Hurf, the appearance of a pencil found near the body of old Tyler clears up the case and explanations lead to the ending of the feud for good and all. Louise Huff and Edgar Jones featured.

The Wasp—Selig—October 28.—A detective story that is made complicated by the number of characters which are introduced. Despite this fact the interest is focussed sharply at the climax and to one who follows the film closely it will probably be clear. The acting, settings and photography are all high grade. John Ward, a political "boss," has been nicknamed "The Wasp." He is in deadly contest with Charles Melvin, independent candidate for governor. Melvin has a son, Hal, who is engaged to Clara Clark, a society girl. "The Wasp" plans with unscrupulous hirelings to injure Melvin's candidacy by ruining the reputation of Hal, who has made such a thing possible by his big hearted charity, and his visits to the tenement occupied by old man Collins and his daughter, Marie, who has made the mistake of loving not wisely, but too well. Dick Little, secret service operative, aided by Ruth Cahill, thwarts the plot.

C. J. C.

William Henry Jones' Courtship—Vitagraph—October 28. Because of Mabel's sparkling personality her sister Ivy Smyles occupies the background at social affairs. Mabel being out of town, Ivy wins the admiration of William Henry Jones, who is nearsighted. Mabel returns home and Jones, dazzled, forgets Ivy. Later, breaking his glasses, Jones fails to recognize Mabel, and Mabel believes him intoxicated. Meeting Ivy, he proposes, thinking her Mabel, and even obtain's father's consent, believing it is Mabel he has proposed to. Eventually he learns his mistake, but still prefers Ivy to Mabel. Sidney Drew featured.

The Wife's Stratagem—Biograph—October 29. Howard meets a woman whose husband has cast her aside and after a brief acquaintance marries her. Later the Howards rear a foundling left with them by a peddler and still later, the child, now grown to womanhood, crosses the path of the man who abused her mother. She is to meet him in the park, but Mrs. Howard goes instead. Howard, following her hears her claim the child as her own and the man slinks away. Returning home they meet the peddler, who all these years watched the child he left with the Howards, but who departs forever, leaving his daughter with the Howards.

Snakeville and the Corset Demonstrator—Essanay—October 29. This is one of the best Snakeville pictures this reviewer has ever soon. Sophie, the corset demonstrator, stirs Snakeville as it has never been stirred before and the boys make her welcome, despite the objections of their wives. Slippery Slim, the only bachelor, finally gets Sophie all to himself, but later his plans are spoiled. Slim in revenge smokes out Sophie and her callers, by holding his coat over the chimney, but he is discovered, lassoed to the chimney and himself smoked out, when a fire is built in the stove. Margaret Joslin and Victor Potel are a scream. N. G. C.

The Wolf's Daughter—Lubin (Two reels) October 29. Edward Clark, a swindler, to evade the secret service men hastens west to a city in which his daughter, Dora, is in a convent. The girl supposes her father a wealthy financier and introduces him to Clarence Nolan, nephew of the Rev. James Nolan. Clark induces Clarence to invest $50,000, which has been left him, in an investment company and the use of the Rev. Nolan's name results in their selling much stock. Clarence, now wealthy, determines to marry Effie, a fact which breaks Dora's heart. Clark steals all the funds of the company and departs with Dora, but when the latter discovers that her father has robbed Clarence, she escapes from her father and returns with the money, just in time to prevent Clarence from being mobbed by the investors. Velma Whitman and George Routh featured.

Kidding the Boss—Vitagraph—October 29. The boss of "Bar 4" ranch is a woman-hater and Shorty and the cowboys "put one over" by placing a matrimonial ad in the paper, signing the boss's name. Pattie Jones replies, saying she is no beauty, but can cook. The boys tell her to come on and at the train next day meet and finally carry away a tall, thin maiden lady, who claims to be "Priscilly" Perkins, the constable's sister. Meanwhile Pattie arrives and is driven to the "Bar 4" ranch. The boss is peeved at first, but after seeing the latter and hearing Pattie's story he "gets" the joke and gives his blessing when the foreman and Pattie are married. Margaret Gibson featured.

The Tides of Sorrow—Biograph—October 30. Captain Ford of a fishing crew, loves Ruth, though the girl has a sweetheart, Elliot, who is a scamp. Ruth's father dies, during an argument with her as to whom she is to marry and Ford takes her to his mother. On the fishing banks Ford and Elliot scuffle and the latter is drowned. Upon returning he is convicted of murder on circumstantial evidence, but upon his release from prison he proves to Ruth what really happened. The tide of sorrow turns for both and happiness dawns.

Hearts of Gold—Biograph—October 30. Mrs. Van Pelt's gardener dies and she cares for the widow and her daughter. One day the widow meets and falls in love with the fiance of her benefactress. Going to the home of Mrs. Van Pelt another day she beholds a meeting between Mrs. Van Pelt and her fiancee. Heartbroken, the widow steals away rather than wound her benefactress and leaves the place forever.

Ham and the Villain Factory—Kalem—October 30. Tad one day sees his sweetheart going auto riding with Ham, his deadly rival. Later Tad has a frightful dream based on the efforts of Ham and himself to win Millicent's hand. The dream ends with the blowing up of Ham by Desperate Gus, manager of the villain factory. Awaking, Tad learns that Ham's auto has broken down, leaving Millicent to walk back. Hiring a rig, Tad takes Millicent out driving and passes the spot where Ham stands swearing at the machine.

Thumbprints and Diamonds—Lubin—October 30. Dick Turner and his pal, Bob, plan to rob Daniel Storm, a millionaire diamond collector. Turner meets and loves Helen Storm's daughter and Bob becomes a guest in the house where Frank Lewis, a private detective also in love with Helen, is a roomer. Turner robs the safe and by means of a plaster thumbprint casts suspicion upon Lewis. Lewis surprises the thieves in the act of robbing the safe but is overcome and confined in a nearby cottage. Later Turner drops the plaster thumbprint, which is found by Helen, and when he attempts to recover it, is overpowered by Storm and Lewis, who had made his escape. In the struggle, Turner is killed and Bob is captured with the gems. Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby featured.

The Grate Impeeryul Sirkus—Selig—October 30. Elsie Greeson as a little girl keeps the interest in this play alive every moment. The children used in the production are well managed and their antics are very amusing. The parson objects to the circus which arrives in town. Tommy and Elsie see the animals and decide to have a circus of their own. They secure the neighbors' cats, dogs, parrots etc. and arrange them around a ring. Just as they are about to begin their performance "Toddles," the elephant from the real circus breaks loose and visits them. The children use him in their street parade and all march back to the real circus tent where they give the performance, overcoming all objections of the parson. They then split the gate receipts with the manager.

C. J. C.

At the Transfer Corner—Selig—October 31. This is a "quiet" comedy and is certain to please any audience, though the same situation has been used before on several occasions. Sidney Smith, Elsie Greeson, Lillian Brown Leighton and John Lancaster appear in the leading roles. The scenario construction, rather poor at the start, gives a series of cleverly arranged scenes at the close that are very amusing. Old man Marshall objects to his son marrying Millie Stone and Mrs. Stone is equally opposed to the match. Marshall Jr., and Millie plan to elope and their parents take their places. The children arrange with a policeman friend to have the old people arrested for speeding and then force to give their consent to the wedding in order to keep Marshall, Jr., from having a reporter friend publish the story. Two years later the young couple return from abroad with a baby but their parents, who have fallen in love and married, surprise them by showing them a pair of twins.

C. J. C.

Bunny Backslides—Vitagraph—October 30. Flora Winslow, a widow, engaged to Bunny, attends a lecture on eugenics and decides her intended is too fat. After attending Dr. Sweatem's sanitarium and gymnasium, they are introduced to Violet Small, who flirts with Bunny. Bunny and Violet, auto riding one day, are put out of the car ten miles from the sanitarium, and told to walk back. After being chased by a wild bull, tearing their clothes on barb wire fences and falling into streams, the two sit down to rest. Bunny proposes and is accepted. John Bunny and Flora Finch featured.

The Hand of Iron—Edison—October 31. Yardley and Steel, two militia officers, are rivals for the hand of Helen Taylor. Yardley manages to put Steel in a wrong position and Helen rejects his proposal later on. In a striking scene between the militia and some strikers, Yardley is proven a coward and Steel a hero. Helen then realizes she has been mistaken in her judgment of the men and chooses Steel as her finance. Richard Tucker and Gertrude McCoy featured.

Broncho Billy's Mother—Essanay—October 31. Broncho Billy, on a tear shoots up the town, and is pursued by the sheriff. Just as the sheriff is to lead him away to jail Broncho's mother arrives and to spare her feelings the sheriff and his posse assure her that Broncho Billy is the sheriff of the county and that he has rounded up the whole party of outlaws. Broncho, appreciating the opportunity given to appear a hero in the eyes of his mother, reforms on the spot.

The Vengeance of Winona—Kalem—October 31. Upon Winona's promise to wed the avenger of her brother's death, Antelope and Red Owl, rivals for her hand, set forth on the mission. Later, Red Owl's cowardice causes him to flee when Winona is captured by the renegades who have slain her brother. Antelope engages the slayers and kills them single-handed, though it apparently costs his life. Winona spurns Red Owl, who asks her to be his squaw, declaring herself to be Antelope's widow, in accordance with the terms of her promise. Antelope is not dead, however, and Winona later becomes his bride. Princess Mona Darkfeather featured.

An Interrupted Nap—Lubin—October 31. A picture cartoon by Vincent Whitman, showing the dream of old Sim, who falls asleep and dreams he is fighting with wasps and flies and is attacked by articles of bric-a-brac in the room. At the end he awakens to discover it all a dream.

The Soubrette and the Simp—Lubin—October 31. Fred, a cowboy, considered the simp of the ranch, is paid off and takes his pals to the theater where "Dead Shot Nell" is being played. When the soubrette sings "Come and Kiss Me," Fred accepts the dare and is thrown out of the theater by the stage hands. The next day Fred buys a half-interest in the company and is given the leading part in the show. When the show "goes broke" on the road, Fred, the simp, returns to the ranch. Babe Hardy featured.

Within an Ace—Vitagraph—(Two reels) October 31. On shipboard Edward Forrester meets Tom Monroe, confidence man. Learning that Forrester is going to America to a ranch, Monroe determines to kill him and gain possession of his property by assuming Forrester's name. Arrived in America, Monroe kills Forrester and assumes his identity. Later Ethel, a niece of Forrester's arrives from England and at once discovers that the ranch owner is not the real Forrester. Eventually Monroe is exposed and captured. John Costello, Harry Northrup and Dorothy Kelly featured.

Mutual Program

Mutual Weekly No. 95.—Mutual—Oct. 22.—The war section includes views of Meaux after the battle, troops returning to Lierre after fighting at Termonde, and the battlefield of Vareddes. Other events pictured are Washington, D. C., society leaders exhibiting their cotton gowns, the unveiling of the shaft to Gen. Wadsworth on Gettysburg battlefield, New York University students observing "University Day," the burning of the Boston Riding School and the destruction of the Grand Central station at Houston, Texas. Views are also given of Fire Prevention Day in Chicago and New York, one of the games between Boston and Philadelphia, and some interesting balloon flights.

Sir Galahad of Twilight—American—(Two Reels)—Oct. 26.—A trapper marries a girl of the wild at the request of her dying father and cares for her as though she were his own child. A stranger saves the trapper's life and the girl compares him to Sir Galahad. When the trapper sees that the girl and the other man are in love he gives his life to unite them and she realizes that he, and not the stranger, is her Sir Galahad. A complete review of this film will be found on page 587 of this issue.

Our Mutual Girl—Chapter 41—Mutual—Oct. 26.—Margaret and Aunt Abbie relaxed a little after the exciting events of the past few days by going shopping for winter-defying furs. On their way back they drive over the new Manhattan Bridge and back over the Brooklyn Bridge. After luncheon Margaret journeys to Wykagyl Country Club to keep her engagement with Ralph Hamilton. There she meets the golfers' idol. Alec Smith, who teaches her some of the points of the game. Her principal pastime is toying with Ralph's bruised feelings. On their way back over the links they come upon a man who is threatening his caddy, claiming that the boy stole his watch. Just then Betty Hamilton comes up with the watch in hand, having found it in the grass. The millionaire apologizes to the boy and tells him to call upon him should he ever be in need. Our Mutual Girl returns home well satisfied with the day's adventures.

A Rude Awakening—"Beauty," Oct. 27.—Bolton goes out with the boys every night and seldom gets home before midnight. His wife, Mary, becomes angry and one evening decides to remain up until he comes home. Bolton stays at the club until three o'clock in the morning and when he returns home discovers that he has forgotten his key and spends the remainder of the night on the front porch. He has a dream in which he sees his wife as a jolly good fellow like himself and when he awakes he decides it is not a pleasant feeling to see her with other men. She lets him in the house and is about to express her opinion of his actions when he fixes matters up by telling her that he is glad her mother is coming to see them that day. As he has always bitterly opposed mother-in-law, Mary is so pleased that she forgives all. The offering is very entertaining but the vision scenes are not as clear as they might be. Joseph Harris, Gladys Kingsbury and Fred Gamble are the chief fun-makers. C.J.C.

A Madonna of the Poor—(Two Reels) Thanhouser—Oct. 27.—John Allerdyce, an artist, is struck by the beauty of a statue he sees and, inquiring where the model lives, calls on her, and persuades her to pose for him. The artist, not knowing that she is married, makes love to her. She repulses him, and tells her husband of his conduct, but he unconcernedly replies that she should have taken the money offered her by Allerdyce. At this the girl realizes that she has been virtually sold to the artist. Once, however, he attempts to kiss her in Pedro's presence, and arouses the Italian's ire. Pedro turns against him in a rage, and protects his wife.

Sweet and Low—American—Oct. 28.—A very clever child actress, Bunny Lee, appears in this film and her work is certain to prove popular with the "fans." William Garwood gives an excellent character portrayal of an old man and many of those who admire his acting will undoubtedly find it difficult to recognize him through the make-up. Vivian Rich and Lillian Lee appear in the supporting cast. An old man meets a child and they become friends. He tells her that he had a little girl like her many years before but when his wife died while he was in the West she was adopted by strangers and he never saw her again. The child leads him to her mother and the old man recognizes her as his lost child. He is taken into her home and his old age promises to be filled with pleasure. C.J.C.

The Man Who Died—(Two Reels)—Bronco—Oct. 28.—Joe Labarge, a highwayman, is wounded in a battle with the Mounted Police, but manages to make his way to Grand Pierre, a settlement in the heart of the woods. He disguises himself as a clergyman, and is welcomed by the people. Their kind treatment and faith in him awaken his inner self and he makes himself worthy of their trust. Corporal Ireton of the police while traveling through the woods becomes ill and is brought to Labarge to be treated. He recognizes the former highwayman, and dispatches him to Sergeant Gray's headquarters with a note in which he orders the clergyman's arrest. Gray, who is familiar with Labarge's good work, has a different idea of justice, and sends him back with a note stating that the highwayman Labarge died some years before. The clergyman is thus freed and continues his good work.

Eric The Red's Wooing—(Two Reels) Domino—Oct. 29.—Eric the Red, a brave warrior, enrages King Raud by his presumption in asking for the hand of the King's daughter, Hilma. In an effort to recover the states and title, of which he was deprived at the King's order, Eric kidnaps Hilma and keeps her in his hut in captivity. Raud and a body of men search for the couple. Eric wins Hilma over to his side and she agrees to plead with her father in his behalf. The King stubbornly refuses at first, but on being told by his daughter that unless Eric is restored to his former position she will return to him Raud gives in, and the warrior regains his estates and title.

Sheriff For an Hour—Reliance—Oct. 28.—Jim Jones, a lazy, shiftless fellow loses his position, and leaves for the West to look for work, telling his mother that he has a good job offered him. He continues his lazy habits in the West, but writes his mother that he is now sheriff and is doing fine. He falls in with a band of horse thieves, and in a fight with the sheriff's posse, gets seriously wounded. His mother decides to surprise him with a visit, and, on arriving in town, meets the sheriff and shows him her son's letter telling of his election. The sheriff carries out the boy's deception by pinning his badge on Jim's coat, and telling Mrs. Jones that her hero got wounded in carrying out his duty. After a short visit the mother leaves feeling proud of her son. Unknown to her he is punished according to his deserts.

The Worth of a Life—(Two Reels)—Kay Bee—Oct. 30.—A story of a young, fast-living city man who induces a village belle to break her engagement with a doctor of modest means and elope to the city with him. After their marriage the girl is unhappy, her husband spending all of his evenings in cafes. In the meantime the doctor has worked incessantly and secured the appointment of head surgeon in a New York hospital. Stone's raids in the market bring upon him the hatred of a fanatic. He is shot and taken to Emerson's hospital. Ruby tells her former lover that she does not want her husband to survive, but Emerson does his duty and saves his former rival's life. Ruby becomes divorced from Stone and a year later marries the man she really loves, Emerson.

The Golden Goose—(Two Reels)—Kay Bee—Oct. 30.—Tom Colby is in love with Ruth Hart, a banker's daughter, but being poor hesitates about declaring his affection. On the advice of his cashier, Goelet, Banker Hart has the Colbys ejected from their ranch. They move into the hills where Tom goes prospecting for gold. Reduced to near-starvation they decide to kill the "golden goose," a goose which Tom and Ruth once gilded to realize one of Ethel's fairy stories for her. In cleaning the goose they find a quantity of what appears to be grains of gold inside. Tom hurries to the place where the goose has been feeding and makes a rich strike. Goelet presses his suit with Ruth, but she dislikes him. She discovers that the cashier has lied to her father in regard to Tom's intentions in courting her, and insists on having him discharged. In revenge Goelet starts a rival bank, and causes a run on the Hart institution. Tom arrives in town just in time to prevent a bank failure by backing the bank with his mine. In gratitude Mr. Hart consents to his marriage to Ruth.

The Availing Prayer—Reliance—Oct. 30.—William Rock, assistant cashier in a business concern, has a sick daughter. The doctor urges that she be taken immediately to another climate, and Rock, unable to get an advance on his pay, is desperate. He has been in the habit of taking the deposits to the bank every Saturday, and determines that week to steal the money. Rock is followed on the street by a couple of crooks. He phones his daughter May and her fiance, a young physician, that they can start South with the younger sister at once. He stuffs the money in his vest pocket and goes down an alley to get rid of the satchel, is assaulted by the gunmen and the bag taken from him. A salesman from Rock's firm sees the attack. When the money is found upon his person, the company believes that Rock, knowing that he was shadowed, put it there for safety. In gratitude they loan him the amount for his daughter's use.

The Wrong Prescription—Reliance—Oct. 31—Frank Hunter is an interne at the hospital where his fiance, Irene Norris, is engaged as nurse. A patient with heart failure is received. Doctor Hunter in a great hurry, unconsciously prescribes an overdose of strychnine. Miss Norris corrects the dose, and administers the right amount. The patient's heart fails to respond, and he dies. Dr. Hunter believing himself responsible, quits the hospital, leaving a self-condemnatory note. The nurse reports the death, shows her chart and the doctors are convinced that she has corrected the prescription. An autopsy further vindicates her claims. Hunter is mentally wrecked by the thought of his apapparently fatal carelessness and seeks surcease in morphine. One day at a beach resort he rescues a child from drowning. The incident brings him and Nurse Norris together again. She explains the natural cause of the patient's death, and succeeds in leading the young doctor out of the grip of the drug habit into a new life.

Phil's Vacation — Royal—Oct. 31.—Phil, an overworked clerk, accompanies his boss on an auto trip. The car is full, and Phil has to ride on a trunk strapped on in the rear. Something goes wrong and Phil is told to crawl under the car and mend matters. He strikes a match and an explosion ensues. The clerk emerges grasping a small pig, the cause of all the trouble. Later, he tramps two miles for gasoline. The can leaks, and his supply trickles away. But they get to their destination, where Phil is kept so busy waiting on the party, that he has no time to eat his own lunch and a dog steals it. On the way home, the harassed clerk is bounced from his perch on the trunk. He starts up the road, meets an Italian fruit vender, buys out his entire outfit, and goes off pushing his wares, singing, "This is the life!"

Casey's Vendetta—Komic—Nov. 1.—Casey incurs the hatred of Pedro, a black-hander, by making love to his sweetheart, Nina. To get even Pedro sends him a note threatening his life unless he leaves a large sum of money at a designated place. Casey thinks this a good opportunity to get rid of his cranky wife, and shows her the note first changing the word "life" to "wife." He advises her to hide for a time. During her absence he continues his flirtation with Nina. Pedro has him kidnapped and imprisoned in an old mill. Nina leads the police to the mill, and there sees Casey embrace his wife. She threatens him with a knife, but Casey's wife will not allow her husband to be mistreated by anyone but herself.

Shep's Race With Death—Thanhouser—Nov. 1.—Mrs. Mateland, a typical mother-in-law, makes trouble in the Stearns family. A mischievous prank of Madeline, one of the twins, in which Shep, their collie dog figures, causes a breach between Mr. and Mrs. Stearns. The wife and Marion go to live with Mrs. Mateland, and Mr. Stearns and Madeline stay in the old home. Shep, is taken by Marion and her mother. The twins miss one another keenly. Some weeks later, Madeline and her father drive to town. While the child is sitting alone in the carriage, the horse becomes frightened and runs away. He plunges toward a railway track, and, exhausted, stops in the path of an approaching express. Madeline faints. But the helpless young girl, horse and buggy are dragged to safety. The rescuer is Shep. Mrs. Mateland's dislike of Madeline melts away. The family is reunited, and Shep is the happiest member of it.

C.; Australian troops embark in Syndey, Aus., for England; an automobile wreck in Los Angeles; New York's celebration of Columbus Day; Second National Silk Exposition at Paterson, N. J.; Beginning the East River "tubes," New York city; views of the world's championship baseball games, and intimate views of the Belgian and German troops following the battle of Waesmunster, Belgium.

The Persistent Lovers—Crystal—Oct. 27.—Vivian is undecided as to which of her two suitors, Burke and Opp, she prefers until it becomes known that Opp has fallen heir to a deceased uncle's fortune. Then she falls decidedly in love with Opp. Burke attempts to side-track her affection by writing a fake letter in which it states that marriage within two years will annul Opp's claim, and almost succeeds in doing so, but she discovers the original letter. The tide of her love again sweeps over Opp and this time he yields to its influence and makes her his wife.

Trey O' Hearts—(Two Reels)—Gold Seal—Oct. 27.—This, the thirteenth installment, takes up Allan's flight where the twelfth left off. Allan secures three burros and he and Rose and Barcus continue on, leaving Judith and Trine in the disabled auto. At dawn Marrophat, Jimmy and Hicks come upon the machine, leave Hicks to take care of Trine, and Marrophat and Jimmy take up the pursuit. When Judith learns of it she sets out on foot after them, greatly troubled about Allan's safety. In the meantime Allan has had a vision in which he was warned of impending danger by Judith. He goes out to reconnoiter. During his absence Marrophat and Jimmy find and bind Barcus and Rose. They surprise and capture Allan, force the trio into one of the tunnels of an old abandoned mine, and open the sluice gates of the reservoir. Jimmy carelessly drops a match among some waste and the fire reaches the powder room, causing an explosion which blows out the end of the tunnel and releases the prisoners. In the meantime Judith has come to the suspension bridge and narrowly escaped death when it gave way beneath her by grasping the hand rope and swinging to the further side of the chasm. Her unconcealed relief at seeing Allan safe and sound arouses Rose's jealousy.

In Self Defense—(Two Reels)—Imp—Oct. 29.—Charles Wright and his son, Fred, visit a mountain resort and there meet the Nortons. Wright falls in love with the widow, Mrs. Norton, and Fred with her daughter, Vivian. The girl detests Fred but permits his attentions for a time. He entices Vivian's brother, Phillip, into a game of cards and makes him his debtor for a large sum, accepting his I. O. U. for the money. One night Fred insults Vivian and Phillip resents it. They quarrel and Fred escapes in a canoe. Phillip follows in another and they fight in the water, Vivian watching from the shore. Fred drowns and Phillip and his sister decide to keep the cause of the death a secret. Wright hires a detective, Noble. He and Vivian fall in love and the girl attempts to steal the evidence he has collected against Phillip, but he catches her. To shield her brother she claims to be the cause of Fred's death. The detective chooses love in preference to duty and releases her. Another witness is then found who can prove that Phillip did not premeditate Fred's death. He surrenders himself to the law and is taken to the city to be tried. Further developments are here left to the spectator's imagination.

The Wall of Flame—Nestor—Oct. 29. Bob Mayhew, a forest ranger, occupies a camp with Fenton and Harlow. Bob is in love with Fenton's daughter and has a rival in Harlow. Harlow is discharged for drunkenness and, in a spirit of revenge, starts a forest fire, thinking to avenge himself for his imaginary wrongs, but instead he falls a victim to his own schemes while Bob, Fenton and his daughter escape unscathed.

White Roses—Rex—Oct. 29.—A boy meets a charming little newsgirl and calls that evening to force his attentions upon her. She, in the meantime, has returned home with a white rose to gladden her mother's heart, and found her dead. She listens to the boy's plea and is about to go with him when her eye falls on the rose and she sees a vision of her mother pleading with her to keep herself pure. Her conscience wins, and she repulses the boy.

When Bess Got in Wrong—Nestor—Oct. 30.—At a party Bess lets three boys promise to take her home to spite her sweetheart, Lee. When the three boys learn of the others' intentions they fix it so that Bess will have to go home alone. The experience she has while wending her way homeward alone teaches Bess that having one fellow that can be depended upon is better than having a number of fickle admirers.

The Witch Girl—(Two Reels)—Victor Oct. 30.—William Prentiss, financier and banker, is ordered to the mountains for a rest by the doctor. While climbing about one day he sprains his ankle. With the help of Hans, a woodcutter, he makes his way to Granny Robbins' hut to secure some of her wonderful herb-cure. Later, while strolling in the woods, he comes upon an elfinlike creature dancing about a tree upon which is pinned a magazine reproduction of Prentiss' city home. He engages the witch girl in conversation, and promises to take her to see the house. She is delighted at the thought and journeys to the city with him in his auto. After dinner, flushed with wine, Prentiss attempts to kiss the girl. She fights him off and flees back home. After a year passes and Prentiss cannot forget the witch girl he decides to apologize for his former conduct and win her love. The successful ending of his suit forms a strong and delightful climax to this pleasing story.

The Senator's Lady—Victor—Oct. 30.—While in Washington a senator becomes fascinated with a coquettish society belle. At his request his wife visits Washington to attend a social function, but when the senator sees her old-fashioned style of dress as compared with the other guests he feels ashamed of her. Broken-hearted, the poor woman decides to return home. The senator receives a not from the belle asking him to call upon her at her apartment, and is about to do so when memories of his past life are aroused by the sight of his wife's plain little bonnet. It recalls her noble self-sacrifices while he was an insignificant campaigner. He is aroused from his reverie by his wife's descending the stairs dressed to go home. He enfolds her in his arms and assures her that she is all the world to him.

A Daughter of the Redskins—(Two Reels)—101 Bison)—Oct. 31.—Wanana is indifferent to the attentions of Kawana. the chief's son, favoring Tomaka, the chief of another tribe. Through Kawana's efforts Wanana and her aged father are driven from the tribe. The father is later killed by some bandits, but Wanana, not knowing this, blames Kawana for the murder. She appeals to Tomaka to avenge her father's death. He leads his men against the tribe, conquers them, and is made chief over both tribes with Kawana as his squaw.

The Blacksmith's Daughter—Frontier—Oct. 31.—Fred's horse loses a shoe and he takes it to the nearest blacksmith shop. There he meets Lillian, the smith's daughter. On his second meeting with her he feigns illness and is taken to her home. A package of money falls from his pocket, and Lillian picks it up. She forgets to give it to him on his leaving, and consequently Jay and Charlie are disappointed when they hold him up. Lillian follows Fred to return the money. Nearing Fred's ranch house she hears angry voices inside. By a ruse she attracts the men's attention and in an instant Fred has the holdups covered with a six-shooter.

The Mystery of Grayson Hall—(Two Reels)—Eclair—Nov. 1.—Howard Grayson, a wealthy chemist, is visited by his wayward nephew, Ralph Forbes. Edna, the chemist's daughter, is in love with Jack Hall, the secretary, and coldly repulses Ralph's advances. Grayson warns his nephew that unless he mends his ways he will cut him off in his will. To prevent this Ralph concocts a scheme whereby his uncle will die mysteriously. Keene, a New York detective, secures a clue pointing to Ralph as the guilty one. In the will the nephew inherits only one dollar. He searches his uncle's possessions for the will, and, while doing so, finds enough money for his flight. As he is about to make his escape Keene arrests him, and, after a stirring third degree, forces him to confess.

The Strike of Coaldale—Eclair—Nov. 1.—Joe Gregory, a young engineer and labor leader, is appealed to by Edith Harland to avert the threatened strike on her father's road, but is helpless to interfere inasmuch as the demands of the men are just. By his stubbornness Harland causes the strike. Shortly afterward his daughter becomes ill with brain fever. In order to save her life she must be removed to a hospital at once and there is not a train on the line running. Gregory sacrifices himself by turning strikebreaker for one run and taking Edith to a hospital. She recovers and joins her pleas with Gregory's to Harland to grant the men's wage increase. The father yields and a romance develops between the engineer and Edith.

The Vagabond—(Two Reels)—Rex—Nov. 1.—Charles Ross, vagabond, rescues Tom Mason from a gang of toughs. Mason is in the last stage of consumption and dies in spite of Ross' care. He leaves a note for Ross instructing him to visit his home in Los Angeles where his father will give him a good position. The vagabond decides to put an end to his drifting ways, and follows the directions in the note. Arriving in Los Angeles he shaves and gets dressed up in decent clothes before making his call. This done he is struck by his likeness to Mason. At the Mason home he is greeted as "Tom" by Anna, and the dead youth's blind mother is overjoyed to think that her son has returned home. For her sake Ross lives out the deception, but on her death he leaves, his love for Anna now being more than a brother's affection. He leaves a note stating that he will come back when he has made good. Time goes by. One day the former vagabond returns and claims Anna as his bride.

Alliance

The Path Forbidden—Excelsior—(Five Reels)—Oct. 19.—Twin sisters grow to be exact opposites in disposition, though they look exactly alike. A number of serious and numerous complications result from the resemblance, as one is a "home" girl and the other is tempted to follow the forbiden path. All difficulties are finally solved by the happy ending of a romance. A complete review of this subject will be found on page 559 of the October 24th issue of Motography.

Eclectic

A Change of Heart—Wharton—(Two Reels).—The theme of this subject is a strong one both from a moral and dramatic standpoint, and it is perfectly logical. Splendid acting receives the support of clear, restful photography, and harmonious settings and locations in putting "A Change of Heart" on a par with other Wharton productions. Thurlow Bergen plays the lead as James Mason and is surrounded by a capable cast. A band of confidence men are gloating over the release from prison of James Mason, known as "Handsome Harry," as they are in need of just such a stimulant to their failing business as he and they determine to secure him at any cost. Mason leaves prison with the intention of reforming, but the band's offer is so inviting that he accepts, studies its system, and suggests a few radical changes. The men follow his advice, and send out circulars explaining a most enticing and apparently legal method of investment. Answers flock in with every mail. One woman leaves for the city where Mason meets her at the train and accompanies her to the office where she buys a block of the worthless stock. While seated alone in the private office with Mason she notices the photograph in his watch case. Her motherly interest when she learns that it is a picture of his dead mother awakens Mason's conscience. He appeals to his partners to give up their share of the money and allow him to return it, but they refuse. Determined to refund Mrs. Lewis' money, Mason compels his partners to follow his command at the point of a pistol. He visits Mrs. Lewis, and confesses the deception worked on her, returning the money. The sympathetic old lady urges Mason to accept a reward, but he refuses. He is about to buy a ticket at the railroad station when he discovers that he has no money in his wallet, but finds a few bills tucked into his vest pocket. Knowing that these must have have been put there by Mrs. Lewis he encloses them in an envelope, and leaves it with the station agent to be returned to her. Waiting a moment for a train city-bound to pass Mason follows in its wake—on foot, the possessor of nothing but a good suit of clothes and a clear conscience. C.R.C.

The Poor Little Rich Boy—Mayo.—Billy had been brought up in seclusion and luxury, but longs to be a real boy and mingle with the other youngsters. When the other boys play ball, they refuse to have him in either team, as he cannot play, but they allow him to umpire. He makes a false decision at first base and becomes mixed up in a fight, but is rescued by a little girl, whom he greatly admires. The captain of one of the teams knocks a home run a moment later and the girl at once forgets all about Billy. That night he dreams that he is a professional ball player and sees

A World Without Men — (Three Reels).—Three sisters agree to wage war on any man who makes advances to them and remain firm in their determination until each meets the right man. They quickly forget that they are man-haters when marriage is proposed. A complete review of this subject will be found on page 601 of this issue.

Perils of Pauline — (Two Reels) — Episode 16.—Harry is camping in the mountains and Owen attempts to poison the candy which Pauline has on her table. She visits Harry and is taken sick at his cabin. She recovers and goes rowing and is almost drowned, but is saved by Harry, who drives a motorcycle off a bridge into the water in order to reach her in time. A complete review will be found on page 601, this issue.

Whiffles Has a Toothache.—Whiffles tooth bothers him, but his boss refuses to let him go to the dentist. He pushes the hands of the office clock ahead, but is caught in the act and has to wait until quitting time. When he reaches the dentist's office, that worthy has to keep a social appointment and, after waiting sometime, Whiffles tries to leave but finds he is locked in. He climbs out the window and drops into the arms of two policemen. After spending a night of suffering in jail, he is released when the dentist identifies him in the morning. He is late for work and has an altercation with his manager, who knocks his tooth out. He loses his job, but is happy, because he also lost the tooth.

A Soldier's Duty.—Count Eric Konovitz, a military attache of Straussburg, is sent on a dangerous mission. Arriving at his destination, he lays plans to attend the court ball where he is to meet Chamberlain Von Thiel, who is to assist him in his operations. He meets Threse, Von Thiel's daughter and they are attracted to each other. A hunting party gives the count an opportunity to study the forts. His presence at the chamberlain's home arouses suspicion. Attracted by Threse's charms he neglects his duty for sometime, but eventually secures the plans of the forts. War is imminent and his superiors demand the information at once. He disguises himself as a peasant and takes lodging in the home of a friend of Threse's. The girl has fallen in love with him and tells him of a flume which leads to a military bridge. That night he allows himself to be carried down the flume and blows up the bridge. The next morning Threse receives a note which he sent to her, telling her that he was forced by honor to subordinate his own love to that of his country. During the day his lifeless body is found floating in the river.

Old Fogey—(Three Parts)—Ezra receives tickets to a circus from his employer and it recalls to his mind an experience of his early youth when he attended a similar performance, taking with him the girl he loved. The ringmaster, an unscrupulous man, attracts the girl and she insists upon meeting him after the show. The next day Ezra receives a note from Alva, the girl, saying that she was going away with the circus man and he never saw her again. During the performance he recognizes the woman lion tamer as Alva and learns from her the story of the ringmaster's ill-treatment and neglect. Alva still loves the man, however, despite the fact that his attentions are now given to another woman. Ezra invites her to a restaurant and there they see the ringmaster with the woman he now courts. Despite this fact the man forces her to use Ezra as a means of securing $10,000. Ezra takes the money from his employer and shortly after learns of her perfidy. He hurries to the circus grounds, just as the lions escape from their cage. Alva and the ringmaster quarrel and his pistol is discharged, the bullet killing the other woman. The ringmaster flees in terror and falls victim to the claws of one of the lions. Alva, filled with remorse returns the $10,000 to Ezra in time to save him from disgrace.

The Broken Promise—Eclectic (four reels).—Inge, an orphan employed in the household of a well-to-do fisherman, is loved by Jan, the fisherman's son. Later Jan is persuaded to join a band of smugglers and narrowly escapes with the assistance of Inge, from revenue men. To save himself from ruin, Jan's father compels his son to marry the village magistrate's daughter and Inge is turned out of fisherman's house when her baby is born. Inge, for revenge, reveals Jan's smuggling to revenue men, but later repents and saves Jan on his wedding day. They escape in a small boat, but Jan is shot down and the boat sunk with both the girl and her betrayer. See review on page 550, issue of October 24.

General Special

"413"—Vitagraph — (Three Reels).—Baron Barcellos a nobleman smuggler, meets Elaine, daughter of Mr. Hall a wealthy diamond merchant on board an ocean liner while returning from Europe. Tina, an adventuress who loves the baron, is also on board. Raymond Davis, a wealthy clubman, secretly connected with secret service, searches Barcellos' person and baggage, but fails to find the jewels. At the dock, the baron again meets the Halls, and accepts an invitation to their home. He then meets "413" head of an American smuggling band, who takes the diamonds and gives him his pay. Meantime, Davis, who is Elaine's sweetheart, takes her home and they become engaged. Her father learns of the bethrothal just as the baron calls at his office and asks him if he may court Elaine. Before dinner that evening Tina, acting under the baron's instructions, places Davis in a bad light, and Elaine breaks her engagement to him. Davis follows the baron as he suspects him of the plot. Barcellos accuses Hall of being "413" and attempts to force the engagement of Elaine and himself. Tina confesses to Elaine her part of the plot, and the girl with police officers arrives at the offices just as "413" is about to shoot Davis. The baron is also in the room and is taken into custody, but "413" escapes. A thrilling pursuit of "413" takes place by the police officers, an automobile and train being used. A crashing climax occurs as the train dashes from the rails and is smashed to splinters. Elaine and Davis arrive just as "413" is dragged from the wreckage, and sees that it is her father.

The Win(k)some Widow—Vitagraph —(Four Reels)—The "Winsome Widow" musical comedy company is on the verge of ruin when Cutey, the press agent, learns that Cissy Fitzgerald, the musical comedy star famous for her winks, is soon to arrive in New York. She is added to the company, and success at once comes their way. All of the company's male members and a wealthy clubman lose their hearts to her, and each proposes to her, offering her a ring and some kind of an animal. She plans a supper after a show one evening, but her husband arrives before she can warn her expected suitors. All are forced to disguise themselves as servants, but they make such a mess of cooking, that the neighborhood calls the fire department, and this gives the would-be-lovers a chance to escape. Cissy and her husband are left alone with the numerous animal pets her suitors gave her.

Threads of Destiny — Lubin—(Five Reels).—Ivan Russak, chief of the secret police of Russia, attempts to force his attentions upon Marian, whose father he has sent to Siberia. An uprising of the Jews takes place and Marian, together with her cousin and sweetheart escape to America, where she marries a Western rancher. Eight years later Ivan visits Marian's husband, who is his cousin, and again attempts to secure Marian for himself, but meets his death in so doing. A complete review will be found on page 585, this issue.

The Weight of a Crown—Lubin—(Three Reels). — Prince Rupert of Darinia meets Olga, a dancer. Her father is the leader of a band of revolutionists and she is selected as the one to kill the prince. Because of her love for the ruler, however, she cannot force herself to kill him and becomes his morganatic wife. For a time they are happy, but when war threatens, Prince Rupert and Princess of Marne are married and Olga is deserted. Time passes. Olga's son is five years old and Rupert's boy is four. The revolutionists are determined to do away with the ruler and await the appearance of Rupert on his balcony. Olga's child is secured by the soldiers, dressed in royal garments and sent out upon the balcony with another man. The revolutionists believe the man and little boy to be Rupert and his son and kill both of them. Olga, frantic with grief, rushes to the scenes of the shooting and Rupert sees that it is his own son who has been killed. Another anarchist fires at Rupert but the bullet strikes Olga and she dies in his arms. The prince has left with the princess and his royal offspring, but his thoughts are of Olga and their child, whose lives were sacrificed.

When Lions Escape — Columbus (Three Reels) October 26.—Edward Strong marries Margaret the lion tamer, who has perfect control over the beasts, and she brings several of them to her home as pets. Every year she exercises her wonderful power over the animals at a special entertainment given to her friends. On one of these occasions, Brandon and Tuthill, explorers, are present. Brandon cheats Strong during a game of cards and the latter discovers his trick. He agrees not to expose him, if he promises to lose the money to him the same evening. Tuthill suffers a stroke and is removed to a room in the house. The doctor warns Strong and the guests that if he is excited he will lose his mind. Brandon sees a chance to even his score with Strong ,and drives Tuthill mad. He then tells him to tie

Strong in the room and release the lions. Strong comes to see Tuthill, and the explorer, who is now insane, ties him to the bed post and frees the lions from their cages. Margaret misses her husband and discovers his predicament. Their child is also in danger and the mother's first thought is of her. After rescuing the baby she is assisted by the other guests, who free Strong and drive the lions toward their cages with the aid of pistols. They discover Tuthill, who has regained his right mind, and learn from him the story of Brandon's treachery. They then set out to find the villainous explorer, but the lions have come upon him and his plot of vengeance has acted as a boomerang and destroyed him.

The Power of the Press—Klaw & Erlanger-Biograph (Four Parts)—Steve Carson, foreman of a shipping yard, serving a sentence of five years in prison through the perjured testimony of the real criminal, becomes friendly with Harold Norwood, a defaulting paying teller, who is his cell mate. Steve's wife, Annie, is befriended by Julia Seymour, prima donna, who is Norwood's wife. The men are released from prison on Christmas morning as a reward for good behavior. Annie is bewildered by the receipt of a bank book which shows that a large deposit of gold has been made in her name and that of her sister, Mary, by their uncle, George Horsford, who, dying in Alaska, entrusted the book to Joe Hawes, a fellow prospector. Hawes comes to New York, meets Turner Morgan, Steve's predecessor as foreman of the shipping yard, who bears Carson a lasting grudge and who has fastened upon him the crime for which he was sent to prison. Morgan tried to get the money, but failed and lost the book. Anstey, a cub reporter on a daily paper, gets wind of the case and by clever work discovers the truth. In his story, through "the power of the press," Steve is vindicated and Morgan's infamy is put before the world, after his counterfeiting den is raided by the police.

Paramount

The Country Chairman—Famous Players (Four Reels) October 19.—Jim Hackler and Elias Rigby, boyhood friends and civil war veterans are now bitter enemies. Both had loved the same girl, and she had favored Jim, but through Rigby's underhand tricks, while both were in the army, he had won her away from his rival, and the latter had never forgiven him. In order to defeat Rigby for prosecuting attorney, Hackler storms the convention of his party, and secures the nomination for Wheeler, Rigby's junior law partner. Wheeler is engaged to Rigby's daughter Lucy, and does not desire the nomination, but is forced to accept it. However, he makes no personal fight against her father until Rigby attacks him; he then denounces his opponent and Lucy breaks their engagement. Hackler discovers that Rigby is a thief, but at the request of the woman he formerly loved he keeps the matter a secret, but so manipulates political wires that Wheeler is elected. Hackler then manages to bring Lucy and Wheeler together, and is satisfied that he has evened his score with Rigby.

His Last Dollar—Famous Players (Four Reels) October 29.—Joe Braxton has climbed from a "newsie" of the slums, through the ranks of the jockies, to a millionaire ranch owner in the West. He decides to retire and take life easy, and returns East, where he becomes the catch of the season in society circles. Mrs. Grayson manages to have him propose and be accepted by her daughter Viola, who is in love with Tom Linson, a schemer. Linson plans to ruin Braxton and when the latter befriends him and sends him to Colonel Downes, a southern friend, he tries to induce Eleanor the colonel's daughter to elope with him, as a foundation for his plans. The girl at first agrees, but later changes her mind. Linson returns to New York and induces Braxton to speculate, hoping to ruin him. Colonel Downes loses his entire fortune and sends Eleanor East to enter their horse "Mongrel" in the great Futurity Race. Eleanor and Braxton meet and fall in love, and he wagers the remainder of his fortune on "Mongrel." Eleanor learns of the plot to ruin Braxton in the stock market and though Linson threatens to ruin her reputation with the story of their proposed elopment, she warns the man she now loves. It is too late, however, and Braxton loses all that he risked, so that his entire fortune is now staked on the race. Linson tries to foul "Mongrel," but the jockey is loyal to his enterprise and gamely fights many obstacles and wins the race, saving Braxton from ruin. Eleanor and Braxton then decide to be married and leave the East.

Syndicate

Million Dollar Mystery—(Episode 19) Thanhouser—Oct. 26.—Florence Gray enters an underground cavern in which the conspirators are meeting and there obtains a document which will relieve millionaire Hargreaves from further persecution. After obtaining it she escapes by swimming in an underground stream, pursued by Braine and others of the conspirators and is eventually rescued by Jimmy Norton, who has seen her struggle from the shore. See review on another page of this issue.

Warners

The Adventures of Kitty Cobb—Special—(Four Reels).—The film version of James Montgomery Flagg's creation. Kitty comes to the city, and her adventures lead her through many dangers, until she finally marries Bob Caldecott. A complete review will be found on page 487 of the October 10th issue of Motography.

The Arrow's Tongue—Miller Bros. 101 Ranch—(Two Reels).—An old man plowing in a field discovers a skull and crossbones and his mind wanders back to the days when the Indians were uncivilized. He sees a terrific battle taking place before him and recalls the incidents which led up to it. See review on page 435, issue of September 26th.

World

When Broadway Was a Trail—Shubert—(Five Reels)—Oct. 26.—Henry Minuet, the son of the Governor of New Amsterdam, comes to Danvars, Mass., to buy grain for the helpless colony he represents. He meets Priscilla Elliott, daughter of the physician of Danvars, and they fall in love, though they do not speak the same language. Priscilla is sought by Salvation Hibbins, but she dislikes him, because he is helpless away from his mother's "apron strings." When her father dies, Salvation's mother tries to force Priscilla to marry her son. Failing she declares the girl a witch and when Henry defends her, both are cast A messenger comes from New Amsterdam to learn what is keeping Henry and the Governor of Danvars orders Henry set free, but he has escaped in the meantime. Because of his escape the governor informs the Dutch messenger that he will have nothing to do with his colony. The soldiers capture Henry while Priscilla is away, but he manages to send her to his home in New Amsterdam. Henry is released and also starts for home. On the way he meets Priscilla, who had not been welcomed by his parents, because they wished Henry to marry a girl in their own colony. The lovers decide to live apart from all their false friends, as they know the forest welcomes them.

Miscellaneous

The Long Arm of the Law—I. S. P. Company—(Four Reels)—By a clever ruse "Bat" Henry and three confederates secure the jewels of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Warren, and leave no trace as to their identity. Cecil Douglas, a clubman, wagers $10,000 with a friend that he will produce the pearls within one week. He secures a countess to assist him, and lures Henry and a woman accomplice into a trap, but they escape. He follows and corners them in their apartments, but they press a button, and he drops into a pit below. By setting fire to the flooring, he is rescued by firemen. Using an aeroplane, he overtakes the fugitives, who are fleeing in an automobile. They manage to slip into their country home, however, but after a pistol battle, he again forces them into the open and another pursuit takes place, ending with a battle between Douglas and Henry in the river, in which the clubman is victor. He secures the pearls in time to win the bet, and turns the thief over to the police.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, Motography has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

The Thanhouser Three-a-Week

Following are the Thanhouser releases for the current week. These releases are distributed exclusively in the United States and Canada by the Mutual Film Corporation.

Tuesday, November 3rd, "The Turning of the Road" (two reels). This is a powerful drama of society life. It portrays the actions of a band of thieves who work among the best society. A member of the band—Della Fletcher—is the character around which the plot revolves. Her stealing of the gems and her ultimate reformation and marriage to a handsome rector form a basis for many tense scenes. She is led by love out of the shadows into the light and the turning of a new road. The cast includes Muriel Ostriche, Frank Woods, John Reinhard, Ethyle Cook, Ernest Ward, Carey Hastings, Arthur Bauer, Perry Horton.

Sunday, November 8th, "Keeping a Husband" (one reel). A decidedly clever drama of home life, showing how a wife's strategy makes it possible for her to retain her husband's love in spite of severe temptations. This photoplay is very capably enacted by Muriel Ostriche, Carey L. Hastings and Ernest C. Ward.

The Saxe Amusement Enterprises

By Clarance J. Caine

ELEVEN years after its first venture in the motion picture business the Saxe Amusement Enterprises of Milwaukee, controlled by the four Saxe brothers, holds a position in the front ranks of the progressive exhibitors of the middle west, playing to more than 30,000 people daily.

In 1903 Thomas Saxe left the employ of a railroad company to start a dime museum on Grand avenue, the business thoroughfare of Milwaukee, and met with immediate success. A short time later there was a demand for a motion picture house in the Cream City and, assisted by his brother John, Mr. Saxe secured a small house near the museum and ran scenic pictures which were called "Hale's Tour of the World." When the producers discovered that real dramas and comedies could be made into screen subjects the Saxe brothers secured another small theater a few blocks from the one they already controlled and named it the Lyric, where they presented all the dramatic subjects which could be secured.

Alhambra theater, Milwaukee.

The public began to realize that the "pictures" were not a mere novelty and as the demand for that style of entertainment became greater the Orpheum Theatorium and Princess, all downtown houses, and the Mojeska on the south side of the city, were added to the list. Other interests, outside of the motion picture field were also added about this time and Thomas and John found that they needed the assistance of their other brothers, Frank and William, so the latter pair gave up their positions and the four devoted all their time to the new work.

Minneapolis offered a new field to them so William was sent to that city and at once began activities. The Lyric theater, in the heart of the Minnesota metropolis, was secured by them and opened as a motion picture house and soon the Bijou was added to their string and used as a home for their own stock company.

The Alhambra theater in Milwaukee was the next acquired, this house being the largest in the Wisconsin city. When they announced their intention of devoting it entirely to motion pictures the theatrical men, who were certain they "knew the game," smiled and predicted three months as the limit of its existence. However the judgment of the hustling Saxes was again upheld and the Alhambra proved by far the most successful undertaking of all. A few months after this house had been taken over they opened a theater in St. Joseph, Mo., which was known as Saxe's Orpheum.

The Star theater in Milwaukee was leased by them the following year, the name changed to Saxe and their own stock company installed. Soon the Juneau, also in Milwaukee was placed under the Saxe management and the St. Joseph house dropped from the list. The Orpheum was torn down to make room for a department store and the Lyric also passed out of existence. The Crystal, located near the Theatorium, was secured and devoted to vaudeville and the name of the Saxe theater was changed to Orpheum, a mixed program of pictures and vaudeville supplanting the stock company. A house in Peoria, Ill., was also added to the list and turned into a vaudeville theater and another picture theater was built in Minneapolis, named the Saxe. At the present time eight picture theaters and three vaudeville houses are controlled by the Saxe Amusement Enterprises.

The Alhambra theater on Grand Avenue, Milwaukee, is probably one of the largest houses in the country devoted to pictures. It is 100 by 150 feet in size and has a seating capacity of 3,000. It was taken over by the Saxes in 1910 and used General Film service until recently, when Paramount was installed. Three changes are made weekly, on Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday.

Close upon the heels of the Alhambra comes the Saxe theater in Minneapolis, which was opened on September 15. This house was built by the Saxe Amusement Enterprises at a cost of $150,000. It has a front footage of 50 feet and is 150 feet deep. The main floor seats 1,000 persons and the balcony 500. Paramount and other features are used, the program being changed on the same days as the Alhambra. A large pipe organ, supplied by the Wagnerin-Weichardt Organ Company of Milwaukee, is a prominent feature of this house.

The Orpheum in Milwaukee, with a mixed vaudeville and picture program, is the third theater in size, its seating capacity being 1,450. This house, which is 40 by 100 feet, was taken over by the Saxe brothers in 1912 and remodeled at a cost of $45,000. A double program is used daily, four pictures and four vaudeville acts being run from eleven o'clock in the morning until five in the afternoon and four more of each variety showing from that time until eleven in the evening. The programs reverse places on Thursday and new acts and pictures are booked every week. General Film service is used.

The Lyric on the corner of Eighth and Hennepin, Minneapolis, seats 1,400 people. General Film, regular and special service, is used, the program changing every Sunday and Thursday. The Saxe brothers secured this house in 1912 and spent $15,000 remodeling it. It is 150 feet deep and has a front footage of 60 feet. The Juneau, in the center of Milwaukee's south side business district, is about the same size as the Lyric. It was secured in 1913. Four reels of General service are used daily, with occasional features from the same source.

The Princess, in Milwaukee's downtown section, and the Mojeska, near the Juneau on the south side, are also twin houses, each being about 50 by 150 feet, and seating 1,000. The former has been using General service entirely but recently installed the Brady and Shubert productions released by the World Film Corporation, changing pictures daily and using General service to round out the program of four reels a day. The latter house uses General features and program releases. The Princess was built in 1910 at a cost of $48,000 and the Mojeska was erected the same year, its cost being $40,000. The Theatorium, also located on Grand avenue, Milwaukee, is the smallest house under Saxe management and also one of the first secured by them. It was entirely remodeled in 1906, $8,000 being spent to improve it at that time. The General program is used in this theater and changes daily. It has a seating capacity of 500 and is 60 feet deep and 20 feet wide.

The enormous expense attached to operating an enterprise of this kind is perhaps best illustrated by the amount spent for film rental. Approximately $3,125 per week is paid out for this alone. This means $12,500 per month or $150,000 per year. In addition to this there is the weekly payroll of $8,000, and incidental expenses connected with the operation of the various houses too numerous to mention.

Much care is used in selecting furnishings for the houses. Equipment is generally purchased from certain firms who supply all that is needed in their particular line for all the theaters under the management of the Saxe Amusement Enterprises. The Precision Machine Company supplies Simplex projection machines; Charles L. Kiewert, Milwaukee, the carbons; the Wisconsin Seating Company of New London, Wisconsin, the seats; the Decorators' Supply Company of Chicago the interior and exterior decorations; the National Blower Works of Milwaukee, the ventilation systems and the Chicago Pipe Organ Company, the organs. The screens and stage decorations are handled by Howard Tuttle, an artist employed by the Saxe brothers, and Ed Weisfeldt manufactures the frames. Thompson lamps are used.

Much of the success gained by the Saxe Amusement Enterprises is due to the perfect system of management which has always existed. John Saxe, the oldest of the brothers, is the president of the firm and Thomas Saxe the secretary. The executive offices are in the Crystal Theater building, Milwaukee, and from here all orders pertaining to the various interests of the firm are issued. About 800 people are employed in the various offices, lunch rooms and theaters under Modjeska theater, Milwaukee.

Saxe management and these are divided into groups or departments, each of which has a manager. The managers of the picture theaters have a conference every Wednesday, at which all suggestions for improvement are threshed out and action taken upon them. The heads of the various lunch rooms owned by this firm also get together on certain occasions. A machine and scenic department and utility workshop are also kept ready for use at any time the managers of the theaters should be in need of any mechanical help, and the advertising department under the management of George Pendergast has a complete printing equipment owned by the firm at its disposal, to prepare display advertising.

All the films are selected by Frank Cook, general manager of the motion picture houses and manager of the Princess theater, and his assistant, George Fischer, manager of the Alhambra theater. Prosper Schwie, who has charge of the Lyric in Minneapolis, and Samuel Robinson, manager of the Saxe in the same city, keep in touch with the Milwaukee office of the company at all times and receive full reports of the meetings which take place there and offer their suggestions by mail. Walter Wright, Jr., auditor of the firm has charge of all financial business. All the interests are in close touch with the executive offices and the entire organization co-operates in perfect harmony.

Despite the many successful houses they now control the Saxe brothers are not yet content and plan even greater things for the future. Plans are now nearing completion for a fourteen-story office and theater building on one of the main business streets of Milwaukee which it is estimated will cost in the neighborhood of $1,000,000 and many new restaurants and theaters are under consideration for, to men of this type, there is nothing too great to be attempted and once a thing is within their grasp they never fail to make a success of it.

Edison's "A Moment of Madness"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

THOUGH not a drama of society life, Edison's "A Moment of Madness" nevertheless merits a place among the de luxe class. Refined, well-dressed characters and the environments which one would associate with such people figure prominently in the story's delineation, and put a charming edge on what, under different treatment than Director West's, might have become a conventional one-reel drama propelled by the oft-used triangle. The picture will be released November 7.

The cast is admirably selected, and the manner in which they play their parts is pleasing and convincing. The story is not so deeply dramatic that it actually needs touches of light comedy to relieve the tension, still the cabin scene between Aldridge and Inez Hall, in which the former makes various attempts to get away from Inez without appearing to be anxious to do so, comes as an amusing diversion and quickens the interest.

As the central figure of the action and the innocent cause of a jealous girl's "moment of madness" Edward

The girls discuss their love affair in Edison's "A Moment of Madness"

Earle is as much a favorite with the spectator as he is with the remainder of the cast in the character of Robert Aldridge. Gertrude McCoy's role as Rita Willis does not offer her much opportunity to display her versatility, but she makes the most of an important, though not active, part. Kate Jordan completes the triangle in the insanely jealous Inez Hall, and she is to be commended on the cleverness with which she plays a difficult part without overdoing it. The work of the supporting cast is in perfect harmony with that of the principals.

Inez Hall pays an extended visit to her friend, Rita Willis, and the girls get along famously until Inez meets Rita's fiance, Robert Aldridge. She falls in love with him at first glance, but receives no encouragement from Aldridge, who is at a loss to understand this queer girl that insists on breaking in on his tete-a-tetes with Miss Willis, and uses every artifice to see him alone or draw him into private conversation.

Inez, naturally, is angered by the miserable failure of her attempts to gain Aldridge's attentions, and queerly enough, the object of her anger is not the young man who has aroused it by spurning her, but Rita, her friend. On several occasions Aldridge's lack of interest in her is so obvious that were she not blind in her love she would see that he, alone, is to blame, if the term "blame" be allowed. One of these occasions is Aldridge's refusal of Inez' invitation to take a walk, on the plea of being indisposed. Immediately afterward Rita comes out of the house, sees Aldridge, and asks him if he would care to walk around the grounds. He accepts gladly and the couple walk off, leaving Inez standing at the foot of the steps chagrined at her failure, and feeling more resentful than ever towards her fortunate chum.

Aldridge invites the Willis family for a trip in his yacht, and Inez, being a guest, is included in the invitation. Once aboard the yacht she continues to besiege Robert with her attentions, but he has time only for Rita, who is unaware of the embarrassing positions into which her chum is placing her lover.

Inez is unshaken in her belief that could she only see Aldridge alone for a short time she could charm him and he would be willing to forget Rita. To this end she corners him in the cabin while the rest of the party are out on deck, but he escapes at the first opportunity, and when Inez later mounts to the deck she discovers Aldridge and Rita talking and laughing together.

Goaded by jealousy she steals up behind the couple, cuts the guard-rope, and pushes Rita overboard. In doing so she slips and falls into the water herself. Aldridge dives in after Rita and rescues her, but the deck-hand who tries to save Inez reaches her too late.

Gifts from Australia to Mary Pickford

It was in the middle of a scene from "The Step-sisters," in the Famous Players studio, that the presentation of a silver loving-cup and a book containing thousands of autographs of Australian "Mary" fans, was made to Mary Pickford. And up to within a few minutes of the presentation it was all a wonderful surprise to the girl whose work brought her this expression of admiration from the people of Sydney, Australia. There were orchids, too, as part of the gift; and orchids are Mary's favorites of all flowers.

Director James Kirkwood had just expressed approval of the kiss Owen Moore had bestowed on the back of Mary's hand, when Daniel Frohman stepped into the scene and commanded a pause. Mary descended the throne-steps and trailed her princess gown to within five feet of the camera and there Mr. Frohman introduced Mr. and Mrs. Millard Johnson of Sydney, Australia, who had the pleasure of presenting Mary with an armful of orchids, the loving-cup and the book autographed by the "Mary" fans.

"I-I'm overwhelmed," faltered Mary, and somebody brought a pedestal for the cup. Director Kirkwood decided to make a motion-picture of the presentation, so Mary relinquished the cup and book but held the flowers close to her while Mr. Frohmann made a pleasing little introduction speech and Mr.

Interrupting a scene in Famous Players studio to present Mary Pickford with the silver loving cup from the film fans of Australia.

Johnson followed with a message from the people of Australia.

"Your 'Tess of the Storm Country' was the inspiration for this little occasion," Mr. Johnson addressed Mary. "And it was the patrons of the Greater J. D. Williams Amusement Company, who contributed the 13,651½ Australian pennies toward the purchase of the cup and who walked up to the desk in front of the Palace theater and signed their names in this book. They did it because they felt they were directly expressing their admiration to you. Each penny and each name were in the way of a personal tribute to you —Mary Pickford."

Mary smiled, but it was a tear-laden smile and from the bottom of her heart came the words, "Tell the people of Australia they have made me the happiest girl in America," and then, looking into the camera she said, "I send my love to you, Australia." And nobody is quite sure whether she stopped right there because her voice also became tear-laden, or because she had said her all. Anyway, the operator stopped operating and those who had gathered into the space behind the camera where a big sign read, "No outsiders allowed in this space," came forth and read the inscription on the cup and the one on the book. The latter bore the official seal of the city of Sydney, the signature of the lord mayor of Sydney and the attestation of the town clerk. Neither seal nor signatures had ever before been used for a like purpose.

On the fly-leaf of the book are the words:

"Art is universal, human sympathy international, genius, the property of the world. Your 'Tess,' Mary, is ours. She will live long in our hearts—we love you for her."

As Mary, her orchids in one arm and her court train over the other, picked her way over the various stage properties, in the wake of the cup-and-book bearer, she remarked, "I don't know why I said 'the happiest girl in America,' for I'm sure no girl in Europe either could be any happier than I am, right now."

And to the people of Sydney will go the film showing the presentation of their gifts to the Mary they love.

Standard Officers Elected

At a four day session of exchangemen representing every section of the United States, which opened October 13 and closed October 16, at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, the officers of the recently incorporated Standard Program Association were elected. Joseph Hopp of Chicago was chosen as president, Dan Markowitz of Los Angeles, Calif., vice-president, E. T. Peters, Dallas, Tex., secretary and Sam Werner, St. Louis, Mo., treasurer.

Five of the seven members of the board of directors were elected, the four officers and Nelson Evans, Cleveland, being chosen for these positions. The other two members will be appointed at a later date. The object of the Standard Program Association will be to distribute films selected by another corporation which is now being formed and which will secure the films from the manufacturer. The brands to be included in the new enterprise have not been definitely decided upon as yet, though several contracts are pending.

Quality, service and publicity are the things which have been chosen as standards by the new firm and within a few weeks it expects to be able to announce its first release for the benefit of the many exhibitors throughout the country who have been interested in watching for its formation.

American's "The Ruin of Manley"

Reviewed by Neil C. Caward

IN "The Ruin of Manley" its multiple reel release of Monday, November 2, the American Film Manufacturing Company offers a surprisingly interesting little love story, woven against a topical background of pigeon farming and a cloudburst that all but destroys a western city.

The little tale of the young man who appeared shiftless and good for nothing, while forced to perform daily tasks in which he was not interested, but who underwent a startling metamorphosis when given a chance to undertake work which he really liked, and of how his love for a pretty girl eventually helped him to win success in life is trite, indeed, but when the story has for its background a pigeon farm, and the action of the piece takes place amid thousands and thousands of fluttering pigeons, when the story in another part presents the flood which wiped out a whole section of a city and shows the utter destruction, not only of the pigeon farm, but also of a vast amount of other property, then, indeed, it is unusual. All this and more takes place in "The Ruin of Manley" and exhibitors will find the two-reel feature a most acceptable offering.

Manley obtains a job on the poultry farm.

At the opening of the story we learn that both the mother and father of Mary, whom Manley loves, agree that the boy is worthless and no account. In fact the boy himself is almost inclined to believe the accusation true, for he simply cannot interest himself in the drudgery of farming. His day's work over, he returns home to tend some pigeons he has started to raise and in this task finds supreme happiness. When matters between Mary and himself reach a crisis, and he is forbidden by her father to see her again, until he has proven himself a success in the world, Manley kisses his sister good bye and journeys forth into the world to seek his fortune.

A glimpse of the poultry farm.

Stopping at a large poultry form, the owner of which looks kindly, Manley obtains a job, and some days later when the owner of the poultry farm has learned of Manley's love for pigeons, an offer is made to set Manley up in the business of pigeon farming. The boy gratefully accepts the offer and within a few months is the owner of millions of pigeons and already counts himself a big success in the world.

Success achieved, Manley decides to return home for Mary. He is warmly greeted by all and sold a piece of land along the river front by a rival for the hand of Mary. This land it happens is threatened with inundation each spring, when the river overruns its banks, but of this fact Manley is ignorant when he makes the purchase. Manley erects his pigeon cote and soon is so prosperous that he and Mary are planning for their wedding. One day shortly afterward the farmer who has started Manley on his career called, with his wife, and Manley was showing them about the farm. As host, Manley offered an old suit of his to the visitor, when the latter's clothing was accidentally soiled, and when Mary chanced upon the scene a short time later and beheld a man, in Manley's familiar suit, embracing a strange woman, she jumped to the conclusion that it was Manley. Immediately she grew angry and without giving Manley a chance to explain matters, packed up some things and went to visit friends in another city.

Manley returns to claim Mary.

The coming of spring, with its attendant floods, resulted in the river overrunning its banks, and whole sections of the city being inundated. Among the spots to suffer was the land on which Manley's pigeon farm was located. This part of the picture is remarkably vivid, for one sees the long, rambling pigeoncote slide into the swiftly rushing stream, right before his eyes, and beholds the millions of pigeons either being swept away by the flood, or fluttering away to alight on such chance resting places as they can find. Utterly crushed in spirit and despondent, Manley is about to give up, when a thought of the taunts which he will have to endure from Mary's parents causes him to set his upper lip and resolve to begin all over again.

In the distant city Mary has learned of the destruction wrought by the flood, and also received a letter which fully explains the matter of the changed suits and conclusive evidence that it was not Manley she saw embracing the strange woman. Knowing, therefore, that she has done Manley a severe injustice. Mary returns to beg forgiveness and help him begin life anew.

First Subjects by Holland Company

Three months ago work was commenced on the studio of the Holland Film Manufacturing Company, Dorchester, Mass., and today that company is not only working in the plant but has already produced three subjects. Captain Herbert H. B. Holland, the man who conceived the idea which led to the formation of the company, is best known to the film world through his production of "Evangeline," the subject which was handled in such masterful style that it received world wide attention.

Miss Maude Fealy, the leading lady of the Holland films is known to picture "fans" in all parts of the country, her splendid work in several feature pictures recently released having endeared her to patrons of the picture houses. She is an actress of remarkable versatility and has had much experience on the legitimate stage. Tom McEvoy, playing the male leads opposite Miss Fealy, is a comparative newcomer in the picture field, but his wonderful facial power and his ability to give each character he undertakes a distinct personality is certain to make him popular.

Three subjects have already been completed by the Holland Company. "Mary Jane's Burglar," "The Vanishing Cinderella" and "It Might Have Been Worse" are the films which are now ready for release. All are in one reel. Two more productions, "Norah Declares War" and "The Girl From Tim's Place," the former also a single reel film and the latter a two-reel adaptation from the famous novel by the same name by Charles Clark Munn, are now under way.

The medium through which the new concern will release has not been announced as yet, though a decision in this matter is expected within the next two weeks. One company is busy working the Maine woods while the home company in the studio is turning out two subjects a week. The plan of the organization is to give the exhibitor a better class of picture, the comedies, which will be released alternately with comedy-dramas, being of an especially high standard.

War Tax Bill Echo

In a recent letter to Motography, Fulton Brylawski, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the District of Columbia, gives his views of the war tax bill which was signed by President Wilson last Thursday. His letter reads as follows:

Congress has passed the War Tax Bill relating to theaters and has changed the scale as passed by the Senate slightly, so that the new scale is as follows:

Theaters with a seating capacity of 250 or less, $25; more than 250 and less than 500, $50; more than 500 and less than 800, $75; over 800, $100.

Of course this is a little more oppressive than the scale adopted by the Senate, but will nevertheless be an enormous saving to the motion picture exhibitors throughout the United States.

I wish to thank Motography for the stand taken by them and the support given our efforts for the reduction of the oppressive tax as contained in the House bill. I have, as you know, been subjected to no little criticism for the graded scale which I proposed, and which has been substantially adopted, for the reason that certain exhibitors and associations thought even this tax too high. Personally, of course I should have been very glad to have had the tax reduced to a minimum or even altogether abolished, but both of these were impossible of accomplishment. The graded tax which I succeeded in having adopted was not hastily considered by me despite the very brief time in which I had to prepare same, but was the result of very careful consideration and deliberations with a great many members of the United States Senate, particularly the members of the Senate finance committee which had the matter in charge, as being the only substitute which we had a chance of having adopted. I believe that insistence on anything materially less would have resulted in a total defeat of our efforts.

I hope that in the future matters affecting the interests of exhibitors in general throughout the country may receive their united and not their divided support.

Very sincerely yours,

Fulton Brylawski.

Preparing for New Serial

"The Master Key," written by John Fleming Wilson, himself a soldier of fortune and the hero of a score of battles, shipwrecks and kindred adventures, and produced under the direction of Robert Leonard, with himself in the lead and supported by Ella Hall, promises to be one of the most sensational serial hits ever put out under the Universal banner.

Resolved to spare no time, money nor pains to ensure its success, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company started a force of men to work under an expert to erect buildings, shutes, ore dumps and set up machinery and everything necessary to a modern mining camp three weeks before the picture was to be started. From a true-to-life standpoint, the setting is a masterpiece, perfect in every detail.

Wilfred Lucas and his Gold Seal-Universal company are rapidly nearing the end of the "Trey o' Hearts" series and Louis Joseph Vance, the author, has returned East.

"When His Ship Came In"

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

NOT since Bessie Eyton appeared as "Helen Chester" in the massive production, "The Spoilers," has she been seen to such good advantage as in the two-part production of the Selig Polyscope Company entitled "When His Ship Came In," which is scheduled for release on November 9.

In the character of a girl raised in poverty in a little fishing village, who longs to see the world, she is very appealing and the many little human touches that she gives the part makes it so true to life that the spectator is liable to forget that he is watching the struggles of a screen heroine. Thomas Santschi gives Miss Eyton very good support as the girl's lover and Thomas Bates has the only other active part as her father.

Neptuna learns to steer the ship.

The atmosphere of the seafaring life is splendidly conveyed by the producer and all the players dress and act their characters with a thorough understanding of the type they represent. Some very pretty backgrounds are used during the entire two thousand feet and the scenes showing the ship at sea are well handled. The interior scenes aboard the vessel and in the city laundry are all that could be asked, and the photography is without serious defects. About the only fault to be found with the production is the rather impossible means used to extinguish the fire on the ship; a wave being supposed to sweep the vessel when the views of the sea fail to disclose a ripple.

The opening scenes disclose the longing of Neptuna, a beautiful girl living in the humble home of her grandfather in the little fishing village of Home Port, to see the world. Josh Rawlins, who is a member of the crew on his uncle's ship, wants to marry her, but she refuses him. However, she says she will consent when his ship comes in. Josh's uncle threatens to disinherit him if he marries Neptuna and the sailor becomes angry and quits the old man's employ. Neptuna finds a purse in a vest which has been washed up by the sea and uses the money to pay her railroad fare to the city. Josh and her grandfather are heartbroken when they find she has gone away, but a note she leaves tells them it is useless to search for her because she will never be happy in Home Port until Josh's ship comes in.

The uncle's ship sails away without Josh, and Neptuna's lover and grandfather live together in Home Port. In the city the girl finds work in a laundry, but is not happy, as she earns only enough to pay her board and room.

Time passes and one day Josh receives word from Stuben, one of his uncle's crew, telling him that the old man has died and that the ship now belongs to him. Josh is delighted, for he says when his ship comes in he will go to the city and claim Neptuna as his own. The girl loses her position in the laundry and wanders down to the wharves, as she has not enough money to pay her board bill. Josh's ship is ready to sail for Home Port with a load of dynamite and Neptuna decides to return to the men who love her and hides in the hold. Far out at sea a fire breaks out aboard the ship and the sailors, terrified at the thought of what will happen when the flames reach the dynamite, take to the boats and row away. Neptuna attempts to escape, but the smoke and flames drive her back into the hold. The fire is creeping toward the dynamite when a huge wave dashes over the side of the vessel and puts out the fire.

The strong wind carries the ship out of sight of the boats, and Neptuna, learning from a newspaper she finds aboard that the boat belongs to Josh, takes the steering wheel and exerts her entire strength in an endeavor to guide it safely to her lover at Home Port. The crew arrive in the fishing village and tell Josh that his ship was blown up at sea and the sailor is heartbroken, as he feels he has lost the only chance he has had of winning the girl he loves. His sorrow is turned to joy, however, a few days later when his ship comes into Home Port with Neptuna at the wheel and she tells him that she never cares to see the city again.

The cast for the production is as follows:

Neptuna ..... Bessie Eyton
Josh Rawlins ..... Thomas Santschi
Captain Rawlins ..... Harry Lonsdale

Screen Club Ball

Arthur Leslie, chairman of the press committee of the Screen Club, advises us that things are all set for the biggest and best ball that the famous Screen Club has ever staged. But we'll let Leslie tell you about it in his own inimitable way. He says:

"Destined to be epochal in the history of the fastest growing industry in the world will be the third annual ball of the Screen Club at the Hotel Astor on Thanksgiving Eve, November 25. It will be a herald of the future rather than an echo of the past.

"Orders for the reservation of tickets and boxes are coming in from all over the United States, from men whom the people's favorite amusement has made multi-millionaires; from photoplayers, whose faces on the screen are familiar to millions of the earth, and whose names are household words, and also from the general public, who appreciate the opportunity to mingle in the flesh with their picture idols whom hitherto they have seen only as simulacra.

"The lower tier of boxes will be sold at $75 each, and the upper tier at $50, while tickets of admission, admitting gentleman and lady, are $5 each. This year members will not be asked to place cards in an official program, thus saving them from additional expenditure. The following arrangement committee has been appointed: King Baggot, Jacob Gerhardt, George Blaisdell, William Barry, Herbert Brenon, Jules Bernstein and Joseph Farnham. It was Mr. Farnham who secured the Astor ballroom, and who is entitled to much credit for his untiring labors on behalf of the interests of the club."

Plot Deepens in Mystery Serial

In episode twenty of Thanhouser's "Million Dollar Mystery" the plot is given several new twists which are certain to mystify the fans who have been following the story. In fact, the plot during this episode is made a little too dark for the average person who attends motion picture theaters to understand, but this fact is made appealing rather than disappointing, for it promises good things to come in the remaining reels.

A new character is introduced, whose identity is not made very clear, and this is doubtless another thread which will be picked up at a future date. The finish of these two reels is very exciting, and is the style that is certain to bring a person back to see what the outcome of the events which have transpired will be.

The acting of the players continues to be meritorious and the photography and setting is all that can be desired. James Cruze and Florence LaBadie present several very human love scenes and toward the latter part of the second reel their actions are very amusing, the two becoming twisted up in yarn.

After rescuing Florence from the danger which threatened her in the previous installment, Jim brings her to the mainland in the motor boat and telephones her chauffeur. They return to her home and there she gives Jim the paper which will clear her father. He is attacked by the conspirators, led by Braine, and is knocked unconscious by them. While they are searching him in an effort to secure the paper, Jones discovers them and frightens them away.

He then helps Jim to the home of the heiress and the three discover the wording of the mysterious paper by holding it over a candle until the writing becomes visible. It instructs them to visit a certain man, who will clear Hargreaves. Jones at once leaves to see the mysterious person, and Braine, who has been spying on them through the window, follows. Jones meets the man in his office and discloses his real identity to him. All is progressing nicely, but when they leave the room for a few moments Braine enters and looks over the papers on the mysterious man's desk. In the meantime, Jim and Florence are enjoying lovers' pranks at the heiress' home. Jones and the man return to the office and find Braine. A dispute follows and Braine escapes, locking Jones and the other in the room.

"The Sorceress"

Very romantic is the story of "The Sorceress," told by Clay M. Greene, and which has made one of the most beautiful pictures that the Lubin Company have ever released. It may be called a Gypsy tale, inasmuch as it tells of the early life of a girl child consigned to a gypsy seeress by its mother, who rebels at her husband's orgies. The beautiful wife endures the atmosphere forced upon her until she sees her baby of six years mixing with painted women and offered a glass of wine to drink, hence the resolve to trust her to a wandering tribe rather than see her contaminated by the father's associates. The mother dies suddenly and fifteen years pass before the seeress is able to restore the girl to her father and her rightful position. The picture is staged by Col. Joseph Smiley, who plays the leading role, assisted by Lilie Leslie, Justina Huff, and an excellent cast.

Scene from Lubin's "The Sorceress"

"The Straight Road," conceded to be the masterwork of the distinguished dramatist, Clyde Fitch, is at last to be introduced to the motion picture public through the Famous Players four-part production, released November 12.

Thrilling Eclectic Circus Picture

A BETTER name than "The Old Fogey" for Pathe's lately released three-reel feature would be difficult to find. The story deals principally with the life, past and present, of the titular character. He is an elderly man employed as bookkeeper for a large firm. One would imagine that he obtained the position while still a young man, and wore himself grey in the service for, though honest and diligent, he is not of the aggressive type who would go after a promotion if it were not offered him.

The spectator's sympathies are aroused by seeing the vision of a part of "the old fogey's" past, when life had its charms for him in the person of a young girl to whom he was engaged. Suddenly the charm was wafted from his future by the girl's eloping with a circus man, and he lived on with no purpose or ambition but just to live.

The story's human interest appeal is much stronger because of the picture's wonderfully realistic scenes. In order to secure the true circus atmosphere for the background of some of the scenes, Director Fred Wright hired a circus for a day and worked his characters into it. The most startling thing in the picture is a monstrous lion attacking a man. The man is hiding among the mountains and the lion is perched upon a shelf above him. Suddenly he leaps down upon the man, and the pair roll down the side of the mountain onto another ledge. The man lies motionless and the lion gets up and moves unconcernedly away.

Sam Coit does some unusually fine character work as "the old fogey," Ezra, and Nell Craig, as his country sweetheart, Alva, is as sweet and deceitful as the story necessitates at different times in her life. Walter Hitchcock makes an admirable "heavy" as De Mauvais, the circus ring-master.

Ezra, the trusted bookkeeper, is presented with a circus circular by his employer, who asks him to take his little daughter to see the afternoon performance.

Alva returns the "old fogey's" money in Eclectic's "The Old Fogey"

The sight of the circular brings back to him the vivid memory of his last visit to a circus. It was in the days of his youth, and his companion was Alva, the girl he loved. One of the lions struck down the lion-tamer, and De Mauvais, the handsome ring-master, entered the cage and held the animals at bay while the men carried out the woman's body.

Alva was fascinated with De Mauvais' noble appearance and bravery, and insisted on meeting him after the performance. He, in turn, was greatly impressed with her beauty, and, after calling upon her several times, induced the unsophisticated girl to accompany him and the circus on their tour. The day after her elopement Ezra received a note from her, stating that she had gone with the man she loved.

At the circus Ezra is overcome by the recollections aroused by the animal tricks in the lion's cage, and leaves the tent much to the disgust of the little girl whom he is escorting. While roaming around among the various tents he sees the woman lion-tamer, and is surprised to recognize in her his former sweetheart, Alva. He makes himself known to her, and she pretends to be glad to see him.

Alva still worships De Mauvais, though he mistreats her, and, of late, has neglected her for another woman. He promises to give up the other woman if Alva will secure him $10,000. He suggests that she try to obtain it from "the old fogey." She writes a letter addressed to herself and signed in an attorney's name in which a demand of $10,000 is made on penalty of foreclosing a mortgage on her country home. This she shows to Ezra, begging him to loan her the money. She insists that she only needs it for a day, and he finally loans her $10,000 of the firm's money which he happens to have at home, because he received it too late to deposit in the safe. Shortly after she leaves he learns from a note she accidentally dropped that the letter was only a ruse to secure the money for De Mauvais.

Ezra follows Alva to De Mauvais' official car and begs her to return the money, but she laughs in his face and tells him that he did not loan her any. Just previous to this De Mauvais has accidentally left the door of the lions' cage open and one of them escapes. Alva discovers the presence of another woman in De Mauvais' car, and in the quarrel which follows a shot is fired and the woman is killed. Ezra summons the police, and they take up the trail of the ring-master who has made for the mountains. They find his dead body and the lion's foot-prints around it.

The next day as Ezra is about to tell his story to his employer, Alva enters, and saves him from disgrace by returning the money she had so unscrupulously obtained from him.

Call for Pennsylvania Convention

Fred J. Herrington, organizer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association in Pennsylvania, is mailing to every exhibitor in the state a call for a state convention, and a personal appeal that he be present (whether he is a member of the League or of the Association), in order that an amalgamation may be effected at this year's convention.

Mr. Herrington's letter says in part:

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Pennsylvania has called a convention to meet at Harrisburg, Pa., on January 4, 5 and 6, 1915. Our organization passed a resolution requesting the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania to call a joint convention to meet at the same time and place, in that way bringing the exhibitors of the State into one organization. The holding of the convention in the capital city would give us a chance to meet the members of the State Legislature, the men who will say what they are going to do for us in the way of legislation at the coming session. The exhibitors are thus given the opportunity to let the politicians know their power. Let us assemble at Harrisburg in such numbers that those who make the laws will learn that we are a power, and that the day has arrived when that power will assert itself.

In holding the convention at Harrisburg two objects were kept in view. First, Harrisburg is so centrally located that it ought to bring out the largest possible attendance, and, secondly, it being the state capital, a large gathering will prove to the politicians of the State that the exhibitor is a factor to be given full consideration in any legislation pending, which will concern him in any way.

The appeal is made to the whole trade, the manufacturer, the exchange man and the supply house representative, as well as to the exhibitor.

"Lena Rivers" A Likeable Film

The Cosmos Feature Film Corporation's story of "Lena Rivers" will meet with interested spectators wherever shown. It is a story that, as told in book form by Mary J. Holmes, has been read the country over, so attention is already secured for the enactment of the life story of Lena Rivers. The fact that it is Beulah Poynter who portrays the title role adds to the picture's value, as the stage version of the story was made by Miss Poynter and played by her many times. Her "Lena Rivers" of the screen is a charming and natural piece of work. She is the little girl as readily and well as she is the young woman; and throughout the picture's five parts she is natural and her work effective.

She is well supported by Lizzy Conway, whose role of "Granny" is exceptionally well portrayed; by Charles Hutchinson as Durward Belmont, by Robert Tabor as Harry Graham, by Walter Armin as John Nichols and by Marie Mason as Lucy Belmont. Winifred Burke is Caroline, John's step-daughter. Charlie DeForest is good in the comedy role of Joel, and Caroline Rankin furnishes thinness and humor in that of Nancy Scovendyke. The picture is a drama with some pathos and considerable comedy interest woven throughout its telling. And from beginning to end it is a clean and wholesome film.

The story, in brief, is as follows: Lena Rivers is the orphaned grandchild of Granny Nichols. Lena's mother, Helena, has gone to the city and secretly married Harry Graham, a young southerner, who has assumed the name of Rivers as a prank. He is falsely accused of murder and sent to prison. Helena, thinking she is deserted, returns to her home to die of a broken heart.

Granny rears Lena, but poverty compels them to seek a home with Granny's son John, in Kentucky. Lena's cousin Caroline makes her life miserable with her jealousy, and when Durward Belmont falls in love with Lena, Caroline, who also loves him, contrives to blacken Lena's reputation.

Graham has married Durward's mother in the meantime and, meeting Lena, realizes she is his daughter, but makes her promise not to tell his secret. Lena's happiness is very nearly wrecked before the truth is revealed, but Graham finally makes known his relationship to her and all ends well.

World Film to Release Dyreda Products

The Dyreda Art Film Corporation has contracted with Lewis J. Selznick, general manager of the World Film Corporation, by which all the features manufactured by the Dyreda studios are to be distributed exclusively through the World Film Corporation.

The first feature to be released under this arrangement is Laura Sawyer in "One of Millions." The date set is November 16. This feature is one that deals with a contemporary event of universal interest, and was made under the direction of J. Searle Dawley, whose artistic productions became well known to screen lovers when he was associated with the Famous Players, and who is generally regarded as one of the real poets of the screen. Mr. Dawley is the director general of the Dyreda Art Film Corporation. Associated with him in that corporation are Frank L. Dyer, who was formerly president of the General Film Company, and J. Parker Read, Jr., who has produced the photoplays, "The Garden of Allah," and "Victory," in which Secretary of the Navy Daniels and Admiral Badger, then commander of the North Atlantic fleet, appeared.

Pearce at Hackensack. N. J.

Much enthusiasm was evident at the Hackensack, N. J., meeting of the M. P. E. L. of A., when the reorganization of the state of New Jersey was under discussion. President Pearce found that the war tax measure may have proved to be a good thing in disguise, in that locality at least, by reason of the fact that it awoke to action every exhibitor in that particular section, and brought home to them the absolute need for organization, and perfect harmony throughout the state.

President Pearce found the members especially anxious to perfect the strongest sort of state organization; not only to protect perfectly their interests as a state branch, but for the general good of League members everywhere, and the advancement of the League as a working factor of sufficient power and influence to sidetrack anything which was detrimental to its advancement and welfare, and to secure every advantage possible, wherever opportunity offered.

Twenty-One Ems Ten-Point

By Ed Mock

I HAVE frequently elaborated upon the nature of the mail that reaches my desk. The fan wants to know who played the title role in Freckled Peggie's Dimple; how does the producer get the effect of an automobile falling over a cliff; shall I invest my savings in the Umbiquitous Film Company; why don't you carry more stories about the Capitola Films? I idle away valuable hours in supplying information to my curious friends. It costs my time, the time of Florence or Polly or Mary and besides, I use fairly good stationery, all done by the lithographer who never makes posters. I seldom refer to this work in print. There seems always to be something of more importance to attend. Last week, for example, I wrote about the film makers' publicity department and the men who have the high-sounding titles of publicity managers. I endeavored to point out their troubles as they appeared to me. I know nearly all of them by their first names. I never heard them complain. I never knew one who would knock his house or his desk mate. In view of these things, it is gratifying to have the letter which finds place in this issue. I know the writer, who has not asked me to withhold his name, for he knows me well enough to trust my common sense. This man I believe to be thoroughly sincere and unusually capable. He is holding an important position with one of the great film producing firms of this country. You are all familiar with the excellence of his worth in the publicity work he does. He writes me thus:

Your most interesting editorial in reference to the restrictions placed upon advertising managers in the film business, is remarkably pertinent. The statements made are absolutely true as applied to some of the biggest manufacturers.

Many of the men who are supposed to be empowered with discretionary authority as heads of advertising departments find themselves restricted to the whimsical moods of the man at the head of the concern who issues a sweeping order to "not do this" or to "do that" without regard for the carefully thought out plans of the advertising man who has studied the situation thoroughly and created his plans to meet the requirements.

The big businesses of the world have been built up as the result of carefully planned advertising, with the exception of the film industry. The film business came in like a whirlwind and sprouted like a mushroom. There was so much money made by those who led the film crusade that they scattered their dollars right and left, and are still scattering freely, for so-called publicity.

The business was big enough to stand it. The builders of the industry have done well in the formulating of plans to maintain their supremacy and safeguard their interests. But now come the outsiders, the men who came afterwards, and they are demanding their portion of this great business.

They are studying the advertising situation. They are endeavoring to establish their concerns on a strictly business basis. They are free from the dictation of monopolistic supervision and they have made terrific inroads. They are growing in strength and prestige every week.

What will the result be? It will mean that the helter-skelter methods of scattering money for advertising will be revised, necessarily, because the drain is too great on any business. It will mean that advertising that has been placed, at enormous expense, to satisfy the whims of men who do not realize what genuine advertising means, will be diverted into legitimate channels and placed where it will produce results.

Motography has fought a good fight, perfectly legitimate and without exacting petty reprisals. Your publication is of a character that makes it of great value to any concern having a product to market with exhibitors. The restrictions governing my department preclude the possibility of using Motography at present. I would like to use your magazine to benefit the business of the concern that I represent.

Had I the authority I would use it, every issue, and I would obtain results. Some day I hope to be in a position to use your advertising columns as freely as I believe would be of service to my department.

It is possible that the film business is so new that experts in this particular line of exploitation are few. In some instances there are interests, so I am informed, that find a profit in directing advertising into certain obsolete channels, also in diverting business from other channels.

Some day there will be a grand awakening. Advertising in the film industry will become adjusted and placed on a strictly business basis. The leaks will be stopped and the men who are not qualified will find themselves out. Executives, without a knowledge of the technicalities governing advertising, will be compelled to keep their fingers out and quit bothering the man in charge of the advertising department.

They don't bother the producers, they don't bother the actors neither do they interfere with the manufacturing departments. Such interference would jeopardize the productions. They do not understand apparently that the advertising department is one of the most important and should be left to the direction of a man who understands the business thoroughly.

Monkeying with the advertising department is a most expensive form of amusement. Other businesses have discovered this fact. Some day it will become apparent in the film business.

While exhibitors persist in showing more than three thousand feet of films for five cents and rush the projection without regard for the action of the piece, there will always be trouble. Exhibitors have violated every law that makes for enduring business. Adhering to the showman's rule—"if you don't like it, we should worry"—the films are raced through the machines; the public is shooed out of the place; the peanut vendor does his ballyhoo; the advertising slides flit before the scurrying mob, and the next show is on. That's the show business. If a competitor breezes into the neighborhood, spotters get his measure and tip it off to the manager of the older house. Instead of the manager of the older house paying his respects to his prospective neighbor and arranging a policy of some sort that will get the money, anything and everything else takes precedence. The war is on. Do or be done is the only thought that possesses either. If it is to be an exhibitor's business, exhibitors will surely be obliged to get together. If they refuse to do this, then it will become a manufacturers' business. It has always been our contention that makers of films will eventually become the exhibitors of their products. A good business man, before he would engage in film exhibiting, would seek his program first. He would want a dependable franchise before he threw the first shovelful of dirt. It would be a business man's way of getting into the exhibiting business. Our exhibitors fall far short of the mark. They believe in themselves first as showmen, whether they know the show business or not. They acquire a house and attempt to survive by cut-throat practice. If they can do their rival by showing ten reels for a nickel, that is the program. If they choose to race 'em through at a mile a minute, that is their business. Exhibitors, particularly the city exhibitors, are a bad lot. Pinch this kind of a chap and he is the first to squeal. He is ready to join in the chorus of his fellows if they are hit in a bunch, but to fortify against disaster before it arrives is a last thought. That is why most of the exhibitors' organizations are bordering on a flivver. Say initiation fees and dues to the major portion of the city exhibitor and call a doctor at the same time if you want to practice safety first. The first essential in making a successful national exhibitors' organization depends upon listing the manufacturers in Group B. Exhibitors themselves are clearly entitled to first place in the line-up, but the manufacturer should play the title role all the way. With the manufacturer behind the movement, not as an annual convention contributor, but as a vital force in the organization, there will be some hope. Very little until then.

The film maker's interest in his product endures beyond the shipping platform. When his films are shot through a projecting machine at a speed that is intolerant, he should have the largest say. When an exhibitor insists on showing more than three reels for five cents, if no other expedient will correct the evil, the manufacturer should take a hand. The same rule applies to the exhibitor who encourages the production of bad film subjects. Some force must be exercised through the strong hand of organization. The present system isn't effective.

Who will deny that manufacturers should have their own organization? And will you agree that they are apt to do something of the kind if exhibitors persist in their present tactics?

The newest information has it that Joe Engle picked $251,000 for his share of Universal stock, which indicates that the picking was fairly good for Joe on the day and hour he chose for the negotiation. He blooms out now as the Tiffany Film Company and has Laurence Weber and Herbert Brennon with him, with California as a point of destination. Rumor further has it that Joe, with Mrs. Carter doing the lead, will make the "Heart of Maryland." Begins to look like we are to have that film, sooner or later.

This is the Film Record edition of Motography, a trade journal that is in larger demand than any other book we know anything about. With this record, the country exhibitor can check his film service and when you deal out a package that will serve a similar purpose, you are doing genuine, constructive work. It requires a modern sleuth to figure out where to list some of the films that appear nowadays, but the makers themselves have helped us do this in most cases. With the exception of the regular program releases, the Record includes only six months' performance. General, Mutual and Universal releases are shown covering an entire year, because the films seem to hang around most of that time. This is the sixth year that we have endeavored to present a Record of this kind, and back numbers are always out of print, no matter how liberally we anticipate the demand. All exhibitors are provided with this number of Motography.

THE LARGER SUCCESS.

SO far the exhibition of motion pictures has been, to a large extent, a business of single small units. By this we mean that the average exhibitor owns but a single theater of rather small capacity which brings him a comfortable income, an excellent return on a small investment. Such enterprises can be characterized as wholly successful in every way. But in this, as in all other lines of business, there are apparent here and there a few ambitious and restless souls who are not content with the responsibilities and the emoluments of the smaller effort.

And so it is that we find scattered about the country "chains" of theaters, comprised of a number of units in one or several cities all operated by one general management, and bringing their profits to a common coffer. Such an institution is the Saxe Amusement Enterprises, described in detail on other pages. Its success is typical of the possibilities of motion picture operation on a larger scale. The Saxe houses are successful because all the elements of success are carefully considered before any unit of the system is put into operation; for the rules of this game are really absurdly simple, as are those of most large undertakings. It is merely a question, after all, of location selection, program selection, good management (with all the technical details included under that head) and aggressive persistence. So most of it is only a matter of judicious selection, picking a good local manager being the chief of these operations. The proprietors of the "chain" generally exercise the selective function as far as the location and the manager; the latter does the rest in making his particular charge a success. In this way, for example, the Saxe Enterprises developed, or at least found, S. L. Rothapfel, the versatile, accomplished and wholly efficient manager of the Minneapolis "Lyric" who has become nationally renowned as "the Belasco of motion pictures."

The operator of a chain of theaters can do things ordinarily denied to the owner of a single house. If he has three or four successful houses running, he can afford to experiment with the next one. Even if a few months' trial shows it a faliure, the overhead expense has not suffered excessively, and it can be discarded in favor of still another experiment. The general managerial expense is reduced, of course, and the increased purchasing power of the proprietor gains him added respect and considerable advantage in the trade.

There is a splendid opportunity in the operation of motion picture theaters for the man of large ideas. No successful operator's ambition need be confined to the ownership of a single house. If the original undertaking is successful at all, it should yield more than a bare living for its owner; it should be able to accumulate a surplus sufficient in a few years to equal the investment. Why not, then, invest this surplus in a second house, and then in a third, and so on? Surely no better place for the money could be found than the business whose profits have created it and which promises to create as much more. With each added unit the personal profit becomes greater and the surplus for more units grows faster. After all, it is only the establishment of the first profitable unit that is hard—just as the young man's first thousand dollars is the hardest to accumulate.

The best way to get the inspiration and comprehend the methods of success is to study the achievements of others who have already attained what we desire. There are quite a number of these chains of picture theaters in successful operation in this country, and it is the purpose of Motography to present from time to time, the story of each of these enterprises. These stories, of which the Saxe article in this number is the first, will show the larger possibilities of the business of exhibiting.

HAPPY ENDINGS

ALL our stories of life cannot have happy endings. The picture program that is too sweet soon cloys the mental palate. Tragedy, in literature and drama as in life, has its part to play. Furthermore, we have always understood that the ladies (who constitute the volume of photoplay fans) enjoy nothing so much as a show which will afford them a good cry. We have therefore ample grounds for the use of dying heroines and slaughtered heroes; provided, of course, that any one program does not contain more than one example of tragedy unalloyed.

But there is a negative side to this subject of debate. We have always contended that the photoplay drama essentially paralleled the magazine short story rather than the staged drama. And it will be admitted, we think, that the vast preponderance of successful short stories are of the "happy ending" classification; or if not entirely happy, at least contain no real tragedy.

It is an old axion among editors of short story magazines that ninety per cent of all the manuscripts received from new writers have tragedy for their theme. Nearly every novice in story writing seems to fall naturally into the tragic vein. And the reason for this is not hard to find.

Grief is one of the most forceful and one of the commonest of human emotions. Its commonness makes for familiarity with it; its force makes it easy to represent in fiction and demands little plot for its support. It is, therefore, the ideal motif for the amateur; and so it has proven. In the writing of either short story manuscript or photoplay script, tragedy is the line of least resistance.

Such being the case, too great freedom with tragedy plots is found to betoken either an amateurish sterility of plot ideas or an indolent tendency to take the easiest path. The occasional artistic merit of tragic drama in no wise excuses the production of mediocre and common-place photoplays in which tragedy is a prominent factor. We may say, indeed that only the highest form of artistic production excuses the use of tragedy at all.

It is surely self-evident that depicting happiness, and so adding to the world's sum total of happiness, is the greatest service the motion picture can render mankind. Let us confine our production of tragedy, therefore, to only so much as will serve to leaven the mass of good feeling. Let tragedy be as salt to our food, and used in similar proportion.

Burton King, who has been making photoplays under the Usona brand for many months now, without a release has just received word that one of his plays "Mother's Birthday" has been received with great warmth in England.

William Worthington, with Otis Turner's Universal company is the proud possessor of a brand new son and William is awfully "stuck up" about it.

Just A Moment Please

Friend Charley, our Noo Yawk conferee, writes of "Shore Acres" that "the whole story, as pictured, is perfectly digestive". We have passed this information entirely through our alimentary canal, but up to the moment of going to press we don't "make him" yet. Can he be kidding us?

SUCH A NAME AND SUCH A PLACE!

Anna, the little red head who performs at our switchboard and in times of stress edits the "Roll of States" department, ran across this one the other day in the Canton, Illinois, Register:—

J. F. Knock, applied for a moving picture show license, to run in the old canning factory from October 10, but no action was taken.

From way out on the Pacific Coast Don Meaney, our former playmate, postcards us that all's well. From the scene on the other side of his card we judge Don is living high. Howboutit, old top?

ALL OUT OF STATIONERY?

Some time ago we casually mentioned that our friend Clary, in writing from Edisonville, had shortened his signature from his full name to a mere "C". Recent batches of pictures from there have arrived without even the accompanying letter and the all too brief "C." This will bear looking into, Watson.

From present indications Bill Bell and his letter of application received from a would-be photoplayer will have to take second place to the scenario bug, who is now a correspondent of Ingvald Oes of the Great Northern Company. Here's the last epistle Oes received, together with a unique plot for a multiple reel drammer. (Plot is fully copyrighted and registered at Washington, D. C., so other manufacturers must "lay off".)

In the mts. of old Va. a family moved into a log cabin to hunt and fish, and with them they had brought several bottles of pickles, and after they were emptied the children taken the bottles up stairs and placed one of them on the wall plate, with the mouth of the bottle out, so when the wind began to blow it made a terrible noise, and the hunting party thought the house was haunted so they gathered up their junk and left by moonlight without paying the Proprietor any thing. So the proprietor set out to find them and when he came up with and learned that his house was haunted he presisted that they were well armed and shouldent be afraid, but the Man insisted that he was not afraid of anything which he could see but things which made a noise loud enough to see and could not be seen got his Goat. So the bottle was found and the house was no more haunted.

And the band began to play tomewhacfoldidleoleday."

We are advised that Life Photo's "The Ordeal" has passed not only the ordeal of the National Board of Censorship, but also the grape juice test of peace in the office of the Secretary of State. Nothing now remains but to evade the vigilant eye of Major Flunkhouser.

What a lot of queer things are numbered among the assets of a film company. Among the recent items of Eastern news is the following:

The Feature Picture Company of America at Forty-eighth street and Broadway, New York City, filed a petition in bankruptcy recently with liabilities of $26,697 and nominal assets of $50,299, consisting of a lease of the property, cash in bank $244, cigars $50, and picture $5.

OUR BURG.

As we go to press a storm of cyclonic velocity, accompanied by a wind of tornado like vehemence is sweeping over our fair city, driving before it a curtain of "the beautiful". From present indications snowshoes will soon be necessary.

In view of the storm described above Col. Bill Selig must have had a hunch, since Ye Editor saw him at the depot one day recently buying a ticket for sunny Cal. Back to Jungleville, we presume.

L. Selznick was a visitor in Our Burg this wk. He'll soon be able to register here, if these trips keep up.

Politics is biling this wk. R. R. Levy, Capt. Boening and the rest of the candydates will soon know who's won. Good luck fellers, say we.

Our star reporter is still to the East on his vacation, so news is scarce this wk.

Sans Grease Paint and Wig

By Mabel Condon

Wallace Beery.

"I'LL know Wallace Beery by his feet," I wagered with myself as I sat down in the loby of the Biltmore to wait for the Essanay "comedienne." "If I don't I walk back to Broadway—If I do, I ride." I felt certain of riding for I had seen Mr. Beery in his "Sweedie" series often enough to make me believe I'd recognize his feet anywhere. Remember the film in which he tapped a man on the chest with one of those feet and the man keeled over without an argument? Well, that's the kind of foot I expected would bring along its mate and Mr. Beery that day in the Biltmore. So of course I paid no attention to the patent-leathered, gaiter-topped variety that came and went. And that's how I lost my wager. From the pointed patent-leather toes, be-gaitered and buttoned, that advanced toward me proved to be the rightful property of the "Sweedish Girl," alias Wallace Beery.

"I walk," I admitted to myself and did—to the palm room guided thither by the touch of strong fingers on my arm. It was not until Mr. Beery had accomodated his height to the small chair at the other side of the small table, that the opportunity afforded for noting that the Beery hair is blonde and pompadoured, the Beery eyes are deep-set and brown and the Beery smile is wide and friendly. Also, the Beery voice is big without being loud; the kind that would suggest a perfect rendition of "Asleep in the Deep," on a victrola. And it is a singing voice and was one of the Beery qualifications that went toward keeping him in musical comedy for about six years.

"I played in almost every theater in New York, up till two years ago," Mr. Beery said and ordered lemonade, for one. He had been joyously imbibing of soda down in the grill, so he said, when he had been paged to the upstairs lobby; hence the single lemonade. "Four years ago when Raymond Hitchcock was suddenly called out of his part at the Astor theater, I was sent in to fill his place. I was signed with Savage for four years, was starred in 'The Yankee Tourist' and played with 'The Red Widow' throughout its run."

The lemonade arrived, so also did E. H. Calvert who was the personal conductor of the Essanayers on their recent but-a-few days' stay in New York.

"I have to have your name on these tickets," said Mr. Calvert, hurriedly.

"All right, let's have them" said Mr. Beery calmly, as he reached for the tickets and flourished an indelible pencil.

"No, has to be done in ink—won't take a minute," induced Mr. Calvert and hurried the one-whose-name was-necessary-to-the-tickets, to the writing table.

"And now I have to get over to the Pennsylvania depot, see about the baggage and—"

He was gone. Mr. Beery reseated himself and sighed, "If I had only had my car sent on! I've never before been away from it this long. It's a racer and it has made me a strong champion of Chicago boulevards. You know what splendid boulevards and what a park system Chicago has?" I knew. Down to the lake and from one park to another; a dandy drive. "All the kids near the studio know me and every night they stand out around my car until I come out; I pack six or seven in and the rest hang onto it thick, like flies and I give them a ride. They know me so well they call me Wallie!" he laughed.

The laugh was big and contagious, the hour was the unfashionable and deserted one of three and Mr. Beery could twirl his cane between two fingers without any danger of molesting the passers-by who were not, so he twirled and laughed, brought the cane to a standstill, folded his hands across its silver-tipped head and I asked, "What part of the West are you from, originally?" You'd know him to be from the far West, where men and trees and things grow big.

"Nowood, Wyoming," he answered and then imparted the startling information, "I trained elephants."

"For a living?" It was a senseless question—but who wouldn't have been surprised into asking a senseless one? Of all occupations to precede that of "comedienne"—an elephant trainer!

"For two years," Mr. Beery was saying. "I liked elephants; I had always liked elephants. In school, the animal 'elephant' was my favorite topic. I was as husky as I am now when I ran away from home and joined Ringling Brothers' circus. The man I approached asked me what I wanted to do, when I asked for a job, and I replied 'train elephants.' 'Any experience?' and I told him yes, two years. The only experience I had had was in books. But he hired me and I was assistant for a while and then head trainer. I had a class of twenty-six elephants and it was just fool luck that I wasn't killed. I had several accidents but none were serious.

"I'm going to put on an elephant comedy in a few weeks," he went on, his smile expressing his belief that it was going to be great fun, for him. "There's an act in vaudeville with four of them in it," he said. "It's going to finish in Chicago and I have arranged to use the elephants in a picture. It will be the first time I will have worked with them, in pictures.

"But there's nothing like pictures!" he digressed with enthusiasm. "I tell them at the Essanay studio that the only way they'll get rid of me is by the use of a stick of dynamite. I've been there a year and a half, and I love it. I write, produce and take the lead in my own pictures. And I do two a week. My record so far is to write and produce a picture in six hours. Easy!" he commented, tapping the cane against one of the patent-leather toes. "I've discovered," he added "that we work quicker in the western studios than in the eastern ones." And I guessed that Wallace Fitzgerald Beery was right.

After all, I didn't walk out my wager, for Mr. Beery with his cane and cap in hand, was sufficient signal for a taxi. Within five minutes we had passed the mob, dense at all hours of the day and night, in front of the war bulletins on the Times building and across the street I said good-bye to the Essanay "comedienne" and his taxi became a part of the Broadway whirl.

"The Ordeal" a Powerful Story

One of the phases of warfare not recorded in history is graphically pictured in "The Ordeal," a five-part drama from the Life Photo studio. It does not reflect in any way upon any country in particular or upon warfare methods in general.

The "ordeal" proper is enacted in a dream. A young fellow, in love with and about to be married to a girl, is asked to enlist at the call for volunteers in his country's war. He refuses to sacrifice his future because someone else has seen fit to declare war, and is chided for his lack of patriotism by his father and the other volunteers. That night he dreams that he has volunteered, and sees, in a vision, the anguish, trials, and cruelty that are, and have always been, inevitable in warfare.

Realistic scenes and original lighting and photographic effects are characteristic of the Life Photo Company's pictures, and this one is not an exception. Both in close-ups and distance throws the pictures are clear, the lighting soft, and the general effect pleasing. Men are so utilized and the camera so manipulated in the battle scenes that the armies' maneuvers suggest numberless soldiers instead of the comparatively few used, though they, in themselves, amount to a goodly number.

The closing scene is especially worthy of mention. It represents the rulers of Europe and America gathered in conference. Above them hangs a large painting of a battle scene. This fades into scenes of the different countries' various industries that are the ultimate sufferers from the war.

The principals in Life Photo's "The Ordeal"

The success of the picture is largely due to the excellent work of its cast, several of whom have figured prominently in previous Life Photo releases. To Harry Spingler is allotted the difficult part of Jean, the young lover who passes through the ordeal, and it receives full justice in his interpretation. The "heavy," as usual, is impersonated by William H. Tooker in the role of the general, and is marked by the powerful

The general decides on a new plan in Life Photo's "The Ordeal" personality for which Mr. Tooker's characterizations are noted.

Anna Laughlin makes a pleasing but inwardly selfish girl of Jean's sweetheart, Helene, and rises to the full demands of the situation in the last reel in her plea to Jean to betray the hiding place of his command, rather than seal her doom by refusing.

As a last resort to loosen his tongue the general has Jean's mother, his sister, and finally Helene shot before his eyes, but the youth remains loyal to his country. He is then thrust into a dungeon. In the meantime Jean's comrades have decided on a daring ruse to rout the enemy. They charge them openly, and the enemy, believing that they are strongly supported, give way. Jean manages to make his way to the street, and there collapses.

He awakens with a start and a scream that awakens the other members of the family, and brings them hurrying to his room to see what has happened. Jean is filled with joy on realizing that his "ordeal" was only a dream. C. R. C.

"Fake" Arrested in Canada

The attention of exhibitors is called to the arrest in Vancouver, B. C., of a man giving the name of C. A. Allen, who has been representing himself throughout western Canada as being a representative of the Mutual Film Corporation of New York. As far as can be learned Allen never had any connection with the Mutual or with any of its allied companies.

His method has been to obtain money and credit on the strength of his alleged connections with the Mutual Film Corporation. There have been several cases in Vancouver where irresponsible persons have obtained money from merchants, representing that they would advertise them through the motion picture theaters upon payment of a given sum and then taking French leave. Allen was arrested, charged with jumping his board bill at the Hotel Canada after representing himself as being employed by the Mutual, and was remanded to jail for two weeks pending trial.

"Shore Acres" Adapted for Film

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

THERE is a simple, homely charm about a New England story that attracts attention and arouses interest by its mere mention. Once aroused, this interest is easily sustained, and in the All Star Feature Corporation's five-reel version of James A. Herne's masterpiece, "Shore Acres," it is gratified.

In addition to its able cast, typical Maine coast scenery, and beautiful photography, "Shore Acres" possesses the distinct advantage of being known throughout the country as a successful stage production.

Louis Reeves Harrison and Augustus Thomas cooperated on the adaptation and production of the picture, which is the second All Star release through the Alco Film Corporation. As generous, forbearing Nat Berry, Civil War veteran, Charles A. Stevenson carries off the leading honors, with a close second in William Riley Hatch, who plays the part of Nat's impulsive, quick-tempered younger brother, Martin. Violet Horner does well with the important role of Helen Berry, Martin's pretty young daughter, who is in love with the ambitious young doctor, Sam Warner (Conway Tearle). In E. J. Connelly's impersonation of Josiah Blake, the real-estate sharp and trouble-maker, is a thoroughly despicable character. The small but difficult roles of Captain Ben and Ann are taken by Harry Knowles and Gladys Fairbanks.

Jutting out from a farm, on the Maine coast, known for several generations as Shore Acres, is a point of rock on which stands Berry Light, a lighthouse named after the farm's owner, the Berrys. Nat Berry, the keeper, is an old bachelor and a favorite with all who know him. His younger brother, Martin, is a good-hearted fellow, but often unjust in his hasty decisions. At their mother's death the two boys became the owners of Shore Acres. Martin is only a child at this time, and Nathan takes care of him until he grows up, when he deeds him his share in the farm. Later the two brothers fall in love with the same girl, and Nathan, in the spirit of self-denial which he has practiced since his mother's death, goes to war and leaves his brother to press his suit without rivalry. When he returns Martin and Ann are married and have a little girl, Helen.

At the opening of the story the happy group is still living at Shore Acres, Helen being now a young lady. She meets a young doctor, Sam Warren, and their friendship soon develops into love. The only discordant note in the locality is the presence of Josiah Blake, a real estate man, who advises Martin to mortgage the farm and invest the proceeds in a promotion scheme to sub-divide the land into building lots. Nat, Helen, and Mrs. Berry beg Martin not to heed the man, but in vain, as Blake's statement that "if someone had told me what I'm telling you I'd own half the state of Maine" has taken a strong hold on his mind.

Blake broaches to Martin the subject of his marrying Helen, and Martin thinks it a good idea. Helen however is of a different opinion. Realizing that Warren is the obstacle in his path, Blake poisons Martin's mind against him. The result is that when Helen's father learns that her lover is contemplating leaving for the West he attempts to shoot him; Nat's interception alone prevents him from committing the crime. Shortly afterwards Helen and Warren elope, and a year and a half elapse before they return to Shore Acres.

In the meantime Martin has followed Blake's advice and many times regretted it. Time has shown him the rashness of his act, and convinced him that the chance of Blake's brilliant "air-castles" materializing is so small as to be almost hopeless. His mind reverts often to the wish—how nice it would have been if Helen had not been compelled to leave home to marry the man she loved.

As Christmas approaches Martin is more downcast than ever. On Christmas eve Blake plunges him into the depths of despair with the information that the land company has "gone flat." After the land sharp's exit, Nat ushers in Helen and Warner, whom he has had hidden in another part of the house. Martin is overjoyed at their return, and forgets for a time the land company's disastrous ending, but the remorse returns when the young married couple and their baby leave the room. This time the self-sacrificing Nat dispels it forever by producing and presenting him a check just received for back pension, amounting to a sum large enough to free Shore Acres from Blake's mortgage.

Martin listens to Blake's scheme for dividing "Shore Acres"

Society Author Writes for Essanay

"The Crimson Wing," one of the strongest novels written by Hobart Chatfield Taylor, Chicago and Washington society leader and literateur, is being dramatized by the Essanay company for the motion picture screen. The drama will be produced under the personal supervision of Mr. Chatfield Taylor with Francis X. Bushman, the Essanay star, in the leading role in the drama.

One of the principal scenes in the drama takes place in and about a famous French chateau. In Lake Forest, Ill., there is a replica of this chateau where the scenes will be produced. This is a four-reel picture and infinite care is being taken to plan a perfect production.

Too Much Realism

Seldom does a company of photoplayers come as close to instant death and then live to tell of it as did the entire cast of the Gold Seal (Universal) company in staging the landslide in the twelfth installment of the "Trey O' Hearts" series. Some idea of the narrowness of their escape may be conveyed by the accompanying photo, taken immediately after the accident. One leg of Harry Vallejo's machine was snapped short off and the back of the instrument was caved in. Mr. Vallejo, himself, was struck on the fore arm by a sharp rock whch cut through his coat and slashed his arm almost to the bone. Director Lucas (with the megaphone) was hit on the shoulder and it was thought for a time that a piece of the bone had been chipped from his shoulder blade. The still camera did not fare so badly as did the other, but a close examination of the photo shows innumerable dents and scratches which resulted from the shower of smaller stones that struck it.

Paul Panzer "Exempt"

Paul Panzer who spills looks of hatred and deeds of villainy all through the "Perils of Pauline" was telling the other day the reason why he is not fighting for Germany in the present war. It will be remembered that Mr. Panzer, though he has been in this country for twelve years and is thoroughly Americanized, is a lieutenant in the German artillery reserve. When the war broke out the popular "villain" went to the German consul-general's office and asked for advice. He explained that his two brothers were in service under Crown Prince Rupprecht of Wurtemberg as lieutenants of artillery and that he is the sole support of his aged mother and his wife and child. In view of this he was made exempt from the necessity of answering the call. The German consul-general has thus saved "poor Pauline" from an untimely and premature death.

On Tuesday evening, Oct. 20, Mayor Mitchel of New York City together with all his staff, board of aldermen and the officials of the fire and building departments, attended the Vitagraph Theater in a body.

Using German Police Dogs

Thirty German police dogs are being used in "The Center of the Web," a two-reeler now in the making at the New Rochelle studio of the Thanhouser Film Corporation. These dogs only recently arrived in this country from Germany, where they had been used successfully in the tracking and apprehension of criminals. Closely resembling wolves, the dogs made a queer looking pack as they awaited Director Harvey's directions. Heavy collars with sharp nails are used to discipline them. When a dog becomes unruly this collar is turned so that the nails quickly restore him to better temper and obedience. The man in charge of the dogs speaks to them in German, as they are not trained to commands in English. One of the dogs however, understands directions given him in French. This animal was sold for $1,600 but represents such a splendid type of his breed that permission was given by the new owner, a wealthy Greenwich woman, to work him in the picture.

Animal Film Being Shown

"The Book of Nature" is the title of the six reels of animal life which Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars, curator of the Bronx Zoological Park, is now showing after three years of patient work in its making. The lower forms of animal life are those of which Dr. Ditmars made an interesting screen study. The Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences was the first place chosen for public exhibition and a portion of the receipts from this booking will go toward buying animals for the Brooklyn Zoo.

Tramp Proves to Be Nobleman in Disguise

"The Prince Party"

HOW the heir to the throne of Fournia came to America in search of a wife and, by disguising himself as a tramp, managed to obtain entrance to the home of one of America's wealthiest families without the fact that he is a prince of a royal line becoming known, forms the central story of Essanay's latest two-reel subject, entitled "The Prince Party," which is scheduled for release on Friday, November 13.

Francis X. Bushman appears as Prince Francis in the story and is supported by such screen favorites as Beverly Bayne, Lester Cuneo, Harry Dunkinson and Helen Dunbar. As the main action of the story takes place in and about the estate of a multimillionaire, an opportunity is given for settings and backgrounds of the most lavish and wonderful sort.

Showing the reason "Why Essie's Friend Got Fresh Air."

As the story runs the Ogilvies are newly rich and occupy an enormous estate. Being rich, they naturally spend much of their time in travel abroad. Mrs. Ogilvie has great social aspirations and her one object in life is to have her daughters marry men of royal parentage. One day Mrs. Ogilvie receives a letter from a friend in Europe, saying that Prince Francis of Fournia is leaving in a few days for America and should Mrs. Ogilvie desire his presence for a week or so to cable an invitation at once. Mrs. Ogilvie promptly acts upon the suggestion and the prince accepts the invitation. A house party is at once arranged and all the wealthy people for miles around are invited, great preparations being made for the gala affair, a social event of great importance.

The Ogilvies have three marriageable daughters, two of whom follow their mother's ideas along the line of marriage, while the third, Betty, who is the better looking of the three, thinks little of social victories and marrying into the aristocracy.

On the afternoon of the day set for the beginning of the house party, Mrs. Ogilvie is well nigh prostrated to receive a telegram from the prince, saying that he has discovered at the last moment that it will be impossible for him to attend the affair.

About this time a tramp appears upon the lawn of the Ogilvie estate and not a little confusion is caused by the efforts of the Ogilvie servants to eject him from the grounds. Happening to come upon the scene just as the tramp is being hurried away, Mrs. Ogilvie hears the wanderer addressing the butler in French, notes that he is well built and good looking, and is instantly struck with the idea to have him impersonate the prince, thus helping her to save the houseparty from becoming a fizzle. Accordingly when the guests arrive, the tramp, now properly arrayed, is introduced as "the prince" and makes a tremendous hit. James Atteridge, a practically unknown member of the houseparty—in reality, a crook—watches the "prince" with suspicious eyes, particularly since both men are striving to win the favor of Betty. Ultimately Atteridge discovers the "prince's" real identity and Betty soon learns of it.

Spider interviews Mrs. Stuveysant in Essanay's "Within Three Hundred Pages."

The reporter finds the necklace in Essanay's "Within Three Hundred Pages."

One night jewels valued at $100,000 are stolen. The Ogilvies instantly suspect the prince, but fear to expose him. As it happens, however, Atteridge, the real thief, is seen as he is hiding the jewels, and attacked by the prince. In the scuffle Attridge is killed and the prince badly wounded. The jewels are restored to the Ogilvies and Betty nurses the wounded man who so bravely defended them, for, by now, she has learned to love him. One day the assistant secretary of state is announced and upon seeing the wounded man he instantly recognizes him as the real prince, for whom he has been searching for days. The Ogilvies are deeply shocked when they learn his real identity, but feel somewhat better when he laughs and declares that he assumed a disguise solely to seek adventure and that he has been more than repaid by finding the real princess in Betty.

The cast is as follows:

Prince Francis.....Francis X. Bushman
Betty Ogilvie.....Beverly Bayne
James Atteridge.....Lester Cuneo
Mr. Ogilvie.....Harry Dunkinson
His wife.....Helen Dunbar

A Survivor of the Old School

Harry F. Crane, who is now playing the role of Louis XI in the Universal's "Francois Villon" series, has supported such famous actors as Edwin Booth, Lawrence Barrett, Stuart Robson, McKee Rankin, Frank Lawlor, Katie Estelle and Kittie Blanchard during his varied career. He is one of the few survivors of the old school which has passed into history and his work is one of the delights of the present series, his age and general appearance qualify him to assume the king's role with unusual success. He was born in Baltimore, Md., and after the Civil War, in which he served as a drummer boy, went on the stage against the wishes of his father, who was a Baptist minister. He enacted the leading roles in such plays as "Oliver Twist," "Sea of Ice" and "The Black Brook." Later, urged by his father, he left the stage to take up the study of medicine. He became a graduate physician and practiced medicine for many years in Buffalo and finally, on account of his wife's health, went to California. Upon his arrival in Los Angeles he set aside all thought of medicine to return to his first love, the stage, but this time the motion picture stage. Mr. Crane is half brother of Honorable Joseph C. Sibley, ex-congressman and member of the Standard Oil Company.

Harry F. Crane.

Little Kathie Fischer of the "Beauty Film" fame, has been missed about the studio for several days. She is recuperating from the effects of playing Cupid.

Selig's "Blue Flame" Series

Ed. J. Le Saint is producing another of the "Blue Flame" series for the Selig company, "The Black Diamond" and during the course of the play, Guy Oliver takes three parts, an elderly man, his son and later on the grandson. Stella Razeto takes the part of one of the counterfeiters and gives one of her usually clever studies.

German Goverment Keeps Film Records

The New York Sun of Sunday, October 25 prints a communication from one of its foreign correspondents to the effect that the Express Film Company, a connection of Pathe Freres, has been commissioned by the German government to take official moving pictures during the course of the war. These pictures are designed to disprove, the communication states, charges of German atrocities.

To Film "The Old Homestead"

One of the most notable acquisitions of stage successes yet secured for the screen is Denman Thompson's great rural drama, "The Old Homestead," the film rights of which have just been obtained by the Famous Players Film Co. The Famous Players are now making preparations to produce the film version of this celebrated play in the old New Hampshire village which suggested the drama to its author, and to use the very house that is featured in the title of the subject.

For Women Only

In the business district of Los Angeles, a motion-picture theater which restricts its patronage during the daytime exclusively to women and children has met with success. The policy of the house is to present only films which are clean and uplifting and at the same time provide a place which an unescorted woman need have no hesitancy in entering. Until six o'clock in the evening men are not admitted unless they accompany women, a rule which is rigidly adhered to.

Maclyn Arbuckle Talks at Stand

"Citizens, what I was going to say when they turned out the lights on me is this—," was the way that Maclyn Arbuckle began his little talk to a blinking and gasping audience at the Strand theater, New York, on Friday evening, October 23. Arbuckle's appearance was a distinct surprise to everyone, and the manner in which he made his entrance fairly dumbfounded them. The feature of the week was "The County Chairman" in which Arbuckle plays the titular role, and in one of the scenes he has the screen to himself. Just at this moment the house went dark, the spotlight flashed on the center of the stage, and there stood the "fat man" the same make-up in which he had been seen on the screen a moment before. He made a short speech a la Arbuckle style ending by saying, "Well, they're through setting up the scenes back there now, an' I gotta go back on the screen. Ain't it hell?" As the picture started again where it left off the applause of some three thousand five hundred people told Arbuckle that he had made a big hit.

Brevities of the Business

Power's Cameragraphs have been installed in the Y. M. C. A., Bristol, R. I., Central Museum, Brooklyn, New York American, New York City, Santa Fe and New York Central & Hudson River R. R. Safety departments, Opera House, Boston, and the Globe Theater in New York City.

Barry O'Moore, who recently left the Edison Company, has come to life as Herbert Yost of the Punch and Judy theater, New York. Yost vanished from the legitimate stage some time ago to play in pictures and assumed the name of O'Moore.

In "The Man Who Could Not Lose" production the Favorite Players Film Company used twelve hundred supernumeraries on the stage and in the audience of a theater which they hired in Los Angeles to take this scene.

David Horsley has made arrangements to leave New York for Los Angeles during the first week in November, and will, if present plans prevail, remain on the coast to take active charge of his California producing companies until the first of next May. Mrs. Horsley and the new Horsley baby (he hasn't been named yet) and Master Stanley Horsley will accompany the Bayonne film magnate in his western sojourn.

B. A. Rolfe Photo Plays Inc. has signed a contract with Mabel Taliaferro. Miss Taliaferro is to appear in the old Madison Square Theater success "The Three of Us" which is to be released by the Alco Film Corporation.

The Onyx Club, with headquarters at Denver and many branches in towns of Colorado and Arizona, is a society composed of moving picture fans. They publish a brochure devoted to gossip of the moving pictures and have invited a contest, voting the most popular player of the silent screen. The contest is yet young, but so far, Ethel Clayton, the beautiful Lubin leading lady is well at the head, having to her credit 4,445 votes. None of the members of the club have ever seen Miss Clayton, hence the voting has been inspired by the lady's work as seen upon the screen, which is a tribute to art rather than personal acquaintance or friendship.

Working quietly on an original seven-reel feature and at the same time preparing the scenario for the screen version of Wilton Lackaye's feature, "The Pit," and for "As Ye Sow," in which Alice Brady will star, Captain Leslie T. Peacocke has been too busy to inform his friends that he had joined the staff of the World Film Corporation, and had been at work for weeks before they learned of his change of position. Now that he has finished his work on "The Pit," and "As Ye Sow," he is hard at it, again making a photoplay for Clara Kimball Young, from Henry Kitchell Webster's story of "The Butterfly."

The Excelsior Feature Film Co., Inc., at its studios in Lake Placid is now working on "The Under Trail" picturized from Anna Alice Chapin's book of the same name. Miss Chapin is the author of "The Eagle's Mate" in which Mary Pickford scored a tremendous success. "The Under Trail" is one of the prettiest romances ever written about the majestic Blue Ridge mountains of Virginia.

David Horsley is very much exercised over the loss of the original drawings and working positive of the "Siege of Liege" which were stolen from the Centaur studios on October 20. Mr. Horsley expected to cause a sensation in the trade with the release of this picture. Mr. Horsley's regret at the loss of this picture is heightened by the fact that Harry Palmer, the world famous cartoonist and war correspondent who conceived and carried out the project, is now on his way back from Belgium and is due to arrive in New York on Saturday.

H. M. Horkheimer, president of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company of Long Beach, Calif., spoke recently of his investigations of business conditions in New York, Chicago, St. Louis and other cities during the last two months. He returned to the Long Beach studios of his company this morning and announced that as a result of his highly successful trip to eastern localities the Balboa corporation would immediately complete plans to build another film producing plant in Long Beach, as a greater annex to its already large studios in this city and that five additional new organizations of players would be formed within the next few months to produce the Balboa feature films.

The Alco group of exchanges has been increased by the addition of the Alco Film Service of Denver, Colorado. The newest Alco youngster will serve the territory embraced by Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico. Grombecker and Bailey, two well known film men on the Pacific coast, have taken over the franchise and are in direct charge of the new exchange.

There is some talk of a resumption of dividends on New York Motion Picture Corporation, to take place the first of the year, but on a basis of 1% per month instead of 2% as formerly paid. Mr. Crawford Livingston succeeded Mr. C. J. Hite (deceased) on the board.

The net earnings on the Mutual Film Corporation down to September first were reported at a rate considerably over 20% on the common after payment of the preferred dividends.

There has been considerable trading in all of the film stocks, as it is generally understood the enforced regime of economy that has prevailed since the beginning of the European war has diverted many of the patrons of regular theaters to the screen. An additional factor is represented by the closing down of most of the foreign film factories, leaving a deficit of films for American consumption to be provided by the American manufacturers.

During the past week the directors of the Mutual Film Corporation declared the dividend of 1% per month on the common stock for the months of November, December and January. The floating supply of Mutual Film common stock has been absorbed recently by some outside investors who appear to believe that this industry has become stablized and that the Mutual Company represents a seasoned organization showing large profits and good management.

The Syndicate Film Corporation (producers of "Zudora") has every reason to congratulate itself on the excellent showing in the "Million Dollar Mystery." Bookings were reported at one time in September in excess of $1,100,000 and the preferred and common have both sold above par within the past several weeks. As one share of common was given with each share of the preferred, this represents over 100% clear profit within a period of about seven months.

The Thanhouser-Syndicate Corporation, instead of following the plan of the Syndicate Film Corporation, made its preferred stock a straight 7% issue instead of giving it the participating privileges which the Syndicate Film preferred enjoys. This explains the discrepancy in values of the two preferred stocks. The Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation has employed the same factors which made the Syndicate Film Corporation a success, namely—the story is credited to Harold MacGrath—the films will be made by the Thanhouser Film Corporation—publication of the story to be handled by the Chicago Tribune and over 100 papers in other cities—and the Mutual Film Corporation will attend to the distribution.

As indicative of the change of sentiment, it is worth while noting that a large number of people, who hitherto confined their investments to local proven securities of the nature of the Public Utilities, etc., are now beginning to invest some of their surplus funds in the sounder organizations connected with the film industry, evidently believing that this industry has reached a stage where many of the companies are on a sound and substantial business basis. This evolution is similar to that through which the automobile industry has passed and means much to the future of an industry which has—in the not remote past—shown too great a leaning toward the payment of high salaries and too little familiarity with the modern system of accounting and auditing.

David Horsley has completed arrangements and placed contracts for the erection of a motion picture studio in Los Angeles, California. Ground was broken on October 22 and the work, which will be in charge of William Horsley, will be carried on by night and day shifts, in an effort to have the main floors and lighting arrangements completed before the arrival of the three companies which Mr. Horsley will send out from the Centaur studios in the early part of November. Plans for the new coast studio have been ready for several weeks, but Mr. Horsley has had his eye on a location right in the heart of Los Angeles, which the owners for a long time refused to sell for motion picture purposes, and it was not until October 16 that the transaction was finally closed.

Winifred Allen, formerly of the Edison Company, has been engaged by the Excelsior Company to play a prominent part in its next production, "The Under Trail."

C. P. Rytenberg has removed the Dragon Film Company from offices in the World Tower building to the Gibralter's sixth floor suite in the Mecca building.

John Wild is the man to ask for over at the Hepworth offices in the World's Tower building. For Mr. Wild's regular position is manager of advertising and publicity and just now, while C. Parfrey is in Europe, Mr. Wild is manager of the office.

Mrs. Thomas Whiffen, now making a tremendous hit in the Broadway production, "The Beautiful Adventure", has a big and telling role in the Cosmos Feature Film Corporation's new picture, "Hearts and Flowers".

Mary Pickford, the charming, is given a wide cope for her range of expressions and mannerisms, in the five-part Margaret Mayo story, "Behind the Scenes". This film has been the big attraction all week at the Strand theater, New York, and the fact that James Kirkwood plays opposite Mary in this film, adds both to the merit and the entertainment of the picture.

The public will come in for a bit of realism in "The Countess Sweedie," a comedy to be released by the Essanay company. Wallace Beery, as "Sweedie" trips on the stairs and falls a flight of twenty steps, and instead of making a light fall, Beery plunged clear to the bottom.

Marie Hesperia, who won first prize as the most popular photo-player in Europe in the recent big contest just closed, is soon to be seen in a four-part Kleine feature entitled "Bartered Lives." The subject is a double exposure negative, in which Miss Hesperia shows to splendid advantage in the dual role of herself and her wayward sister.

"Say, wh-wh-who is that? Wait, I know him. It's m-m-m (business of trying to think) Oh, yes! It's Crane Wilbur!" The girl who quoted the above to her friend at the outer door of the Strand theater, New York City, last Sunday night, was about the only one of the hundred or more people waiting there who recognized in the dark young man purchasing a ticket at the box office, the Harry Marvin of "The Perils of Pauline" fame. The Mary Pickford "Behind the Scenes" picture was the theater's attraction.

Director Frank Powell, who is producing George Kleine's "Officer 666", announces the near completion of the big subject. One of the unsual features in the making of "Officer 666", which Director Powell calls his greatest asset, is the fact that most of the players are having their first motion picture experience.

Joseph R. Sullivan, secretary to Senator James Hamilton Lewis of Illinois at Washington, and Charles F. Clyne, of Chicago, United States attorney, were visitors to the Room of the Green Rug early this week. Mr. Sullivan had considerable to do with the reframing of the theater tax bill, and he expressed himself greatly interested in whatever affects the motion picture industry. He was en route to Chicago, where he will remain until the opening of the new session, December 1.

Al E. Christie, director of Nestor comedies, has paid his respects to the East in the way of a two weeks' stay in New York, and there has been much rejoicing among his many friends in this city. For Mr. Christie is as well-liked a director as the film business knows, and because the time was the three-fold celebration of his birthday, of his third year on the coast and of his two-hundredth comedy, he packed his bag and traveled to New York. He is returning with many new ideas, with the intention of putting on a second comedy weekly and with the renewed confidence of the Universal directorate. Truly, Mr. Christie is a much-liked man.

Two hundred and fifty different characteristic poses of the world-renowned photoplayer, G. M. Anderson, as "Broncho Billy," moulded into the formation of an Indian head (the Essanay insignia), is the latest stunt of the film developers at that company's western studio in Niles, Cal. The photographers spent many long hours putting the different small poses together to form an Indian head and surprised Mr. Anderson with an enlarged picture of the insignia.

King Baggot of the Imp company, at the peril of his life, recently drove a giant locomotive through nearly a mile of solid flame.

Little Audrey Berry, one of the youngest members of the Vitagraph stock company, celebrated her eighth birthday on Friday, October 23. Miss Berry was the recipient of numerous floral offerings and tokens of esteem from members of the Vitagraph company, while admirers from all over the country sent her letters of congratulation and birthday postal cards.

Miss Mae Reynolds has joined Webster Cullison's Eclair company at Tucson, Arizona, and will play leads opposite Stanley Walpole.

Some few months ago when the formation of the Eaco Films, Inc., took place, Edwin August, the president of the corporation, and Edward Anderson, the secretary and treasurer, were at a loss as to what the name of the newly organized firm should be. Upon the fingers of the two different hands, which were those of August's and Anderson's, were signet rings. The initials on both of them were E. A. Viewing this, Mr. August suggested the name of Eaco Films. In doing this he added co for company. Anderson approved of this and they decided that the firm name should be Eaco Films.

Mary Fuller very nearly met with an accident the other day while she was driving a pair of blue ribbon winners through Central Park. They were two frisky young cobs that balked at anything which resembled an automobile. Mary seems to be afraid of nothing.

Webster Cullison, of the Eclair Film Company at Tucson, is staging a thrilling two-reel western drama in which Miss Payne does some daring work driving a six-horse stage coach. Carl M. Le Viness is producing "Ruth of the Mountains," a romance of the Kentucky hills. Miss Lucy K. Villa is at work on "The Redemption of John Brent," a heart interest story in one reel. All three stories are from the pen of Will E. Ellis.

Earle Williams, one of the popular leading men of the Vitagraph company, celebrated Apple Day by presenting each one of his fellow players with one of every variety of apple grown in one of the most extensive fruit orchards in the state of California. Mr. Williams having been born in Sacramento, a friend of long standing, a native Californian, wishing him to celebrate the day, which is generally observed as a holiday all along the Pacific coast, shipped him enough apples of each variety to allow of an impartial distribution.

In addition to being one of the most popular of the Turner leads, Herbert Rawlinson of the Turner special feature company, now lays claim to the title of vocal director. Under his direction there has been formed what is known as "The Turner Trio," comprising himself, Roy McRea and George Utell.

Fay Tincher of Mutual is a funny woman, not only fun provoking and fun loving, but funny in the sense of out of the ordinary. From a student in a Chicago conservatory of music to comedy and farce roles in the pictures, from being dependent on others to a weekly income that by very few dollars misses the four figure mark, from having operatic aspirations to enjoyment of her labor as fun maker—that is Fay Tincher's career.

In staging "The Wondrous Melody" at the Eclair studio, Richard Garrick, the director, used Manuel Montijo, the well-known violinist from the Boston Conservatory of Music, who is sojourning in Tucson for a rest after a hard season. The effect of the sweet strains from Montijo's violin upon the artists was wonderful. In many of the scenes where tears were called for they were plainly in evidence.

A private exhibition of two thousand feet of "safety first" pictures made by the Rock Island railroad were exhibited to an audience of railroad officials at the exhibition rooms of the Fulton Company on Wednesday, October 21. The pictures illustrate the various dangers that railroad men are subject to and will be shown to all employes of the Rock Island road.

Because certain parties have been attempting to sell stock in an Albany, N. Y., company who claim they control "The Key to Yesterday," the Favorite Players subject featuring Carlyle Blackwell, the All Theaters Film and Accessory Company, Inc., 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York city, has requested Motography to warn all theater owners and managers in New York that it has an exclusive franchise to the film in that state.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 69—SELIG—October 26.—The ruins of historic Louvain, showing the various thoroughfares of the city which was destroyed by German artillery; foundering of the S. S. Metapan in New York harbor; Columbus day celebration at the exposition grounds, San Francisco; scenes from the Navy-Pennsylvania football game; Shriners' ceremonies in Grand Canyon, Colo.

Hearst-Selig New Pictorial No. 70—SELIG—October 29.—This film shows numerous views taken amid the ruins of Rheims, shortly after the bombardment ceased, the Belgian artillery in action on the outskirts of Antwerp, the refugees fleeing toward that city for safety, a motor boat race on Lake Erie during which the Disturber IV broke the world's record, the launching of the Great Northern coatswise steamer at Cramp ship yards, Philadelphia, and election scenes throughout the country, which include pictures of Governor Glynn and Colonel Roosevelt.

All for Business—BIOGRAPH—November 2.—The broker neglects his wife and child for his business, and the child's death through an accident brings the matter to a climax. For a while he treats his wife with great kindness, but business again absorbs his attention. He promises to take his wife to visit the baby's grave, but is threatened with ruin and forgets her. The wife learns of the danger and can save him but determines to teach him a lesson and keeps him ignorant of it. He accuses her of ruining him and, as she is about to leave him, he realizes that he has been at fault throughout, and reconciliation is effected.

The New Partner—EDISON—November 2.—Elizabeth Marsh, half owner of a factory, hearing of the miserable treatment the employees received, obtains employment unknown to the management to study conditions. While Barton, the other partner, is paying a visit a fire starts. He rescues Miss Marsh and crippled Tim. When the partners personally take charge conditions improve.

The Laundress—ESSANAY—November 2.—Numerous complications keep the interest in this film alive throughout. Wallace Beery as "Sweedie" is the central character and is supported by Robert Bolder, Ben Turpin, Charlotte Mineau and Leo White. It is sure to draw laughs from the class that enjoy slapstick comedy. Bessie and the hair dresser quarrel, so she writes a note to the tailor, telling him that she will dine with him that evening. Sweedie, the laundress, who is desperately in love with the tailor, hears of the dinner engagement, and writes a letter to him saying that she is going to drown herself in the dye vat. After "rigging up" a dummy resembling herself, she sticks it head first into the vat. She then leaves, but returns shortly after in a man's attire, telling the tailor she is Sweedie's brother. He weeps and wails, declaring that if Sweedie were only alive he would marry her in a minute. Sweedie then pulls off her disguise, and the tailor falls in a dead faint. C.J.C.

> It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. In that case please see that we are advised of your film titles and release dates, and furnished with a brief synopsis of the story. This department is intended for every film manufacturer, whether he uses our advertising pages or not.

His Inspiration—KALEM (Two Reels) November 2.—Franz has become a famous composer through his wife, who is the source of his inspiration. He becomes infatuated with Vera, an actress, and she elopes with him, because it means publicity for her. She leaves him and, ashamed to return home, he becomes a wanderer. He cannot compose new songs and is soon a beggar. His wife refuses other suitors, feeling certain that he will return some day, and composes a new song. Mental telepathy transfers the song to Franz's mind, and he becomes rich and famous again. He then learns that it was Anna that originally composed the song and humbly returns to her.

A Partner to Providence (The Beloved Adventurer Series, 8th installment)—LUBIN—November 2.—Lord Cecil is rescued from a train wreck by Holt, cashier of a construction company, who takes him to the home of his sweetheart. Paterson, general superintendent of the construction company, plans to rob their safe and arranges a dummy to supplant the cash wallet. Lord Cecil sees the act. Holt takes the dummy from the safe as he fears a robbery. The safe is blown and Paterson and his confederates manage to throw the reflection of the crime upon Holt. Holt tries to explain why he took the money from the safe, but finds he has only the dummy. Paterson accuses him of using the dummy as a means to successfully "get away" with the real wallet. Lord Cecil, however, rights matters and then passes out of Holt's life forever.

Rosemary, That's For Remembrance—SELIG (Two reels) November 2.—Dorinda, an orphan, goes to live with the Greers where she meets and falls in love with Harvey, the Greer's only child. In the garden he explains the meaning of rosemary as given by Ophelia in "Hamlet" and she cherishes the sentiment. When he is summoned to Washington, Dorinda receives a sprig of rosemary to remind her that he still remembers, but later he meets Margaret Snow a society bud and proposes. Margaret rejects him when she learns of his humble parentage, and later on Dorinda is called upon to aid Margaret in a time of trouble and responds so nobly that Harvey realizes she is the girl for him. Adda Gleason, Edith Johnson and Earle Foxe featured. See review page 581 of issue of October 31.

The Mystery of Brayton Court—VITAGRAPH—November 2.—Determined to get possession of Brayton Court, Antonio Marco poisons Stephen Arkwright. Ione, Arkwright's daughter, inherits the estate, and Antonio also poisons her, using a slower acting drug, which does not kill her. Lynn Darmon, a struggling young doctor is called in and he suspects the poison plot and secures two detectives. They follow Antonio to a lawyer's office, where he is negotiating to secure the estate, and place him under arrest. Lynn receives his reward from Ione.

Fires of Fate—ESSANAY—November 3.—If the exhibitor is looking for a single reel, heart interest film, with a "punch" this is the one he wants. The fire scenes, taken during a real conflagration, are realistic and exciting. Richard C. Travers and Ruth Stonehouse are the only principals but they give an appealing touch to the love affair which runs through it. A most praiseworthy offering. Dick Fellows is jilted by his sweetheart, and is left with a beautifully furnished little apartment. He locks up the flat and moves to a hotel. Months pass and a mysterious girl in the hotel interests him. She is alone and evidently has some great sorrow. Discovering that she is unable to pay her bill, Dick is more interested than ever. One night fire sweeps sweeps the hotel. Dick risks his life to rescue her, and learns that she has been deserted by the man she came to marry. Amidst the roar of the flames their sorrows are united in a bond of common love, and are saved from death only after a terrible struggle. They are married and the little apartment comes into use. C.J.C.

A Boomerang Swindle—LUBIN (Two reels) November 3.—Barton and Hanscon, two swindlers sojourning in a little country village plan to swindle Jouhan Splivers, a farmer, out of a few hundred dollars. Splivers wishes to sell his farm and Hanscon offers him $500 for it. Barton offers him a thousand more and when Hanscon sees Splivers again, he tries to buy off the farm for $1,000. Tom Colt, a lawyer in love with Splivers' daughter, sees through the plot and through a ruse convinces the crooks that it is a valuable piece of property. They pay Splivers $6,000 for it and the farmer is made wealthy while the crooks have a worthless piece of land on their hands.

Masks and Faces—Biograph (Two Reels) November 3.—Sir Ernest Vane goes to London, leaving his wife behind him, where he becomes infatuated with Peg, an actress. Kitty Cline of Peg's company is jealous of the star's success, and tells Vane's wife of his doings. The wife goes to the city and separates her husband and Peg. The actress appears not to care, but her heart is really breaking for she loves Vane. She goes to the house of Triplet, an artist, who has painted her portrait. At Vane's request Mabel follows and pleads so pitifully that Peg determines to help her. Vane's false friend attempts to force his attetions on his wife, and Peg, through a clever ruse, saves Mrs. Vane and causes the downfall of the false friend. Vane and his wife are reconciled, while Peg goes away.

A Twisted Affair—Columbus — November 3.—The Browns and Smiths are neighbors in a suburban town. A niece from South Africa writes the Browns that she will visit them, and says that she may be identified by a large black bow on her hat. The Smiths are told by an employment agency that a new cook of the same description will be sent there. Brown's chauffeur meets Smith's cook, and brings her to Brown's home where she is welcomed as their niece. Smith's coachman mistakes Brown's niece for the new cook, and she is taken to the Smith home and treated as such. Numerous complications follow in rapid succession, but eventually the niece comes into her own, and the cook loses the position she was to have had.

Shorty—Edison—November 3.— Yale Boss plays the titular role in this story of the redemption of a wharf rat. William Bechtel, Bessie Learn, and Edward O'Connor complete the quartette of principals in the picture. Shorty is the right-hand man of Mike, the leader of a wharf gang. The gang learns that Captain Arnold has arranged to carry some precious jewels on his next voyage, and plans to rob him of them. Mike obtains a berth on the ship as first-mate on the strength of the sailor's certificate, and then hires the other gangsters as his crew. A short distance out they mutiny, and imprison both the captain and his daughter, Ethel. Shorty resents their treatment of the girl, with whom he has become quite friendly. He entices the men to enter the hold, locks the hatch, frees the captain, gives him his revolver, and rows to shore for the police. As a reward Shorty is adopted by the captain and becomes a member of the Arnold family. C.R.C.

Lizzie the Life Saver—Kalem—November 3.—Bud and Ham, janitors, lose their positions, when the war which rages betwen them victimizes the owner of the building. Lizzie the owner's stenographer is discharged, when she flirts with his nephew, and she becomes a life-saver at the beach. All the men immediately endanger their lives, so she may save them. Bud escapes from Ham by jumping into a motor boat. Both become very wet in the chase which follows. The owner comes to the beach and is saved by Lizzie, and consents to her marriage to his nephew. Bud is dragged into a sewer, and Ham awaits at the outlet for him to emerge.

The Telltale Knife—Selig—November 3.—One of the typical Tom Mix Western dramas which Selig has made famous the world over. Mix plays the role of Tom Mason, a cattle rustler, and following his discovery by the sheriff engage in one of the most thrilling and sensational running fights that the screen has ever depicted. The band of rustlers is completely exterminated before the battle ends. N.G.C.

On the Stroke of Five—Vitagraph (Two Parts) November 3.—Vance Reynolds visits Paris alone after his graduation, as his brother, Guy, who had contemplated making the trip, is unable to accompany him. Vance becomes infatuated with Vera, an adventuress, and when she jilts him he kills himself. Guy arrives in Paris and vows vengeance on Vera. He forces her to fall in love with him and then discloses his identity and purpose. She is heart-broken, and stabs herself. Jenks and the Janitor—Edison—November 4.—A suit of clothes of an unusually loud black and white check cause considerable trouble in this subject. Mrs. Jenks' jealousy incites all the disturbance and Dan Mason as the janitor, May Abbey as the hired girl, and Edward O'Connor as Mr. Jenks share in the disastrous results. Mr. Jenks returns home one night with a new suit of clothes, but his wife is not favorably impressed with its odd cut and startling color scheme. The janitor proves to be an eager customer and, fixing up in the clothes, makes a call on the Jenks' cook. Mrs. Jenks, thinks that the man in the check suit is Jenks and begins to remonstrate with a broom. The janitor runs down the street, closely followed by Mrs. Jenks. The arrival of Jenks saves him from a beating. C.R.C.

The Fable of How Uncle Brewster Was too Shifty for the Tempter—Essanay—November 4.—Lack of condensed action hurts this production but some of the incidents will draw laughs. Like all the Ade comedies it serves to point a moral and introduces several very human characters. Frank Owens has the title role. Aunt Mahaley knew Uncle Brewster was sporty, and when he went to the city to pay off his mortgage, she warned him about being too free with his coin. He visited Roger Talbot, holder of the mortgage, who handed him two cigars. Uncle Brewster was dying for a smoke, but he remembered what Aunt Mahalay told him about cutting down expenses, and traded the cigars for a couple of boiled eggs, saving the price of lunch. At a fruit exhibit he filled his carpet bag, saving supper money. Before leaving the hotel he packed away everything in sight, so when he returned to Aunt Mahaley he was minus railroad fare, but plus many towels and hotel souvenirs. Moral: Some people are good because it comes high to be otherwise. C.J.C.

The Prison Stain — Kalem (Two Reels) November 4.—Kelsey and Jean are released from prison on the same date. Later Jean marries Gregg, a lawyer, and Kelsey becomes manager of a lumber company. The girl arrives, but is soon bored by the hotel, and visits an old lady, helping her do the washing which she takes in. She meets the bachelor under these conditions and they fall in love. The bachelor's mother finally persuades her son to join a social affair to be given at the hotel, and there he meets the girl and, having fallen in love with her before, he does not change his mind now.

Slippery Slim and the Impersonator—ESSANAY—November 5.—Victor Potel does some more of his eccentric acting in this film and, assisted by Harry Todd, Margaret Joslin and Ernest Van Pelt, he keeps the story subject alive with action, of the active type, every moment. The photography is very good, considering the many cut-backs used. Mustang Pete slips away with Slippery Slim's diamond ring and goes to Sophie's home where he asks her to become his wife. She accepts him and he gives her Slim's ring, which he had bought for the purpose of presenting to her himself. Slim is in great despair when he discovers his ring is missing, and his sorrow is complete when he goes to Sophie's home and finds Mustang holding her on his lap. That night he goes to the theater to forget his troubles. There is a female impersonator in the cast, and after the show Slim becomes acquainted with him. He persuades him to pose as a beautiful blonde and make eyes at Mustang. Mustang falls for it, and is having the time of his life, when Slim brings Sophie upon the scene. She throws the ring at Mustang's feet, and turns to Slim whom she accepts as her future husband. C.J.C.

Fifteen years later Frank and Mariam again meet at a prom, given by the university which Frank is now attending. They fall in love and Carrol agrees to their marriage on condition they wait until Frank has made good in the world. Carrol and Mariam leave for another cruise and Fulton calls Frank home, as Alexander, a rival, has taken much of his business away through crooked work. Carrol again puts into the shipyard and learns, through Alexander, that Frank is of poor parentage. Alexander plans to use Carrol's yacht as a means to smuggle arms into a warring country, but Frank warns Mariam of the plan. In an attempt to save her father's yacht, she is carried out to sea in it by the revolutionary agents. Frank follows her in his motorboat and when he effects her rescue Carrol agrees to their marriage.

The Choice—VITAGRAPH—November 5.—Ferron, a revenue officer, is sent to a fishing village to arrest smuggling suspects. He saves the life of Edith, a daughter of one of the smugglers, and is injured in so doing. He is nursed back to health by her, and discovers her father's occupation. He succeeds in corralling the gang and locks them in a wharf shed. Edith pleads with him not to turn them over to the authorities. Ferron remains true to his duty, and the men are placed under arrest. Edith's father, however, proves to be a revenue officer from another department, and he wins the girl after having remained true to his duty.

Getting the Sack—BIOGRAPH—November 6.—Susie's sweetheart is spurned by her father and bullied by his two rivals, one of whom is father's choice. To get rid of the unwelcome suitors and place her sweetheart in a favorable light, Susie concocts a scheme. She writes Tom a letter saying that she will elope with him, and that he must hide in the sack which he will find in the hallway of her home. Joe also gets a letter, directing him to carry off the sack, as Susie will be hidden in it. The program is somewhat mixed by the entrance of two burglars, who make a noise and arouse father. Joe gets the charge of buckshot intended for the thieves and is chased by the old man. After many adventures he reaches the minister's with his burden, the sack is opened, and Tom is found within. Susie and her sweetheart, meanwhile, have captured the burglars, which so pleases her father that he consents to their marriage.

A Regular Rip—BIOGRAPH—November 6.—A vaudeville team visits friends and find the wife very unhappy because of her husband's habits. She has driven him from the house, and he, going hunting, falls asleep in the woods. Passing that way, the vaudeville performers see him asleep, and the copy of "Rip Van Winkle" which he has been reading suggests a plan. They make him up as Rip and cover him with leaves. When he is aroused he believes he has slept for twenty years, and returns home in a daze. The schemers meanwhile have made up his wife to look like an old woman, and she carries out the joke by asking her husband where he has been for the last twenty years. When he swears that he will never touch another drop, the trick is disclosed.

Robert ignores her at times and Inez in a moment of madness aboard Robert's yacht, cuts the guard rope and pushes Rita overboard, though in so doing she herself loses her balance and falls into the water. Alridge dives after and rescues Rita, but the deck hand who tries to save Inez reaches her too late. Edward Earle, Gertrude McCoy and Kate Jordan featured. See review on page 145 of this issue.

Broncho Billy's Mission—Essanay—November 7.—G. M. Anderson and Marguerite Clayton have the leads in this pleasing and highly dramatic film of the West. Suspense is maintained throughout but not to the exclusion of good acting. The city girl decided to turn over a new leaf, and go West where she can start life anew. Several years later finds her the wife of a minister in a small western town and extremely happy. One day she and her husband find Broncho Billy, an outlaw, lying in the road suffering from a wound. They take him to their home, and while the minister hastens for a doctor, his wife dresses the wound. She steps into an adjoining room where she is confronted by the man who had ben so cruel to her years before. He threatens to expose her if she refuses to give him money. Broncho hears the conversation, and although in a weakened condition, forces the scoundrel to return the money, escorts him across the boundary at the point of a gun and then returns to give himself up to the sheriff. C.J.C.

The Man in the Vault—Kalem—November 7.—John Norton, a master cracksman, poses as a successful business man, and opens bank vaults by use of electrical tools. Tom, Norton's son, is sent to Maxdale to secure information regarding the bank which he and his father plan to rob. Tom falls in love with the bank president's daughter, and is made secretary to the president. Norton determines to burglarize the bank, and opens the vault on the night that Tom and the girl announce their engagement. The president goes to the bank, and surprises Norton by imprisoning him in the vault. Tom helps his father escape. Norton realizes his son's great sacrifice and gives himself up to the president. When he declares he is through with the old life, he is forgiven and allowed to go free, and Tom marries the girl.

Kidnapping the Kid—Lubin—November 7.—Hans and Jake, two curbstone musicians, are inspired to kidnap Willie Gold, son of the town's richest man, thereby realizing a fortune. They secure a wheelbarrow and cart Willie some distance from the town, but when he sees a friend returning to the city in an auto, he politely bids them good-bye and leaves them. His nurse finds him playing in the same place she had left him, perfectly content, but it is extremely different with Hans and Jake.

The Honor of the Force—Lubin—November 7.—Gip, the dip, sets out to secure the day's meal for a gang of crooks and is about to get some pies which Nora has baked for her sweetheart, Officer Bradley, when Bradley spoils the feed. The crooks get on a rampage and take possession of the police station. The chief offers promotion to the "cop" who can oust the gang and Officer Bradley, with the aid of a bottle of chloroform and a sponge, accomplishes the feat. He is then made sergeant of the force.

Helene is his own child, but Archilles is a foundling whom the professor has adopted. When the children have grown to manhood and womanhood, they are overcome by a desire to see the world, and go to the city. All is new to them for awhile, but soon they tire of conventions. When Helene sees Archilles in the arms of a society girl, she again longs for Arcadia, and runs away from the city. Archilles attempts to swim to their island, and is nearly drowned, but is found by Helene on the beach. The two find perfect happiness together, and return to the professor, determined that they shall never again leave the land of Arcadia.

Mutual Program

Mutual Weekly, No. 96—Mutual—October 29.—Many vivid and interesting scenes from the European war zone give Americans a pictorial idea of the great conflict now raging abroad. Some close up and extremely interesting views are also given of the sinking of the United Fruit steamer "Matapan" in Ambrose Channel, after its collision with the steamer "Iowa". The rest of the topical is diversified in character and of general interest.

Our Mutual Girl—Chapter 42—Reliance—November 2.—Margaret spends a whole half day looking at rich gowns and furs at Stern Brothers, after which she pays a visit to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and becomes a member. Then follows a trip to Bideawee Home and the dog pound where she is shown a group of dogs who are to be asphyxiated the following morning. In an effort to save them she calls up Ralph Hamilton for advice, but receives a discouraging reply. She then has them put into her automobile and starts with them for her home in Westchester. Young Hamilton meanwhile repents his hasty refusal of help to Margaret and journeys to her country home to make up. Shortly afterwards when Margaret enters the yard she discovers Ralph down on his hands and knees playing with two forlorn puppies, and agrees to forgive him after all.

False Pride—Majestic—November 3.—Hiram Judson, a poor, proud old man, living with his grown daughter, Nora, and her younger sister, Ellen, refuses to let the elder take a business position. But one day comes word that Judson's small income has been swept away. The father still refuses to allow his daughter to work, and himself seeks a job. The only thing he can get is a position as porter in an office building. Nora, without his knowledge, manages to get a place with the firm which has announced to them her father's failure. She remits to him her weekly wage, giving him to understand that this slight amount has been retrieved from the disaster. At last the truth comes out. The old father is forced to reconcile himself to his daughter's marriage with Frank Coulton, whom he has long opposed, and to letting someone else take care of him in his old age.

Scene from "Beauty's" "The Tightwad" released Nov. 3.

The Desperado—Broncho—(Two reels) November 4.—While Jim Lewis, who has a price on his head, and his girl pal, "Tom", are waiting in a hotel in a western town to meet Jim's mother, the sheriff plans his arrest. Jim manages to escape but Tom is arrested. A month later, Jim secretly returns to his mother's home. He is trailed and Mom Lewis persuades Jim to spend the night in a dugout nearby. While a posse is searching the barn and outbuilding, she makes her way to the dugout and keeps firing on the posse all night while Jim attempts to make his escape, but he is wounded, and reaches the house in a roundabout way, where Mom finds him dead. In the meantime, "Tom" has been making desperate love to her jailer and through him manages to get away, but is brokenhearted when she returns home to find Mom Lewis mourning at the grave of Jim.

The Miner's Peril—Reliance—November 4.—Jimson, a mine foreman, incurs the hatred of Pedro and Madro by discharging them for stealing ore. Matters become worse when Jimson rescues Nina from the unwelcome attentions of Pedro, and when the foreman and Nina become married Pedro swears dire vengeance. He and his pal follow them across the hills one day, capture them, bind Nina in one corner of an old windlass shack, and leave Jimson suspended in the ore bucket several hundred feet above the rocks below. Then to torture Nina they place a long candle beside the rope, light it, and remind the girl that when it burns down it will ignite the rope and cause Jimson to fall to certain death. Some time after the Mexicans' leaving Nina hits upon the plan of knocking down a long plank leaning against the wall, pushing it in such a way that it extinguishes the candle. Her attempt proves successful, and the bound couple are rescued by the morning shift of workmen.

The Famine—Domino—November 5.—Misao, daughter of Ichii, a poor Japanese farmer, is in love with Yoshiro, but consents to marry Toyomo, who pretends that he wishes to marry her, and offers her father one hundred yin as a dowry. Misao, has helped Horisho, a beggar, by dividing her last crust with him, during a famine. Hirosho is determined to help the lovers out. That night while Toyomo is making advances to Misao, Hirosho slips into the room and kills Toyomo. He tells Misao that Yoshiro awaits her. Toyomo's servants, finding his body, call in the Japanese and a mob sets out for the beggar. He is killed but lives long enough to see Misao and Yoshiro safely in a boat out to sea.

In Old Italy—Domino—(Two reels) November 5.—Raniero Benedetti, an Italian criminal, masquerading in the guise of a gentleman, has won the love of Beatrice Nuccoli, and plans to lead her into an immoral life. Antonio Fasani, a gendarme, recognizes the badly wanted fugitive, Raniero Benedetti. Beatrice is taken out by Raniero and drugged, then taken to a cellar dungeon and sold by him. Beatrice's parents appeal to the gendarmes for aid. Antonio goes to their house, is shown a picture of Beatrice and recognizes her as the girl he saw with Raniero. He trails Raniero and rescues Beatrice. The gendarmes raid Raniero's place. Raniero escapes, he takes to smuggling. Antonio and his assistants leave for the border to capture Raniero. Antonio is injured. Raniero escapes and seeks shelter in Antonio's house, saying he is a traveler lost in the mountains. Beatrice, who has become Antonio's wife, recognizes Raniero. He seeks to make love to her, but she escapes from him, and leaves the house on horseback. Raniero pursues her, he overtakes her, starts to throw her over the cliff when he is spied by Antonio, who shoots him.

Scene from American's "Where the Road Parts," Released Nov. 4.

The Game of Life—Kay-Bee—(Two Reels) — November 6. — Amy Clune, sweetheart and stenographer to John Boyd, a struggling young contractor, repels Jim Malone, political boss. Jim Malone tells John Boyd to put him right with Amy and he will give him contracts enough to put him on his feet. Boyd refuses and kicks Malone out of his office. To cut down office expenses, Amy leaves. Jim Malone gets Madame Roberts, who conducts an immoral house, to lure Amy to the house. Seeing Amy's advertisement for a position in the paper, Madame Roberts goes to her home and with promises of a fine salary, brings Amy to her house, telling her that she has some important letters to get out right away. Madame leaves Amy alone, locking the door after her. In a short while Malone comes in. Amy realizes that she has been trapped. Malone tells her if she will consent to become his mistress he will not only give her everything that she could wish for, but will also give her the signed contracts for John Boyd. Amy consents, telling him to go to his office for the contracts. While he is gone, she writes a note to the effect that she is imprisoned at No. 18 Adams street, and asks the bearer to deliver it to 102 Preston street. She drops the note from the second story window. A small boy picks it up and delivers it to her home. Boyd hurries to the police station. He and the police reach the house just as Amy is having a struggle with Malone, who has returned with the contracts. The house is raided and Malone arrested. When Boyd and Amy reach her home she shows him the contracts which have Malone's signature.

A Woman Scorned, by Russell E. Smith—Reliance—(Two reels)—November 7.—A robbery by yeggs is committed and a famous detective, aided by a newspaper reporter, set out to capture the robbers. A bottle containing a few drops of "soup" leads the detective and the reporter to the railroad yards. Stamped into the dirt nearby is the wrapper which once contained the dynamite from which the "soup" was made. A visit to the main powder factory brings to light the fact that the dynamite was bought by George Williams of Redding, Cal., for the avowed purpose of blasting tree stumps. The detective and newspaper man search the slum hotels for "Williams," whose signature, reversed, they finally find on a hotel register. They raid his rooms, but he and his pals get safely away. The sleuths are finally helped to find the yeggs by the assistance of a former sweetheart of Williams. The fury of a woman scorned results in the final arrest of the yeggs after a big fight.

Max's Money—Royal—November 7.—Max and his wife are employed as butler and maid in the home of a banker. The banker and his wife go to a summer resort, leaving the servants in charge of the house. Max finds his master's wallet and his wife persuades him to take her for a vacation on the money. Meanwhile, Max has fallen heir to a huge fortune and a law firm has detectives hunting him. The banker and his wife discover that they have left the wallet behind and wire for it. They find that their house is empty. Returning, they collide with Max and his wife, who have squandered the money and have been evicted from their last stopping place. The detectives also arrive upon the scene, and Max thinks that he is to be arrested. He runs, but after an exciting chase, is captured, when he and everybody concerned learn of his amazing good fortune.

Keeping a Husband — Thanhouser—November 8.—On the morning of her silver wedding anniversary, Mrs. Strong writes in her diary—"Married twenty-five years today, and I still love my husband." The daughter of an old friend arrives for a promised visit, and at a lawn party Miss Ray and John Strong become obviously devoted. Mrs. Strong goes home early. "Good husbands are hard to get," she says to herself, "I am going to keep mine." When Strong and the youthful visitor return their philanderings in the hall are interrupted by the entrance of the wife. The next moment they realize that she does not see them, but is gliding past with eyes fixed, like one walking in her sleep. Strong goes to their room greatly concerned. Caddie pretends to be asleep. The maid knocks with a note from Miss Ray. Mrs. Strong awakes. The message reads: "Thanks for a delightful visit. But I am homesick for the city and am leaving by the first train in the morning." Mrs. Strong puts her arms around the husband whom she had loved twenty-five years. And as he buries his face in her shoulder, she kisses the top of his head and smiles wisely.

The Tear That Burned—Majestic—(Two Reels)—November 8.—Meg was one of the painted women who had reached the point where she didn't care. Anita, her room-mate, dying, told the cadet who ran Meg and Anita the story of her old blind mother in another land. After the funeral the cadet told Meg she was to go with him and impersonate Anita and fool the old blind mother, and after gaining her confidence, make a haul of all that was golden, and together they'd live and go straight. Meg fell for the scheme. All that was good of affection and wealth was showered upon her and at night the blind mother went to the bedside of her supposed daughter and her tears of joy burned to Meg's calloused heart. The cadet threatened to expose Meg after Meg confessed to him that she didn't have the heart to double-cross the old, love-hungered mother. And the cadet meant to do it. But a burglar, escaping from a flying cop, ran across the cadet's path and the cadet stopped the bullet. Meg heard the news with something more than joy. Her past was dead. And there was the old blind mother to love.

Universal Program

Animated Weekly—Universal—October 28.—Actual scenes taken on and around the battlefields of Europe is the feature of this film. The English fleet doing patrol duty in the Baltic sea, the departure of Kitchener's troops for training quarters in England. England's prisoners of war, caring for the wounded in London and shipping horses from New Orleans to the battlefields are among the many glumpses of the titanic struggle which are given. The sinking of the S. S. Matapan and the arrival of the Buy-a-bale-of-cotton messenger in New York are also included, as are Hy. Mayer's cartoons.

The Turn of the Tide—Imp (Two reels) November 2.—Tom's suit for the hand of old fisherman Brown's daughter is looked upon unfavorably by her father. For no reason at all, apparently, the old man refuses to allow Tom to call upon Nell even when the young fellow offers to pay off his note to Clem Masters, a debt that Brown had planned on cancelling by having Masters marry Nell. The girl secretly gives Tom the note and he pays it. When he returns with it receipted he finds no one home so places the note in its hiding place in the old armchair. Brown sees him leaving the house and on being refused an explanation, he draws a gun and shoots, wounding Tom in the head. This causes a lapse of memory during which Tom falls before the wiles of a pretty girl, follows her to her city home, and there is rudely awakened to the fact that she is only amusing herself with him. He settles down in business and becomes successful. And all this time Nell has remained true to his memory. He visits his old seashore home, and is the means of saving Nell who has ventured out in a storm in an open boat. He carries her home and places her in the armchair. The bottom drops out disclosing the old note. This revives his memory. He recognizes Nell, a happy reunion takes place, and Brown agrees to their marriage.

The Wall Between—Sterling—November 2. The estates of Miss Jones and Mr. Smith are divided by an English brick wall. Mr. Smith's nephew arrives from boarding school. After Mr. Smith has had some words with Miss Jones concerning some chickens which he chased over the wall into her back yard, the nephew carries on desperate flirtation with Mrs. Smith's niece. They start to climb over the wall but are caught by their respective guardians and are warned never to attempt it again. However they find a way to get together. When in the midst of their little flirtation they are caught by the guardians who soften at this picture of childish bliss and decide to be friends.

His Big Chance—Victor—November 2.—The Cliftons employ a new maid, a refined and apparently well educated girl. During Mr. Clifton's absence Mrs. Clifton flirts with a young fop, Trinker, at a bridge party, and the maid discovers him kissing her. One of the guests, Harsleigh, makes a strong impression on the maid, and when Mrs. Clifton offers her anything she might wish, to keep her secret the maid asks that she be taken to Newport as an heiress. Here Harsleigh falls in love with her, proposes, and is accepted. One of the girls taunts him with being engaged to a maid, and on his bethrothed's refusal to tell who she really is he denounces her as an impostor. At this moment a foreign Chancellor enters with a message for the maid summoning her back to the Royal Palace. When Harsleigh realizes that the maid is a Princess he begs forgiveness and declares his love for her, but "his big chance" is past.

They Didn't Know—Crystal—November 3. Hans and Mike are fascinated by the beautiful actress, Miss Vivian De Gay. Deciding to have some fun at their expense, she accepts an invitation to dine with them. Her husband, a rough westerner, returns home and she tells him about Hans and Mike. He joins in the fun and has Vivian write them a letter asking them to call. Hans and Mike take Vivian to dine. She phones her husband and he huries to the scene. While they are enjoying themselves, he, unseen by Hans and Mike, takes his wife's place at the table and places two pistols under their noses. When the shooting begins Hans and Mike do a marathon that is a riot.

The Boy Mayor—Nestor—November 3.—This is an educational drama founded on the work of the Junior Government of Portland, Oregon, which is composed of boys elected to the offices by a committee of prominent business men. Eugene V. Rich, the boy mayor, and Earle R. Goodwin, his secretary, are featured in the picture.

Trey O' Hearts—Gold Seal (Two reels) November 3.—This is the fourteenth instalment. Marraphat and Jimmy leave the old mine with the belief that Alan, Rose and Barcus have perished in it but such is not the case. Their number added to by Judith's arrival, the quartet journeys onward, passing the hotel at which Marrophat and Jimmy are staying. The quartet attempt to escape on motorcycles, but are soon overtaken by Marrophat and Jimmy in a racing machine. The motorcycle carrying Alan and Rose shoots over a cliff and down a ninety foot declivity, but, luckily, its riders escape serious injury. They have many hair-breadth and thrilling escapes while climbing back up the cliff's jagged face, but finally accomplish it. Marrophat and Jimmy have attempted to reach them by entering the canon and climbing up the hill. As the party reaches the top of the cliff Rose discovers the car toiling upward. They secure a hose from a hydraulic mining outfit, and turn it on the car. The powerful stream strikes the machine like a cannon-ball and carries it back over the edge of the cliff. Exit Marrophat and Jimmy for good.

The Star Gazer—Nestor—November 3.—The star gazer is an aged astronomer who makes a meager living for himself and daughter off the revenue of his telescope-stand on a street corner. His daughter and a newspaper reporter are engaged, but their marriage is balked by their lack of wedding clothes. The father tries to raise money by getting a second mortgage on his home, but is unsuccessful. One day while his daughter is polishing with kerosene oil a fire breaks out in the room and the furnishings are burned. The firemen become suspicious when they find a charred rag soaked with oil on the floor. When the father tries to collect his insurance he is jailed for arson. Shortly afterwards a fresh fire breaks out and in searching for the cause the reporter finds that the sun's rays passing through the telescope and focused on the floor are so intensified by the magnifying glass that they finally ignite the flooring. The old man is released and allowed his insurance, and the young couple are supplied with the necessary funds for marriage.

The Return—Eclair (Two reels) November 4. Tom Henderson, a young ranchman is in love with Edna Williams, the daughter of a neighboring ranchman. Tom's father was a drunkard, and Tom inherits the weakness. It gets the better of him until he is awakened to a realization of the depths to which he has sunk by Edna's breaking their engagement and marrying Jack Warren. After a time Jack deserts his wife and child and becomes a member of a band of smugglers. In the meantime Tom has become famous as a fearless ranger. He is assigned the task of running down the smugglers. It brings him near his home town and he pays a visit to Edna. Word comes that the smugglers are in the vicinity. In the fight which follows Tom is injured and Edna discovers, from the doorway, a man about to kill him outright. She shoots the man down and it turns out to be her husband. The old love betwen Tom and her is awakened.

The Hoodoo—Joker — November 4. Phil buys a necklace to present to his wife, and falls asleep on a bench in a park. A nurse maid picks up the necklace lying beside him, but does not have it long before it is stolen from her. Within the next few minutes it changes hands about five times, finally being offered to its original owner for two dollars. He raises a row, and in the crowd which gathers the possessor escapes, but runs into the arms of the law just as he is congratulating himself on his cleverness.

The Mystery of the New York Docks—Imp—November 5. One of the Universal Boy series. Matty accidentally hears a Hindu and some of the sailors around the docks arranging for a mysterious meeting that night. He is on hand when the meeting takes place, and sees the Hindu leave one of the steamers with a big bundle. He later discovers that it is a kidnapped girl, and notifies the Navy Yard officials who pursue the fleeing Hindu, capture him, and rescue the girl.

Let Us Have Peace—Rex (Two reels) November 5.—A comedy-drama with Ben Wilson, Franz Schmitt and Alphonse Marteau, veterans of the Franco-German war of 1870, are fast friends and neighbors. Max Schmitt and Jeanette Marteau are constant companions and their marriage is planned by their fathers. When the present war opened Marteau and Schmitt became separated by petty arguments, and for a time it looked as though they would force a break betwen the young couple. One day Schmitt somes upon Marteau lying wounded in the road, having been thrown from his horse. He binds up his wound and carries him home. When Marteau recovers consciousness and learns who it was befriended him he sends for Schmitt and his son and they agree to bury their grievances. The final scene shows them standing before Grant's Tomb on which is engraved "Let Us Have Peace."

Those Were the Happy Days—Nestor (Two Reels) November 6.—Eddie manages to marry his sweetheart, but instead of that being the end of their troubles with her irate fathers, it is only the beginning. Father abuses his son-in-law and sends his daughter off to boarding school. Eddie disguises himself with a flock of whiskers and answers the school's advertisement for a professor. Everything goes well until Eddie overhears the janitor tell the dean that the girls are smuggling eatables into their rooms. His chivalry aroused he warns the girls, but is caught in the act. He and his wife take refuge in the office where they meet Father who has come to inquire as to his daughter's progress. They finally coax him into a jovial mood, and his long deferred blessing follows.

Nan of the Hills—Powers—November 6.—Bob Walsh rushes into the restaurant kept by his fiancee with the news that he has uncovered a rich vein of gold. When he and Nan return to his claim they find that it has been jumped, and that Sheriff Haswell is protecting the claim-jumper. Bob then decides to hold up the claim-jumper's first shipment as a means of recovering part of what is rightfully his. The sheriff happens to be in the vicinity, and sets out in pursuit of Bob who hides in Nan's restaurant. The sheriff follows, and is met by Nan's denial of Bob's presence. When this fails to convince him the girl recalls to Haswell an affair in which she saved his life. Confronted with this page from the past Haswell rides away with his posse.

The Tale of a Lonesome Dog—Victor November 6.—Lady, the family pet, stands guard over the house during the family's absence. One day the chauffeur purposely leaves the door unlocked, and notifies a crook who is to ransack the house. Lady discovers him, and calls for aid by knocking off the telephone receiver and barking in the transmitter. Then she pounces upon the crook and keeps him busy defending himself until the policemen's arrival.

The Girl From Texas—Frontier—November 7.—Fred, a lawyer and real estate dealer, undertakes to pick out a location for Edythe Sterling, a Dallas, Texas, girl who is somewhat of a ventriloquist. So much so, in fact, that Fred gets an awful scare shortly after their meeting by her imitating the sound of a rattlesnake. Two crooks, recently released from jail, swear to "get" Fred, who was instrumental in having them convicted. While he and Edythe are visiting a deserted ranch they corner him in the shack, and are about to shoot him when they hear a significant rattle behind them. As they turn Edythe, who has been in hiding in the closet, gets the drop on them. Fred has proposed once to the girl and been refused. Now, when he finds the deed of sale made out in his name, he knows that Edythe has changed her mind, and decided to accept him.

Two Pals and a Girl—Joker—November 7.—Al and Kid, two cowboys, ride into Gulchville to squander their half-year's pay. They both fall in love with Widow Clemon who has long deplored the lack of business and welcomes their trade. The two rivals seek Lawyer Hearse's advice as how to win the widow's affection. He hits on a scheme whereby he and the widow will secure their entire pay. Hearse advises the cowboys to make Widow Clemons jealous by bringing other girls into the restaurant. They do so as far as their money will go, and then, when they think it is about time to cash in on the jealousy the widow has pretended to feel, they are met with a hearty laugh from both Hearse and the widow.

At the Crucial Moment—Eclair—November 8.—Dr. Bronson's mind is unbalanced by constant concentration upon his new theory of operation. Dr. Dayton, his fiancee's father, does not believe in it. For the sake of his family which is badly in need of money, a man offers himself to young Bronson as an experimental subject. Before the operation Dr. Dayton warns the attendants to be on the alert for any signs of insanity on the doctor's part. In the meantime the man's wife has learned of his intended sacrifice, and arrives with the police just as Bronson is about to perform the operation.

The Link That Binds—Rex (Two Reels) November 8.—Donald is attracted by the beauty of his father's stenographer, Jessie, and makes several calls upon her. Finally tiring of his conquest he turns from the girl to busy himself in club amusements. The girl confides in her father, telling him how Donald has deceived her, and he appeals to the boy's father. Mr. McClain agrees with Jessie's father that the couple must be married. When Donald refuses to carry out his father's command the latter forces him, at the point of a gun, to accompany him to the Guthrie home. When the young fellow sees the girl, and realizes her mental agony his anger changes to sympathy, and this, in turn, to love. The wedding ceremony is performed, and the couple starts out on a happy married life.

The Hoosier Schoolmaster—Masterpiece Films—(Five Reels)—The story is laid in a rural Indiana district in the year of 1831. Ralph Hartsook drifts into Flat Creek district, determined to prove that education is more powerful than physical strength. Hannah Thompson is a drudge in the home of the Means family. Mrs. Means, plans to have Ralph, the schoolmaster, marry her daughter. Ralph falls in love with Hannah, and his efforts to keep peace with the Means family keep him busy. From the day of his arrival, the schoolmaster is disliked by the Flat Creek people. Bud Means is the champion of the district and leads his followers in an attempt to oust Ralph. Pete Jones accuses the schoolmaster of a great crime, and when Bud tries to chastise him, he finds the other man is his physical, as well as his mental, superior. Events prove that Pete Jones was guilty of the crime he accuses Ralph of, and the schoolmaster now severs his connection with the Means family, and remembers Hannah the only friend who has remained true to him throughout.

Eclectic

A Soldier's Duty—Pathe—(Three Reels).—A drama dealing with war, but not a war-drama. Mythical principalities furnish the background for this tensely interesting story of a young officer who sacrifices his love and life in performance of his duty. The picture is a product of the Pathe-Sweden studio, and its outdoor scenes and photography are beautiful. Count Eric Konovitz, military attache of Strassland, is sent to Grovania to obtain information about the Myrano fortress. As it is near the Von Thiel home he manages to cultivate that gentleman's acquaintance and secure an invitation to visit for a time. In his eagerness to obtain complete sketches as to the fortress' position and strength he arouses suspicion and is forced to continue his investigations under the guise of a peasant. He takes lodgings at the home of Gunhild, a peasant friend of Therese Von Thiel, and she innocently tells him of a certain flume which empties at the fort. Konovitz floats down the flume to the fort and blows up the bridge. The next morning his body is found in the river. C.R.C.

General Special

The Genius—Klaw-Erlanger—(Three reels). In order to win the girl he loves, John Spencer must become an artist, so he arranges to pose as an instructor to a group of starving artists. His rival for the girl's hand, Percival Clutterbach, is a well known art connoisseur and he publishes Jack's "genius" to all the world. Josephine Van Dusen, the girl whom Jack loves, then permits him to announce their engagement, but Jack has fallen genuinely in love with Nell Graham, an artist's model, and tells Josephine that if he were to marry her his inspiration would cease. Nell overhears the conversation and when Jack confesses that he cannot paint a stroke, she realizes that he is doing it for her sake. Jack's confession, instead of being accepted as truth, is hailed as another eccentricity of his genius, though unable to rid himself of his great reputation he marries Nell and lives happi. ever after.

Judge Not—George Kleine—(Four reels). Judge Edward Martin is found murdered on a street corner, with no clue as to the identity of his murderer. Henry Duval, prosecuting attorney and a close friend of the dead man, resolves to locate the murderer. Though he is himself well-nigh sick from nervous trouble, he foregoes his vacation to run down the murderer. Duval obtains information which leads him to believe that Morrel, husband of a woman with whom the judge had a sentimental friendship, is the murderer and when the latter is arrested, he is unable to prove an alibi. At the trial, a physician, Morrel's friend, conclusively proves that Duval himself murdered the judge while mentally irresponsible.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

"Salomy Jane" a Masterpiece

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

THE California Motion Picture Corporation has at last released, through the Alco Film Corporation, that long-promised masterpiece, "Salomy Jane," and it is all and more than was heralded. There is not a dull moment in its entire six reels. Stories of the California pioneers, the men who answered the call of gold in '49, are as fascinating today as ever. The mining camps of that day were under the direct rule of the "unwritten law," and justice was administered from leather holsters, or, when there was more time for deliberation, with ropes. Owing to the citizens' preference for the latter, the scene of the story is called Hangtown.

The traditions connected with California's transformation from lawlessness and vigilance-committee form of trial to a more substantial form of government offer excellent themes for "punchy," adventurous stories, and Bret Harte's novel, "Salomy Jane's Kiss," is conceded to be one of the most attractive of them. It contains all the qualities of romance, feud, outlawry, fearlessness, and stern justice that followed in the wake of the gold rush, and they are vividly pictured in the photoplay which is founded on Paul's Armstrong's dramatization of Bret Harte's novel.

The exterior scenery is unsurpassable. Gigantic redwoods, beside which a horse appears no larger than a dog, beautiful woodland scenes, and bird's-eye views of hills with their winding trails, sharp precipices and tumbling streams all contribute their share towards placing this picture in a distinct class by itself for background. There are a few scenes in which the action could all but fall flat, without its being noticed by the spectator, so charming is the scenery.

Beatriz Michelena as "Salomy Jane."

The main plot is of gripping interest, which is strengthened and quickened by occasional surprising developments, flashes of humor, and thrilling effects. One cannot help beng thrilled by the distant view of the careening stage-coach, tearing at full speed along the winding road, passing, in some places, within a few feet of the edge of the abrupt ledge, or by a man's losing his footing on the side of a hill and rolling over a hundred feet down the rocky slope into the river.

The titular role of Salomy Jane Clay, a petite, vivacious Kentuckian, is absorbed in the delightful characterization of Beatriz Michelena. Jack Dart, known to Salomy as "the Man," finds an excellent impersonator of his stalwart form and generous, noble qualities in House Peters. Clarence Arper, as dignified old Colonel Starbottle, is the only merry-maker in the cast. The remainder of the players, among whom are William Nigh, as Rufe Waters; Ernest Joy, as Marbury, the gambler; Harold Meade, as Baldwin; Andrew Robson, as Yuba Bill; Clara Byers, as Mrs. Heath, and William Pike as Red Pete, are well chosen types for their parts and their work is sincere.

When Madison Clay and his daughter, Salomy Jane, arrive in Hangtown the girl becomes the center of attraction for all of the young fellows because of her beauty. Rufe Waters is her favorite suitor, and one day, in a fit of anger, she promises to marry him if he will kill Baldwin, who has insulted her. Rufe is too late in attempting the deed, for he arrives at Baldwin's shack just in time to se a stranger strangle him, the man having recognized in Baldwin the betrayer of his sister in the East.

Red Pete and Gallagher hold up the stage, and the citizens organize a vigilance committee to capture and hang them. Later the "Man" meets Salomy in the road and tells her he is starving and ready to give himself up for Baldwin's murder. She is strangely attracted to him, and gives him a supply of food, telling him to go back in hiding. The vigilantes run across him, and, confronted by Rufe, he confesses having killed Baldwin and is bound, preparatory to being hung. Just before he is led away Salomy rushes up to him and kisses him.

This puts new life into the "Man," and he manages to escape from his would-be executioners. Larabee, a fellow whose relatives were on feudal terms with the Clays in Kentucky, mistakes the "Man" for Clay, shoots at him and gets killed by the return shot. This brings on a series of complications, the end of which sees Salomy and the "Man" fleeing from the vigilantes in one direction, and Madison Clay, in another, all accused with having fired the shot that killed Larabee.

The refugees meet in the woods, and Clay denounces his daughter for having allowed the blame of her act to fall upon her father, whereupon the "Man" straightens out the tangle by telling the story of how he shot Larabee in self-defense. Thus reconciled, old Clay grants the stranger permission to marry his daughter. As the bethothed couple, mounted on one horse, ride toward a new home Salomy's curiosity gets the best of her and she wheels in the saddle with "Say, man, what's your name?"

The Life Photo Film Corporation, producers of "The Banker's Daughter," "The Greyhound," "Northern Lights," "Captain Swift," and "The Ordeal," have contracted with the Alco Film Corporation to distribute its future productions, the first of which will be "Springtime," by Booth Tarkington. After delving into the inner workings of the various program organizations, Mr. Roskam, the president of the company has chosen the Alco as a responsible, promising and most profitable organization for the manufacturer.

The first Life Photo production to be released through the Alco program will be "Springtime," by Booth Tarkington. Miss Florence Nash, who has gained an international reputation, will be featured in the role of "Madeline." Miss Nash, it will be remembered, made a wonderful hit in "Within the Law."

The company left for New Orleans on Monday last, with a cast of thirty prominent legitimate and motion picture stars, including such celebrities as Miss Florence Nash, Miss Adele Rey, "the lady beautiful," William H. Tooker, E. F. Roseman, Bert Gardner, Mrs. Sue Balfour, Frank Holland, E. F. Flannigan, Charles Travers and Warner P. Richmond. John C. Arnold has been selected as photographer and cameraman and William S. Davis, producer of many high class feature productions, including "The Conqueror" and "The Ordeal" will direct "Springtime." The picture will be released through the Alco program December 21, 1914.

Whole Circus in "Zudora"

An entire circus outfit, horses, wagons, tightropes, and tents were used in the first episode of "Zudora," Thanhouser's forthcoming serial. The wagons loaded with the impedimenta of the road circus, the pulling and hauling of "props," the tight rope stretched across the ring, all were in place. Even the side show barkers, busy with their "bally hooing," had their place in the scene, which on the screen is cut almost to a flash. Director Frederic Sullivan was so anxious to give full justice to the circus atmosphere that, despite the expense, and the shortness of the scene, an entire circus outfit was used. The effect on the screen is strikingly realistic and the viewer will just naturally imagine the cries of the jakers and the blatant trumpeting of the circus band.

Selznick Makes Tour of Branches

Lewis J. Selznick, general manager of the World Film Corporation, left last Saturday for a tour of inspection of that concern's branch offices. His first stop is Pittsburgh. From there he is to visit in turn Chicago, Minneapolis, Kansas City, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit and Buffalo.

American's "A Slice of Life"

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

THE problem of whether a woman is justified or not in marrying a man who has completely forgotten his past is presented in the two-part production of the American Film Manufacturing Company entitled "A Slice of Life," which is booked for release on November 9.

The idea behind the plot has been used before but it is convincingly presented by a set of well drawn characters. The answer in this case appears to be in the negative, despite the fact that in other works of fiction it has been decided otherwise. Under the prevailing conditions, however, the result is just what any audience would expect and at the finish there is left the suggestion of a romance which will soon dawn for the woman who has been left alone.

Jessie repulses the landlord's advances.

The acting of the splendid quartette of "Flying A" players, Winnifred Greenwood, Ed Coxen, George Field and Charlotte Burton, is worthy of the vehicle which they have been provided with and numerous camera effects, for which this company is noted, are apparent throughout. The director has given much thought to details in setting. Mr. Coxens' falls while climbing about a rocky river bed, in the early part of the story and in the last reel is very realistic and the actor must have anything but enjoyed the realism which he injected into these scenes.

Jim's case interests Betty.

The opening scenes of the photodrama disclose the love of Boyd Harte, a young physician, for Betty Morse, a girl who lives next door to him. Betty aspires to become an authoress but her efforts do not meet with the publisher's approval as they lack what he calls "a slice of life." Jim, a young author who is rapidly nearing the desired goal, is injured by a fall while fishing and his mind becomes a blank. A policeman finds him wandering on the streets and takes him to the station, where he is held until his identity can be discovered.

Jim and Betty discover their love.

Betty, in search of material from life, visits the station and meets Jim. In his past she believes she sees the touch of mystery and romance she desires and, through her influence, Boyd employs Jim to assist him about his home. Work soon restores all Jim's faculties except the knowledge of his past. He regains the genius for story writing, that has started him on the road to fame and when Betty finds a story he has written one day she is delighted. She hurries with it to the publisher and it is at once accepted.

The two now work together and their efforts highly please the public. Betty forgets Boyd in her love for her work and her only thought is to be writing beside Jim. The doctor, his heart calling for the woman he loves, stands back and says nothing until one day when he can no longer endure the strain he tells her of his love. She cannot accept him, however, as she feels she cares for nothing but her work. It is a different story, though, when Jim asks her to marry him, for suddenly she realizes that what she thought was love of work was really a desire to be near the man without a past.

She flies to his arms but a moment later frees herself and rushes away. In her room she struggles with herself to decide which course to take and Jim, in his room, realizes he has no right to ask her to marry him as he does not know what the past may hold. In another part of the city a woman is ejected from her home because she cannot pay the rent and is forced to move to the tenements. Betty meets the woman's little son, who is selling papers to help his mother, and is taken to the home. The woman's little baby is ill and Betty brings Boyd to care for it.

Days pass and Betty and Jim visit the woman, as the girl wishes the author to see and talk with her, that they may use her as a character in a story they are writing. When Jim enters the room the woman rushes to him with a cry of joy, as she recognizes in him her husband, who disappeared months before. Slowly Jim's memory returns and he folds his wife in his arms, as his former life of happiness with her is revealed to him. Betty leaves the room, realizing that she has found the "slice of life" the publisher wanted, but she realizes she has lost the man she loves. Happiness appears to be in store for her, however, for Boyd has remained firm in his love.

The cast for the production is as follows:

Betty Morse, a literary aspirant.....Winnifred Greenwood
Jim.....Ed Coxen
Boyd Harte, a young doctor.....George Field
Jessie, Jim's wife.....Charlotte Burton
Bobby, her son.....Cupid Cavens
Tom, chief of police.....John Steppling
Long, city editor.....William Bertram
Betty's mother.....Edith Borella
Police sergeant.....Perry Banks

Attractive Publicity

To creater a proper amount of public interest in the initial production of "Salomy Jane" in San Francisco, the Portola theater, one of the big motion picture houses, went to extraordinary lengths, such was its confidence in the popularity of the California Motion Picture Corporation's first photo-play. A carload of redwood trees,—a small forest of young, green sprouts from the Coast Range ridges, was brought to the city and used to fill the lobby of the Market street show house. It gave the place a woodsy odor and a California setting which instantly attracted attention —and attendance. The theater also arranged for an ancient stage in its publicity endeavors. During the week that "Salomy Jane" was shown, the old coach was driven through the streets of San Francisco, its seats filled with typical pioneer characters, the red-shirted stage driver, the plug-hatted gambler, the gun-fighter and the gold digger.

Patent No. 1,065,132. For a Simple Sprocket and Clutch. Issued to E. A. Ivatts, Paris, France, assignor to Compagnie Generale de Phonographes, Cinematographes et Appareils de Precision.

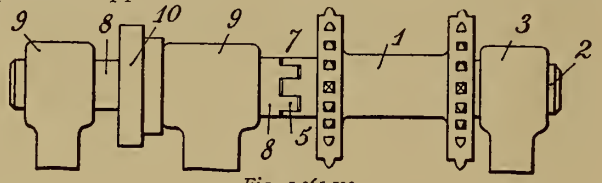

Fig. 1,065,132

The object of the invention is to provide for rapid and easy interchangeability of the drum by the operator without requiring the use of special tools or the services of a skilled mechanic, the simplified device being especially suitable for toys.

No. 1,065,134. For a Self-Lighting Projector. Issued to E. A. Ivatts, Paris, France, assignor to Compagnie Generales de Phonographes, Cinematographes et Appareils de Precision.

The improvement is intended "for private use or for educational purposes." The illumination is obtained from a miniature incandescent electric lamp lighted from a small magneto generator driven from the main crank shaft, which drives the film also.

The improvement of this invention comprises a special clutch designed to let a lecturer stop the film for purposes of explanation, yet continue to drive the electric generator to furnish light for projection.

In the device of illustration in the patent, the clutch, electric generator, film drive and crank shaft are so related that when the crank is turned forward it drives the electric generator and also the film, but when it is turned backward it drives the electric generator but not the film.

No. 1,065,133. For a Mixed Perforation of Film Strips. Issued to E. A. Ivatts, Paris, France, assignor to Compagnie Generale de Phonographes, Cinematographes et Appareils de Precision.

The invention has as its object the automatic framing of the image in the film window. To this end, a single perforation per image is made on one edge of the film strip, and the sprocket is given one tooth per shift upon that side. To facilitate the smooth driving of the film, the remaining side of the film is perforated more closely with holes and the sprocket is given more teeth upon that side, thus attaining at the same time an automatic framing device and a smoothly running film. The expedient is suited for toy machines and amateurs rather than for the hard service of the public picture theaters.

The much coveted role of "Jimmy Valentine" for the World Film Corporation motion picture version of the famous play, "Alias Jimmy Valentine," has been allotted to Robert Warwick.

"The Tell-Tale Hand"

Reviewed by Florence M. Enk

IN Essanay's three reel feature, "The Tell-Tale Hand," which is to be released through the feature department of the General Film Company, good acting, splendid out-door scenes, and a well-developed plot are some of the characteristics that go to make it an interesting film and one that will delight those who view it. G. M. Anderson, "Broncho Billy," plays the leading role and, as usual, carries his part well. His kindness to the saloon keeper's daughter after rescuing her from the cruel Tim Cantle, as well as his kindness towards the unfortunate Annie Fango, will make his character a popular one.

Marguerite Clayton as Annie Fango, the much-abused daughter of old Fango, a gambler, is exceedingly good. Her happiness in having found so good a friend as Broncho Billy is well displayed and later when the sheriff's posse, headed by Tim Cantle, arrest her on a charge of having murdered her father, one would think it were a true-to-life story, so good is Annie faints as the jury declares her guilty.

Miss Clayton's acting. Her emotional acting during the trial is well worth mentioning.

While the part is not a very complimentary one, Lee Willard as Tim Cantle, the villain, does commendable work, and his cruel treatment of Annie makes one feel hard toward him. The work of the sheriff, the judge and the prosecuting attorney is not to be overlooked. During the court room scene, in which Annie is tried for the murder of her father, the prosecuting attorney does much to keep the interest alive, while much amusement is afforded by the antics of the jury when it adjourns to decide Annie's fate. However, when the verdict of guilty is returned all feeling of amusement is brushed aside and in its place comes a feeling of deep sympathy for poor Annie.

As the story opens we find Annie Fango, daughter of Fango, a gambler, preparing the mid-day meal. Fango returns home for more money and Annie tries to persuade him not to take it. He curses his daughter and she flees from the house. On the way out she encounters Tim Cantle, an evil looking fellow, who tries to force his attentions upon her. Her father hearing her screams drives Tim off with his gun and brings Annie back home. Tim swears vengeance.

Annie again flees from her cruel father and finds a friend in Broncho Billy and together they go into the hills. Tim, returning, discovers Fango alone and stabs him. He places his blood-stained hand on Fango's shirt which leaves an impression. Before escaping he makes things look as if Annie were guilty of the crime and then notifies the sheriff. After examining the premises they strike out on Broncho Billy's and Annie's trail and, finding them, take Annie and lock her up as the murderess.

The day of her trial approaches and Broncho Billy noticing how anxious Tim Cantle is to have Annie charged with the murder, suspects him. He cannot connect Cantle with the murder, however, and the girl is forced to stand trial. A verdict of guilty is returned and Broncho Billy determines to prove that Annie is not guilty of the crime. He goes to a friend, a chemist, and secures a paper which is prepared for the taking of finger prints.

Broncho Billy secures an impression of Cantle's thumb.

Entering a saloon he finds Tim and, by a ruse, secures the impression of Tim's hand on the paper. Tim, fearing capture, escapes and a wild chase ensues in which Broncho Billy overtakes him and places the brutal Tim in the hands of the sheriff.

Broncho Billy then produces the paper with the impression of Tim's hand on it and, comparing the paper with the impression on the shirt, proves that they are identical. Although Tim denies the charge he is locked up. Broncho then disguises himself as the murdered Fango and confronts Cantle, forcing him to confess. Annie is released and all ends happily.

This production is the third of a series produced by Essanay in conjunction with the Ladies' World and the story will appear in this magazine for December. A paragraph is left out of the story and prizes are offered for those who can supply it after seeing the motion picture.

The cast is as follows:

Broncho Billy .....G. M. Anderson
The father .....Ernest Van Pelt
His daughter .....Marguerite Clayton
Her admirer .....Lee Willard
The sheriff .....True Boardman
The judge .....Harry Todd Prosecuting attorney .....Roy Clements

Thanhouser Mystery Deepens

Interesting views of the Capitol and other Washington public buildings, together with close-up views of such celebrities as the vice-president of the United States, Champ Clark, the secretary of the treasury, the secretary of war and other Washington notables make the twenty-first episode of the "Million Dollar Mystery" one of the most interesting yet screened.

In this same part of the Thanhouser serial, a number of feet of film are devoted to the Broadway Rose Gardens, the celebrated dance hall de luxe recently opened in New York.

The mystery in the "Million Dollar Mystery" grows deeper with this installment, for the treasure box, about which the whole story revolves, once more makes its appearance, this time the box being hauled up from its resting place at the bottom of a well by a mysterious pair of hands, long enough for the aforesaid hands to receive a sheaf of papers, replace the tin receptacle in which they had rested, close the box, and once more sink it in the well. Whom the hands belong to is not revealed, for nothing can be seen on the screen, but the hands and a portion of the forearms to which they are attached.

At the beginning of this episode, Jimmy Norton visits Washington and calls upon various government officials with regard to the mystery. At the Broadway Rose Gardens, where Braine and Countess Olga are visitors, the mysterious pair of hands, which had removed the papers from the hiding place in the treasure box, slides them through some portieres and intends that they shall be received by Florence Gray, who is dining on the other side of the portieres, but Florence's attention being momentarily distracted, Countess Olga takes the opportunity and herself receives the papers.

Making her way from the Rose Gardens, the countess returns to her apartments, and conceals the documents beneath a large bronze lion on the mantle-piece. Florence, suspicious that the papers have reached Olga's hands, has preceded Olga to her apartments and, standing behind a huge vase, beholds Olga hiding them, and at the first opportunity afforded she recovers them and hurries to her own home, where she turns them over to Jones, the butler.

Next day, while Jones is showing them to the Russian minister of police, who is stopping in New York under the alias of Henri Servan, he is suddenly called away, and Braine and another of the conspirators, who have been watching them from the shrubbery, seize and over-power Servan, take the papers from him, and escape on horse-back.

Jones is told of what has taken place and, mounted on another horse, sets out in pursuit. Meanwhile Servan releases himself from his bonds, hastens into the house, and informs Norton of what has occurred. Norton takes up the chase in an automobile, and eventually arrives at a bridge, just as Jones, who has caught up with Braine, is being over-powered by the latter.

With Norton's assistance Braine is over-powered, the papers removed from his pocket, and in order to escape arrest, Braine leaps off the bridge into the river below, thus closing episode twenty-one—N. G. C.

Dog Stars in "Pauline" Film

A dog is relied upon to furnish the unusual in the seventeenth episode of "The Perils of Pauline," and his performance is proof that the confidence was well placed. The canine star is a bull terrier, and in the picture is presented to Pauline by Lucille (Eleanor Woodruff), who is also the owner of it in real life. Miss Woodruff assisted the director in the making of the picture, and the dog responded admirably to their commands, acting in many scenes alone.

Harry fights to rescue Pauline from the counterfeiters.

Pauline is greatly attached to a dog lately received as a gift. One day it disappears, and shortly afterward the girl receives a note telling her that it has been found at a certain address. As Owen has arranged, Pauline is made a captive on arriving at the deserted house. The confederates make a great mistake, however, in not keeping a close watch on the dog. It escapes, returns to the Marvin home, and guides Harry back to the scene of the kidnapping. He manages to rescue Pauline, and they take refuge in a nearby cabin. Balthazar attempts to rout them by blowing up the cabin, but the dog runs out in the nick of time, grabs the burning fuse, and jumps from a bridge into the river with it. An outing party follows the dog back to the cabin, and overcome the besiegers, with the exception of Balthazar, who escapes.—C. R. C.

Modern Photoplay Advertising

By Jacob Wilk*

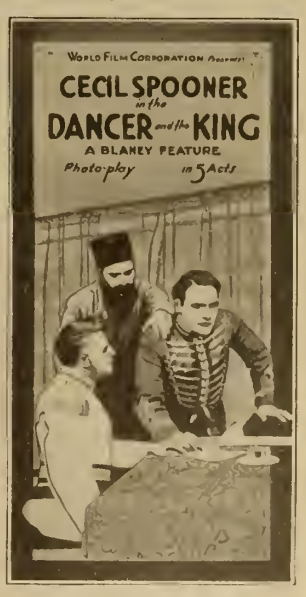
A GREAT many people who misjudge moving pictures, do so not only because they know little about them, but because they pass a picture theater and see a glare of posters and printed matter that offends their eye and their taste. When a piece of printed matter is crudely designed, badly etched and wretchedly printed that clinches the prejudice. When crude and melodramatic newspaper advertisements are used that again does harm.

Joseph S. Edelman.

The only way to educate manufacturers and exhibitors to the demands and expectations of the public, is to educate them through magazines, to show what is being done by the few men who are giving real thought and attention in backing up pictures as they deserve—to serve as a guide to bring up the standard of those who are paying little attention to this very important branch of the moving picture world.

The moving picture field has already developed some great directors. It has brought into the field the most eminent actors, playwrights, authors and producers. Now it is bringing from the commercial field the best advertising brains it can find for the sole purpose of lifting that branch of the work up to the plane that it has achieved in other directions.

The World Film Corporation has added to its staff a director of advertising in the person of Joseph S. Edelman, head of an advertising staff that directs the work of many successful commercial houses. Mr. Edelman has written and planned many of the advertisements that have appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and other publications for the Ingersolls, on "the watch that made the dollar famous." He planned and directed many of the campaigns that sold millions in real estate for Joseph P. Day. He has done some work for Y. M. C. A. branches in New York that has been copied all over the country.



Sample of 3 sheet.

There is a great deal that is new and raw in motion picture advertising, because the business has grown so fast and because the men who planned the advertising were moving picture men first and advertising men afterward. But the men of Mr. Edelman's stamp, who have worked for years in the commercial field, competing with the brightest brains of that world, have had the crudeness drilled out of them. The kind of work that the moving picture world has tolerated would be instantly condemned by the big national advertisers who spend millions to get the best there is in the field.

One of the most important items in the advertising of a special feature is the posters used. Motion picture posters are made by turning over a few "stills" (photographs) that are taken while the picture is in progress, to the lithographer. This is enlarged and put upon the "stone" by the lithographers and from this the poster is printed. The detail that may be very fine in a photograph, may not be at all what is required by a poster. The artists employed by the lithographer are usually men of very ordinary ability—and between the still and the color scheme the poster that is produced is another of the lurid, badly-drawn and viciously-colored things that do for posters.

The making of posters is a fine art. Some of the most famous of Germany's artists have turned their talents to posters. The result has been that German posters have won a reputation throughout the world. One of the first steps in Mr. Edelman's plans is the manufacture of posters that would rank in quality with the finest productions of the commercial field. W. N. Wilson, a famous English poster artist, has been retained to make the original drawings under the direction of Mr. Edelman. Before a poster is drawn, the "stills" are carefully gone over and a rough plan laid out by Mr. Edelman showing just what is to be eliminated or kept in the poster and just how the action is to be illustrated so that it is good art, good advertising and humanly interesting. Then a careful original drawing is made in full color and with this as a guide, the lithograph is made. It is hard to show in black and white just what an astonishing difference there is between a poster planned in this way and the poster usually employed. The first series that was drawn in this style was for a film entitled "When Broadway Was a Trail," a Shubert feature in four acts. The originals were so striking that when they were returned from the lithographer they were instantly appropriated, framed and divided up among the offices.

Usually posters for moving pictures show a jumble of figures that can hardly be distinguished a dozen feet away. The posters made for another feature entitled "Across the Pacific," was a direct contrast to the idea that there must always be a tremendous jumble of "action." In one of these posters, framed in a broad band, is the figure of a single Indian on horseback. The poster is wonderful in its dignity, simplicity and strength. The color is vividly striking yet so sympathetically chosen that its strength detracts nothing from its harmony.

Sample of 1 sheet.

In another poster from this series is shown an old settler defending his wife and the family wagon from the Indian attack. Not a single word of explanation is used—but explanation is unnecessary. The story tells itself. The figures in the foreground are boldly drawn and the background in light tints completes the story and brings out the foreground figures so that they can be seen at a distance where the ordinary poster would be undecipherable. The same kind of art work is employed in the printed matter, not in the same style, but drawn by men of equal ability. Printed matter of this kind sounds a new and interesting note, that is destined to be universally adopted. One thing must be said for the moving picture industry. It would never have grown so fast and so well if it had not been alive to ideas of progress.

William Kessel Passes

William Kessel, a pioneer film man and brother of Adam and Charles Kessel of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, died suddenly Friday, October 30, at his home, 179 Decatur street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Mr. Kessel was very well known in the manufacturing end of the film industry, at different times being a manufacturer, state rights buyer, exchange manager, exhibitor, and in fact he has been everything in the motion picture business but a director, and at the time of his death was doing confidential work for the New York Motion Picture Corporation.

It was the late William Kessel's report on European affairs which guided the New York Motion Picture Corporation in its foreign policies, Mr. Kessel having only returned from Europe recently, after an extended tour. He is the second of the Kessell brothers to die in the past six months.

First Eaco Releases

Edwin August has completed his first two photoplays since becoming identified with the Eaco Films Inc. The first, the title of which is "A Double Haul," is a stirring three-reel melodrama which is filled with action from the opening scene to the epilogue. The second effort is "A Strange Adventure," which he produced in three reels. This production contains a number of unusual light effects, beautiful interiors and is well acted as well as produced. The Eaco Films are being released through the Strand Film Co. of 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York City.

Raver To Have New Itala Films

Two photo-play characters of undying interest, "Tigris," the super-criminal, and "Maciste," the physically perfect giant who continues to be the wonder of the thousands who are daily seeing "Cabiria," will be the subject of two big Itala series, soon to be introduced to the American market. Work on both series has been in progress for almost a year.

Harry R. Raver announces that to the lot of "Tigris" will fall consecutive thrilling grapplings with the law, of the high sustained intensity of interest which made the first "Tigris" a thing of keen enjoyment and big profits to exchange men and exhibitors everywhere.

To fit the Gibraltar-like proportions of "Maciste," the marvel of brawn, scenarios have been written that will admirably display his prodigious strength. Heroic adventures of the variety that makes his part in "Cabiria," the massive Itala spectacle now playing in the largest theaters, one of salient power, come to him early and often.

Advices from Torino, Italy, where Itala films are made, evince the desire and intention of the Itala Company to send to Mr. Raver a class of photo-drama subjects comparing favorably with its masterpiece "Cabiria," and other Itala successes. Detailed announcements will be made in this publication later regarding each of these productions.

Lubin Secures War Films

Ever since the commencement of hostilities in Europe, Siegmund Lubin has had six expert photographers at the theater of war to take scenes and action of the events. Despite the difficulties and risk of life, these men have been successful in taking some wonderful pictures, copies of which have been sent to the Lubin home office in Philadelphia. In a few days these scenes will be released and furnish some vivid and reliable pictures of the titanic struggles. Five vivid pictures, taken at great personal risk by the Lubin Manufacturing Company's photographers, show Belgium troops under fire in the streets of Alost, which have once more been left in the hands of the Germans. A street barricade in the scene being defended by the gallant Belgians, whose dead and wounded are lying on the roadside while the survivors are under heavy rifle and shell fire. Immediately after the photographs were taken the German gunners got their range and so thick the shells fire became that the photographers had to retire to save their lives.

Contrary to the idea that the war pictures are often faked, these wonderful productions are absolutely genuine. The negatives, which cost thousands of dollars and much risk of life to the photographers, are now in the possession of the Lubin Company at Philadelphia. Other scenes will follow when obtainable from the front.

Filming Ade Comedy

Last week a Lubin company availed itself of a permit to take some scenes of George Ade's comedy "The College Widow" at the conservative college of Haverford. As soon as the troupe took possession of the campus there was no more work to be done in the school, the boys taking advantage of the usual permit to now and then lose a day.

A Six-Reel Keystone Comedy

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

Up to the present time multiple reel comedies of three reels or more have been more or less experiments, and, in the majority of cases, absolute failures as far as preserving purely comedy situations and atmosphere is concerned. In order to sustain interest and continuity, and prevent the picture's becoming a mere jumble of funny complications it has generally been found necessary to sacrifice humor, in places, to allow the plot to be seen and felt.

In view of the tremendous success which the New York Motion Picture Corporation has made of its six-reel Keystone comedy, "Tillie's Punctured Romance," it marks an epoch in this most popular department of photoplay. It is the "Cabiria" of comedy. Genuine humor is the dominating note in every scene, and its effect on the spectator ranges from giggles and snickers to paroxysms of laughter, according to the length of the scene. Viewing a picture of this kind is true recreation. One becomes so absorbed in it that, for the time being, everything fades from his mind except the fact that Marie Dressler, Mabel Normand, and Charles Chaplin are enmeshed in a ludicrous tangle and are becoming funnier with each reel. The picture is being released on a state-rights basis.

The plot is a substantial one, and if emphasized would become a good comedy-drama, but in its treatment here it merely furnishes a background for individual action, a frame-work upon which the members of the cast hang innumerable laugh-provoking mannerisms and carelessly accomplished, but exceedingly clever, feats.

The picture is typically Keystone, which fact in itself speaks for its quick action and cyclonic developments, and was produced by Mack Sennett without a scenario being made on it. Marie Dressler, universally known as Tillie, is featured and re-enacts on the screen the droll expressions and queer actions which made her famous on the stage in "Tillie's Nightmare." She is supported by the well-known Keystone pair, Mabel Normand and Charles Chaplin. To the latter falls the greater part of the action, and there is probably no one on the screen better able to give it a comedy twist than this inimitable comedian.

The newlyweds are perfectly at home in their new apartments.

In the opening scene delicate little Tillie is seen heaving large blocks of wood out into the country road for her dog to retrieve them. Charlie, a city chap, happens within range of her arm, and is reminded of it by receiving a block on his nose. Tillie drags him into the house, and the villain reciprocates her kindness by forcing her to steal her father's savings. They go cabereting, and when Tillie recovers from the effect of her first glass of wine she is alone and penniless.

Tillie and Charlie become the star performers. Marie Dressler and Charles Chaplin.

In the meantime Charlie has met Mabel, his city girl. They drop into a restaurant for lunch, and come out in a panic when Tillie, who is one of the waitresses, discovers them. The gay couple then began to feel their responsibility in carrying stolen money around with them, and, to add to this, everywhere they go they meet policemen. While sitting on a bench in the park Charlie feels a hand on his shoulder. Thinking that he is arrested, he slips the money to Mabel, turns around, and is confronted by a newsboy. He grabs the money from Mabel, buys a paper, and in it sees an article about Tillie having inherited a fortune on the death of a millionaire uncle.

Charlie sneaks away from Mabel, returns to the restaurant, rushes Tillie off to a minister, and marries her. Later she learns of her inheritance, and realizes the cause of Charlie's great haste. In their new home the husband finds the statue-like servants great things to lean against, and very handy as hall-trees. To get even, Mabel obtains a position as maid in the mansion, and when, a few days later, the newly-riches hold a grand ball, she causes it to end in an awful fracas by her flirtations with Charlie.

At this time the supposed-dead uncle returns home, having only been injured in his fall while mountain-climbing. When Charlie discovers that Tillie's fortune is at an end he grasps Mabel by the hand and flees, closely pursued by the vengeful Tillie, in whose wake follow the police force. The chase ends at the river, where, in the whirl of excitement, Tillie falls off of the pier into the water. After considerable trouble and the help of both the river and city police, she is finally hoisted back onto the pier. Here

Charlie detects a storm in Tillie's jealous stare.

Charlie receives a sad blow. Mabel denounces him and implores forgiveness from Tillie, and the police drag him off to jail.

"The Three of Us"

B. A. Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc., begins work next week upon its Alco release which is to follow "Rip Van Winkle," Miss Mabel Taliaferro in the Madison Square success "The Three of Us" by Rachel Crothers. The intensely dramatic scenes of the play laid in the mining region will be taken in Mauch Chunk, Pennsylvania, while the interiors will be taken in New York.

The cast which is to support Miss Taliaferro is now practically complete.The three principals in support of the talented star are Irving Cummings, Creighton Hale and Madame Claire.

Curtis Indian Pictures

After three years work among the little known natives of Alaska and northern British Columbia, Edward S. Curtis has just completed a motion picture drama to be called "In the Land of the Head Hunters." Mr. Curtis is the famous North American Indian authority whose photographs are hung in the art galleries and museums throughout this and other countries. But it is as the author of the $1,500,000 work "The North American Indian," the field research for which was conducted under the patronage of the late J. Pierpont Morgan, that Mr. Curtis is perhaps best known.

The motion picture "In the Land of the Head Hunters" has naturally great scientific and educational value, and is artistically of much beauty. But it is no mere collection of scenes from Indian life. "In the Land of the Head Hunters," is an Indian epic drama and is said to be a "thriller." The films represent an outlay of $75,000. A feature of its presentation in leading theaters throughout the country will be orchestral rendering of native music symphonized.

Afton Mineer of the American "Beauty" Company, is fast coming into full bloom of "Beauty" fame.

"Pauline" Ends with Twentieth Episode

In response to many requests received by the Eclectic Film Company, as to the probable duration of "The Perils of Pauline," public announcement is made that the big serial will be completed with the trewtieth episode. As the seventeenth episode will soon be released this means that there will be but three more made. "The Perils of Pauline" has been extraordinarily successful and the demand for it is holding strong to the very end.

"The Lost Chord"

A stubborn father's unreasonable objection to his daughter's marriage causes a great deal of unnecessary sorrow in the three-reel drama, "The Lost Chord," released by Warners Features, Inc. There is a strong object lesson in the tragic ending of the banishment and persecution heaped upon the young couple because the husband's financial standing does not come up to what the girl's father had hoped for.

The most delightful part of the picture is its mountain scenery, which is shown in all of its snow-capped beauty in the clear, distinct photography. The acting in the various characterizations bespeaks a talented and well-directed cast.

Miecco is a highly talented violinist of modest means. One night Mary hears him play at a recital at the fashionable Hotel St. Moritz, and takes up a collection for him. They become better acquainted and finally, engaged. The proud Lord Kurzon forbids his daughter, Mary, to marry the violinist, and rebukes Miecco for having the insolence to ask for his daughter's hand. The young couple elope and Kurzon disowns Mary.

A year passes, and the irate father begins to repent his hasty action, not because he forgives Miecco, but because he is lonesome. He dispatches his nephew, Algy, to the violinist's home to bring back Mary and the baby, but not Miecco. Instead of following Kurzon's instructions Algy poisons the baby and leaves. For a time the young mother loses her mind. News of the baby's death brings Kurzon to a realization of how selfishly he has acted, and he begs forgiveness of the violinist and his wife.—C. R. C.

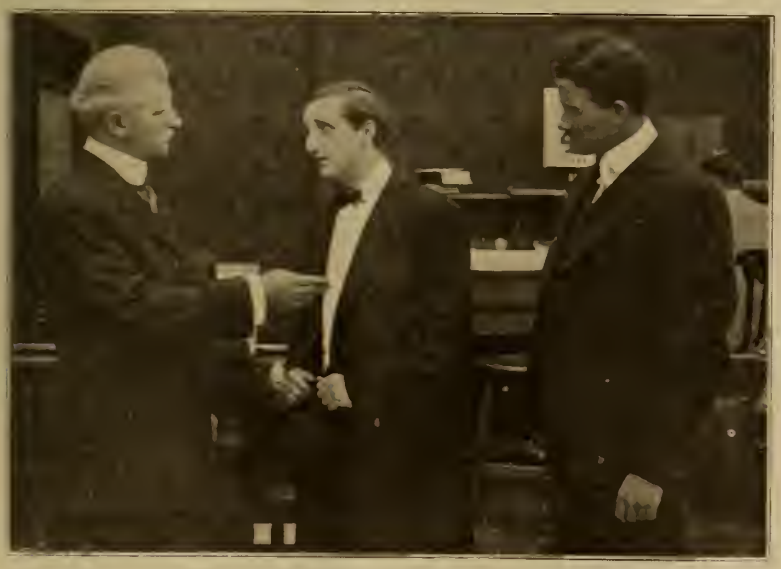
Selig's Story of Restored Youth

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

THE mysticism of Egypt, the hustle and bustle of today; the hopes and ambitions of old age, the aspirations and expectations of youth, are all combined in Selig's two-reel feature, "If I Were Young Again," which is scheduled for release on Monday, November 16.



The story concerns an aged curator of the department of anthropology in a great museum, who stumbles upon a vial in the body of an Egyptian mummy, containing a liquid, one drop of which will restore youth, and of his attempt to bring back his young manhood by use of the liquid.

Charles Wheelock enacts the role of Jonathon Wise, the aged curator, and is especially good in the scenes in which he depicts Wise, as the old man.

The settings and backgrounds throughout the story are thoroughly satisfactory, and one scene, that in which Professor Wise experiments with the liquid on a potted plant in a window, is marked by clever trick photography.

As the story runs, Jonathon Wise, a curator in the museum, is approached one morning by Director Henshaw, head of the institution, who laughingly advises him of a brokerage firm which claims to make investors wealthy, and Wise remarks that if he were only young, he would place all his savings in such an enterprise.

Next day a mummy arrives from Egypt, and, while uncrating the odd figure, Professor Wise discovers the vial, on which is inscribed in Egyptian "one drop with each new moon brings back youth." Deeply interested, Professor Wise secretes the vial on his person, and takes it home with him that night.

Wise is employed as a clerk in the museum.

Suspicious that it may not renew youth, he experiments on a withered plant that stands in a window, and is amazed to have the plant at once sprout new leaves, and grow several feet in height within a few minutes. Thoroughly satisfied, he goes to the bank next day and withdraws all his savings, with the idea of investing, and that night while the moon is still new, he swallows a few drops of the magic liquid. Instantly he becomes a young man, and, not willing to explain to his landlady his sudden change from old age to youth, he packs a valise and steals silently away, returning shortly as a youth, to engage rooms in the same house.

Going down town, he invests all his savings in Mexican oil stocks, and is much surprised later on discovering by the newspaper that the disappearance of Professor Wise is a mystery to all. Next day he reads in the papers that the Mexican stock salesmen have been driven from town by the police, and, realizing that his fortune is gone, he at once sets about securing employment. He answers many advertisements, but is rejected time and again on account of his too youthful appearance, so at last he endeavors to obtain the job he formerly held, as curator of the museum, but Director Henshaw refuses to consider him favorably, though he eventually installs him as a clerk.

Days later, his landlady informs him that she has inherited an immense fortune, and expresses the wish that she might become young and enjoy it, but he has had so many unhappy experiences that he asks her to refrain from the experiment, as only unhappiness can follow.

The landlady will scarcely believe him when he tells her that he is the same Professor Wise who formerly roomed in the house, and it is only after he has reached the conclusion that no good can come from the continued use of the contents of the magic vial that he destroys the remaining portion of the liquid, and, at the next new moon, once more, finds himself an old man. His landlady is overjoyed to find him again in his natural state, and he returns to the museum and resumes his work as curator. Lafayette McKee appears as Director Henshaw in the picture, and Lillian Heyward as Mrs. Subbald, the landlady.

Kleine's New Leading Man

The accompanying picture is a splendid likeness of Howard Estabrook, latest of the Broadway stars to join the ranks of the photo-players. Mr. Estabrook plays the lead of "Travers Gladwin" in George Kleine's film version of the famous Cohan & Harris success, "Officer 666." He has appeared under the management of William A. Brady, David Belasco and others. He counts among his greatest successes the male "leads" in "Within the Law," "Divorcons," and "The Vanishing Bride." Mr. Estabrook has been prominently identified with many other famous Broadway productions, including William Collier in "The Dictator," Blanche Walsh in "The Straight Road," Arnold Daly in "The Boys of Company B," Joe Weber in "Hip Hip Hurray," Holbrook Blinn in "The Boss," Grace George in "Jim's Marriage," and Cyril Scott in "The Fatted Calf." Mr. Estabrook's youth and his vast stage experience, coupled with his very apparent good looks, makes his success in the new line of work a foregone conclusion.

Great Northern War Films

The German war office has recently granted the great Northern Film Company official permission to take pictures at the Franco-German front, which is considered quite a distinction. The Great Northern camera men went from Copenhagen to the seat of war in automobiles, accompanied by military escort. It is expected that some very remarkable pictures will be the result of this expedition, and it is the company's intention to continue taking pictures on the firing line for an indefinite period. A series will be inaugurated, the plan being to release one reel of these genuine war pictures at a time. The first scenes that have been photographed are now on the way to New York, and will be released within the next two weeks.

Milton Sills, has been secured by the World Film Corporation to support Wilton Lackaye in the screen version of "The Pit." Gail Kane has been engaged as leading woman.

A Powerful Universal

A film that carries its action through four reels and does not attempt to work up a climax or emphasize any one situation more than the other, is rare, and one like this that is entertaining is still rarer. But "The Opened Shutter" is a film of this kind, and it affords more than light entertainment. Each character is of a distinctly different type, and so truly portrayed that they hold one's attention through their natural impersonations and connections alone. Startling developments and tense situations play no part in the picture whatever.

Clara Louise Burnham is the author of the story which is an elaboration of the well-known, "As a Man Thinketh, So Is He," and Otis Turner produced Lois Weber's four-reel adaptation of it which will be released on November 17 under the Universal-Gold Seal brand.

Briefly the story is of the great change that comes over a few selfish, narrow-minded people by allowing themselves to deliberate and "think right" instead of answering the first impulse aroused by irritating circumstances. The result is that Sylvia Lacey charitably forgives her relatives for what at first seemed an unforgivable affront, and that the relatives, Uncle Calvin Trent and Aunt Martha Lacey, see some things in an entirely new light and heal up the breach that has separated them for thirty-five years. The story resolves itself into a happy ending without either a clash of wills or the overcoming of an obstacle more serious than one's inclination to yield to quick-tempered promptings. C. R. C.

Employees Called a Strike

A long file of members of the departments of the Alco Film Corporation, more intimately associated with President Walter Hoff Seely, filed into Mr. Seely's office on Saturday. Hamilton S. Corwin of the auditing department, acting as a walking delegate, informed Mr. Seely that a strike was imminent, but in a moment it became apparent from his remarks that the strike was merely a box of matches set in a silver container; the container was part of a handsome silver smoking set which Mr. Seely's associates gave him as a reminder of his birthday.

A MOVE AGAINST LEGALIZED CENSORSHIP.

NOW that the United Managers Protective Association has joined forces with the National Board of Censorship for the suppression of all legalized forms of censorship, we may expect some interesting developments. The United is a powerful organization, and its action gives the support of the whole field of entertainment and the efforts of its largest factors to a work which rested until now upon the shoulders of the picture men alone. The large theatrical interests are beginning to realize that censorship, if allowed to gain any foothold, will be only too ready to extend its operations to the legitimate stage and all other recognized forms of amusement.

Legalized censorship is one of those parasitical growths of political power which fatten on the ignorance of the public. It is not conceivable that the American people would permit its existence if they realized that it outrages the whole spirit of American freedom. But they do not realize it. To the lay mind censorship is a technicality, and pertains to the trade rather than to the public. Attempt a newspaper censorship or a library censorship, and there would be trouble in a minute; but familiar as they are with pictures, the people have not yet adopted them as their own, as they have newspapers and books.

The name of the National Board of censorship is a fortunate one in some respects, and unfortunate in others. It recognizes the word censorship, and possibly so gives it cause for existence. But it also, because it is national and of irreproachable character, obviates any excuse for other censors. In reality it is not a censor at all, but a Board of Suggestions for Improvement. The parts that will not pass its inspection are rejected with the same rigid care that is exercised in rejecting defective mechanical parts in an automobile factory.

For some time it has been customary for the National Board to send to producing companies bulletins touching on one or another of the phases of motion picture production. Those not familiar with the time and expense necessary for the production of a single scene in a motion picture do not realize the cost to the manufacturers of making even the smallest elimination. It is because the board does realize this that it aims, through the issuance of these bulletins, to caution the producing companies against the portrayal of certain types of photoplays, certain settings and situations which might be apt to be criticised by the board, and thus avoid changes in the completed story.

Never, since the origin of the board in 1909, have the producing companies shown a greater spirit of co-operation in their desire to bring their photoplays up to standard, than now. As an example of the co-operative spirit shown, we attach Bulletin No. 11, and a copy of a letter received from one company with reference to it:

During the past few weeks, the National Board has received complaints from high class motion picture exhibitors and the public that some of the producers of motion pictures are presenting their women characters in certain society scenes so scantily clothed that both good taste and the moral conventions are disregarded.

We presume that the attempt of the producers has been to portray the elegance, luxury, and atmosphere of so-called "high life;" unfortunately it has sometimes happened that they have more nearly approximated in these "society" gowns the ideal of the demi-monde and the brothel.

Public opinion frowns on women wearing gowns showing their backs bare to the waist, cut out in front beyond the requirements of decency, and with nothing whatever over their shoulders. It is only in the demi-monde, the burlesque and variety show, and in some motion pictures that such gowns are presented as characteristic of women of taste, refinement, and morals. The producer who presents or permits his actresses to present society scenes with women gowned in this manner is not only guilty of bad art, but also of making pictures with bad moral effect. We would therefore urge manufacturers and producers to be on their guard against further instances of this kind. Several eliminations by the National Board have recently been necessary in pictures of this type, in response to public opinion.

Attention to this bulletin will keep your company from the expense and inconvenience of having pictures mutilated by the Board.

This whole matter of costuming is treated in paragraph 31, page 17, of "The Policy and Standards of the National Board of Censorship of Motion Pictures" as revised May, 1914. All producers are supposed to be supplied with this pamphlet and if any of them are not, we shall be glad to send copies upon request.

The letter reproduced below, in response to this bulletin, is typical of the attitude of producers toward the board:

We have your special Bulletin No. 11, relative to the dressing of female characters in our films and I would advise that while our company, up to the present time, has never been an offender in this connection, I am today writing to our director-in-chief and mailing him copy of this bulletin, in order that he may post same on his bulletin board.

It is quite obvious that with this kind of co-operation between the National Board and the producers, further so-called censorship by political agencies is not only uncalled for, but is an unwarranted and arbitrary interference with the orderly methods of this industry.

Motography's attitude in the matter of legalized censors is well known. We can only express the hope and conviction that the reinforced powers allied against inquitous censorship will meet with early success and so save the motion picture from its greatest enemy.

FILMS FOR UNCLE SAM

H. T. Cowling, official photographer, U. S. Reclamation Service, has recently returned from a 17,000 mile trip through the West, securing motion picture film for the government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. In addition to securing pictures showing the results attained by the government in reclaiming the arid sections, Mr. Cowling spent considerable time on the Indian reservations, picturing the life of the American Indians of today. He also secured pictures of the ancient cliff dwellings, and several of our national play grounds, taking thousands of feet of motion picture film which will be used after the exposition in connection with lectures designed to awaken interest in the beauties of our own country.

Probably the most interesting feature of Mr. Cowling's summer work was the "Romance of Irrigation," staged on one of the government projects, showing all the steps taken in securing and developing a farm on an irrigation project. The film takes one from the time the tired school teacher reads the government advertisement and writes to Washington until she goes to the desert country, puts up her shack, learns the methods of irrigating, falls in love with a neighboring bachelor, and goes in partnership with him for life.

Mr. Cowling is now in the Washington laboratory finishing and assembling this material for the exposition and other lectures.

What's this! What's this! E. Alexander Barrymore, Western representative of the Morning Telegraph, sued for breach of promise! That's what we read in our paper the other morning, but we've got our fingers crossed just the same. In the first place, "Barry" don't appear that kind of a chap to us; and in the second place no girlie in her right mind would ever try to get $10,000 out of an humble newspaper feller. It can't be done!

Now if it had been L. R., one of the Telegraph's staff at the other end of the line, we might have fallen for it as "press stuff," but even then we'd have been doubtful.

Washington Exhibitors' Ball

Described by Mabel Condon

IT WAS Washington's introduction to honest-to-goodness and alive photo-players, at the Hallowe'en ball given October 31, by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the District of Columbia.

And among the Washingtonians were many doubting Thomases. But they came; also, they saw; and likewise, they were conquered. For never had the flesh and blood people of the screen been so warmly welcomed.

Fans formed triple and quadruple lines outside the Raleigh hotel entrance and watched taxis fill with the many they knew and the few they did not know. Outside Convention Hall other fans formed a guessing delegation, held back from either side of a cleared path by a busy reception committee, and in the hall a few thousand more fans greeted the arrival of the screen people with applause and cheers.

A large stage, upon which each photo-player was introduced, had everybody's attention and from here, the grand march formed with Clara Kimball Young and Earle Williams in the lead. The other screen guests fell in line and the march led them in front of a motion picture camera, guided by Dr. W. B. Herbst, president of the Washington branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, the procession wound at various angles through the throngs of spectators who threw the marchers confetti and enthusiastic greetings.

It was midnight and the fourth dance, when the screen guests were taxied from convention hall to Harvey's restaurant on Pennsylvania avenue. A gold lace-topped menu card promised a delicious spread and the banquet fulfilled it, really, for in addition there were Hallowe'en favors of goblined hats and whistles and feather-ended flounces, miniature skeletons and wobbly frogs, the purpose of which was to test the eye-sight later in the evening, or morning.

There was toasting and, afterward on an upper floor, there was dancing. Joseph W. Smiley did honor to himself, the Lubin Company and the occasion, by his service as toast-master and the responses, when respective lulls could be secured, were both breezy and brief.

Marion S. Pearce, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, told in his far-reaching voice, of his pleasure in the evening, and made it the occasion for the presentation to the Washington delegates, of a famed remembrance of the Dayton convention. The Washington "boys" had been much in evidence at that event and the tastefully framed souvenir was that of the several groups of officers, the attending exhibitors and the Washington delegates, together with the respective badges of the National Vice-President Parlegate, Alternate, Member, Exhibitor and Guest. It was a thoughtful gift on the part of Mr. Pearce and was appreciatively accepted by Dr. Herbst whose toast was to the guests of the evening.

Harvey Crandall said his words were few because it was the first time in three days that he had found time in which to eat and Fulton Brylawski extended a welcome, a have-a-good-time invitation and a thank you. Romaine Fielding, Kate Price and King Baggott bowed and said ten words and Harry Myers gave an imitation of a motion-picture actor making a voiceless speech.

'Twas a jolly party and a glorious time and the Banquet given by the District of Columbia Branch, No. 10, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America on October 31, at Washington, D. C.

Washington branch of the League have earned the reputation of being princely entertainers. Those active in the ball's arrangement were:

MABEL'S NOTES.

Reception Committee.—Publicity: Fulton Brylawski, Harry Crandall, Wm. P. Herbst. Program: V. H. Stonesifer, R. H. Campbell, Thos. M. Eastwood. Music and Amusements: J. P. Morgan, Julian Brylawski, J. J. Payette, Maurice Davis. Hall and Decorations: Ira La Motte, Alan Bachrach, W. Stein, Harry Wolf.

Hughie Mack, who slept through an uproarious half hour of the banquet, found three-thirty much too early an hour at which to retire, so didn't. He had company—much. But their attire was not—much. It comprised silk hats, dress shirts, overcoats and dancing pumps. And thusly, on one floor of the Raleigh, did the so attired and gay party inter-visit.

John Ince was a leader of the calling-cardless brigade; he carried a cane.

Hughie Mack outlined the itinerary as being that of wherever a bell boy was seen to carry ice water.

"I'd just like to know," threatened Elsie Woodward the next day, "who that wild mob was that ran through the corridor all night." The "wild mob" was guessable by a general grin.

"Key—444," demanded Howard M. Mitchell of the desk clerk at 3:45 a. m. "Not here," answered the clerk. Mr. Mitchell thereupon consulted the register for more authentic information as to his room number.

Fulton Brylawski was called into the garish light of day at 8 o'clock by two lady guests who had neglected to tell him that they had to get an early morning train.

Earl Metcalf evidenced angelic behavior and a benign smile. He confessed to the time being November 7 and the girl a little Kentucky miss. Long live the Metcalfs.

Exhibitor (Joseph) Steve Brodie renewed pleasant acquaintances made at the Baltimore dance.

Oswald F. Schuette, the Washington correspondent for Leslie's Weekly, on this his first meeting with picture people, declared he would speak for their representation hereafter in the "illustrated weekly newspaper."

Lillian Walker and Wally Van as partners in the grand march were cheered by the fans as old and much liked friends.

The American Beauty roses Clara Kimball Young carried were an offering from the committee.

Mr. Brylawski introduced "Jimmy" Young as "the husband of Clara Kimball Young," then apologized to each.

"Mother" Mary Maurice contributed smiles and contentment to the evening of fun.

Lilie Leslie (Mrs. J. W. Smiley) was charming and, with her husband, received much recognition.

S. M. Spedon added new and masterly steps to the after-banquet dance festivities.

H. A. D'Arcy was father to a large flock of Lubinites in his charge and Mr. Pearce was pleased to learn he was author of "The Vase on the Floor."

Jacob Wilk left the New York publicity desk of the World Film Corporation to join Mr. Arline and Mr. Anderson at the Washington party. As World Film people, James and Clara Kimball Young were at this table.

Frank H. Durkee, a Baltimore exhibitor, avowed that were the president present he (Mr. Durkee) could not have had a better time.

C. L. Worthington, the Philadelphia Box Office Attractions representative, glowed good cheer and fun and had difficulty in getting a goblin that would fit.

Julian Brylawski was our everywhere present host.

Messrs. Stein of the Maycroft theater, Waters of the Apollo, Glasser of the Leader, J. P. Morgan, LaMotte, Stonesifer, Payette of the General Film, Morris Davis, Osborne of the General Film Company, Washington, and Guy Wonders of Baltimore were among the entertained.

Lloyd Lonergan represented the merry Thanhouserites of New Rochelle town.

Marc MacDermot, Miriam Nesbitt, Gertrude McCoy, Robert Conness and Mabel Trunelle circled the Edison table. It was Miss Trunelle's first exhibitors' party and she hopes that hereafter they will happen often.

L. W. McChesney made his week-end vacation from Orange quite worth while. He, too, likes exhibitors' parties. He has never missed one.

Marion S. Pearce was hailed as the "ginger ale man," and Mr. Brylawski's success in attaining toast-quiets was due to a resonant "Silence! as Mr. Pearce says!" That, seemingly, was the by-word at the Baltimore entertainment.

Samuel H. Trigger was regrettably missed.

"The fourth annual convention and exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America," was one of the three inscriptions on the Pearce gift-picture.

"Held in Dayton, O., on July 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11, '14," was a second.

And "Presented to the District of Columbia Branch No. 10, by Marion S. Pearce, National President," was the third.

Dorothy Kelly was as usual sweet and unusually quaint in a basque gown of ruffles.

Leah Baird trotted the length of the banquet hall between serves and in spare moments tooted a horn.

Florence Hackett was one of the jolliest of the Lubin party.

Romaine Fielding was distinctive in an opera cloak. He is becoming what he calls "beastly fat."

Louisa Huff was referred to in the Washington Post as the popular Miss Hugg.

It was altogether "One wonderful night."

And in the meantime an Indian prince awaited a sufficient audience at the Press Club. But filmdom came first.

Verily, 'twas a big night.

Among those present:

Lubin—Rosetta Brice, Alan Quinn, James Daly, Clara Lambert, Florence Williams, Howard Mitchell, Earl Metcalfe, Florence Hackett, Joseph Smiley, Lilie Leslie, Mildred Gregory, Douglas Sibole, Elsie Woodward, John Ince, Edgar Jones, Louise Huff, William Kerry, Kempton Greene, Ormi Hawley, Clarence Elmer, Doris Heywood, Billy Burke, H. A. D'Arcy.

Universal—King Baggot, Ben Wilson, Rosemary Theby, Harry Myers.

World Film—James and Clara Kimball Young, Jacob Wilk, Mr. Arline, Mr. Anderson.

Vitagraph—Edith Story, Anita Stewart, Kate Price, James Morrison, Dorothy Kelly, Norma Talmadge, Wally Van, Lillian Walker, Hughie Mack, Leah Baird, Earl Williams, Donald Hall, Mary Maurice, Mr. and Mrs. A. U. Smith, S. M. Spedon.

Edison—Marc MacDermott, Miriam Nesbitt, Gertrude McCoy, Mabel Trunelle, Robert Connes, L. W. McChesney.

Problem Raised By Edison Film

Reviewed By Charles R. Condon

A WELL-EDUCATED and refined girl's inability to cope with the world, because she has no practical knowledge of its work, when thrown upon her own resources, leads to a number of exciting incidents and puzzling complications in the three reel melodrama, "What Could She Do," which is to be the regular Edison program release of November 20.

There is a small vein of romance in the story, but it is so very small that its prominence is superseded by the plot's snappy action and quick, exciting developments. Faultless photography, good-looking settings, and splendid acting all contribute their share to the picture's success.

To John Collins belongs the director's credit, and to Gertrude McCoy, that of playing the leading role as Sylvia Fairfax. Miss McCoy receives excellent support from the remainder of the large cast, a few of whom are Bigelow Cooper as Colonel Fairfax, Robert Brower as John Atkinson, Richard Tucker as Robert Gray, Harry Beaumont as Billy Banners, and Marjorie Ellison as Hetty Sharp.

The story begins with conversation between Colonel Fairfax and John Atkinson of Boston, in which the latter boasts to the colonel that each of his daughters is able to earn her own living, and advises him to train his daughter the same way. The colonel takes exception to the suggestion, proudly stating that his daughter was brought up to be a lady.

A short time later Atkinson reads of Fairfax's bankruptcy and subsequent death from the shock. He sends a letter of condolence to Sylvia, the colonel's daughter, and offers to secure her a position as maid in his daughter's family. Being unfamiliar with work of any kind, and therefore at a greater disadvantage if employed by a stranger, Sylvia gladly accepts Atkinson's generous offer, and leaves for the North.

Some time previous to this and while at school Sylvia made the acquaintance of a Robert Gray, a young northerner who fell in love with her and obtained permission to call at the Fairfax home during the next vacation. He sets out to keep the engagement on his first day in town, but, on arriving at the address given him, finds the place deserted and the windows and doors boarded up.

In the meantime Sylvia has arrived at the Atkinson home, and taken up her duties of caring for and tutoring Mr. Atkinson's grandchildren, Charlotte and Russell Windermere. All goes well for a time, but finally Mr. and Mrs. Windermere decide that Sylvia is not capable of managing the children, and give her notice to leave, offering, however, to keep her as their guest until she is able to find another position. But Sylvia's pride will not allow her to accept even this form of charity, and she moves to a cheap rooming house. One of the girls staying at the place, Hetty Sharp, takes a liking to Sylvia and obtains her a position as clerk in the store in which she is employed.

As time passes the girls become closer friends, and Hetty assumes a sort of responsibility for her less sophisticated friend. One day Sylvia is called to the manager's office and there accused of stealing lace. She denies it in the face of incriminating circumstances, but refuses to name the thief, feeling instinctively that Hetty is the guilty one. The two girls are taken to jail and questioned. Hetty gets off easily, but Sylvia is put through a nerve-racking examination, at the end of which she still refuses to name the person who she claims thrust the package of lace into her hand. Just then Hetty bursts into the room, and confesses her guilt.

The police captain is impressed with Sylvia's show of grit, and offers her a position on the detective force. She is assigned to special cases, and soon becomes known as a quick-witted, capable detective. One day notice is received at headquarters that Helen Gray has mysteriously vanished from home. On investigating Sylvia finds that Helen Gray is the little sister of her former friend, Robert Gray, whom she met while attending school in the South.

Under an assumed name Sylvia is employed in the Gray household as a servant girl. She becomes suspicious of the little girl's maid, Lizzie, and by a clever ruse tricks her into disclosing the location of the kidnappers' rendezvous. A raid is made upon the place, the whole band captured, and little Helen rescued. Shortly afterwards Sylvia announces her engagement to Robert, and resigns from the detective force. While presenting her resignation she is delighted to learn that Hetty has been released on good behavior. Sylvia visits her old friend, and promises her a good home and a happy future in gratitude for her kindness.

To Fight Legalized Censorship

There has been a union of forces between the United Managers' Protective Association, whose membership includes at the present time the managers of more than 2,700 theaters, and the National Board of Censorship, so far as the fight against all forms of legalized censorship throughout the country is concerned. According to the terms agreed upon, the United Managers' Protective Association agrees to co-operate and to subordinate its efforts in all matters referring to censorship to the National Board's direction. They promise a very hearty co-operation along lines peculiarly their own in the fight which the National Board is making.

There were present at the conference in Mr. Binder's office on Saturday, October 24, Ligon Johnson, chief counsel of the Protective Association; W. D. McGuire, Jr., executive secretary, and Dr. Orrin G. Cocks, advisory secretary of the Board, and J. W. Binder, in charge of finance and publicity. The officers of the United Managers' Protective Association are: President, Marc Klaw; vice president, Lee Shubert; second vice president, E. F. Albee; third vice president, H. W. Savage; fourth vice president, Sigmund Lubin; treasurer, Sam A. Scribner; secretary, Charles A. Bird; executive committee, A. L. Erlanger, William A. Brady, Alf Hayman, E. F. Albee, Walter Vincent; executive committee (motion pictures), J. Stuart Blackton, Carl Laemmle, Samuel Long, Adolph Zukor, P. A. Powers.

The course above outlined is being carried out in response to a resolution of the board of governors of the United Managers' Protective Association, recently passed.

Has Thoroughly Modern Studio

Popular Plays & Players Inc., which is releasing through the Alco Film Corporation has established extensive studios and laboratories at Fort Lee. Every improvement known to the most advanced directors and film men has been installed. A feature of the studio lies in the fact that five directors worked simultaneously. The Jersey country lying back of the studio affords wide variety for outdoor scenes. Of course when it is necessary to go further away to some special location, the producing corporation will take its company to as great a distance as necessary. With the establishing of its new plant, this enterprising producing concern will greatly increase its output. That this producing corporation expects to be very active is shown by the fact that contracts have just been closed with the Estate of the late Hugh Conway for twenty-two of his biggest successes. The contracts cover ten unproduced plays.

Reliance Company Changes Policy

A new policy was recently established by the Reliance company, relative to special features, when announcement was made to the effect that in the future the special features will be sold on a state rights basis instead of being released through the Mutual Film Corporation.

"The Avenging Conscience" or "Thou Shalt Not Kill," a six-reel D. W. Griffith special feature, and "The Escape," Paul Armstrong's wonderful dramatic production, also produced in film version by Mr. Griffith in seven reels, are the first two of these special features that will be sold in this way.

In an interview H. E. Aitken, president of the Reliance and the Mutual Film Corporation, said: "I have always felt that such features as D. W. Griffith has produced are far too wonderful to attempt to handle and to do justice to by so large an organization as I am associated with. When it is remembered that Mr. Griffith is considered to be the premier director of the picture business today, and that his productions are different, inasmuch as they will be as new five years from now as they are today, I have decided that the only way to really do justice to pictures of this caliber is to sell the rights to reputable state rights people who will exploit them in a manner befitting their importance."

Tyrone Power in "Aristocracy"

Tyrone Power, the famous "legitimate" star whose wonderful portrayal of the drainman in "The Servant in the House" thrilled the whole country, makes his first appearance in motion pictures in the Famous Players four-part film adaptation of Bronson Howard's noted society play, "Aristocracy," released Nov. 16.

In "Aristocracy," a drama renowned in two continents, Tyrone Power again plays the role of a man of the people, who backs the aristocracy of worth against that of birth. The astonishing success of the original stage production made the play famous throughout the world, and the film version even enhances the power and charm of the drama.

"Aristocracy" sounds the shallows and the depths of the exalted circle that provides the title of the subject. It criticizes with relentless vigor and earnestness the false pomp and superficial grandeur of the vain set that parades itself before the eyes of the world in the superlative dress of the idling rich, and is at moments overpowering in its fearless attacks on the shams and shames of the circle it exposes.

"The Perfect Thirty-Six"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

IN producing "The Perfect Thirty-Six" the director took particular pains to make the most of every comedy situation, and to display at their best the individual talents of the cast without allowing the action to border upon slapstick. The result is a four-reel comedy with a good, substantial plot and a definite purpose in its action. It is from the Pathe German company, and is, without doubt, one of the best and funniest multiple reel comedies that has ever come from that studio.

The story is much on the order of Montague Glass' "Potash and Perlmutter," though that inimitable writer was not connected in any way with the film's production. He does, however, play a prominent part as regards the sub-titles, having written them all. They are extremely humorous, and purport to be the observations of one Moritz Abramowsky, who knows the cloak and suit business both forwards and backwards, but who remains the firm's scapegoat because the boss refuses to recognize his sterling qualities and brilliant salesmanship abilities. One of his answers to an unreasonable situation is that "blood is thicker than water only when your relatives don't live in the same town with you."

Aside from the great amount of detailed care and attention which comedies invariably demand in their direction, "The Perfect Thirty-Six" also received the artistic arrangement and construction of settings accorded a society drama. One scene that is especially commendable, both for its size and extravagant furnishings, is that of the gown display and sales room. To complete this scene in atmosphere as well as in artistic appearance a number of the most famous models in Berlin were employed to appear in it.

The story opens with Moritz' statement that Gertie is returning home from boarding-school, not because she has graduated, exactly, but because the teacher said she was through. Gertie proves to be a wild, mischievous sort of girl about eighteen years of age, who is addicted to smoking cigarettes when she is reasonably sure that there is no danger of her being caught. One day her mother, who keeps a hat and gown establishment, receives a visitor in the person of the salesman of the cloak house of Mayer & Nathanson. Phillippson lives up to his reputation and sells Mrs. Bauerspein a number of capes and gowns for which she will never have any call.

Gertie, "the Perfect Thirty-Six," makes a hit with the princess.

Gertie wanders into the shop while he is there, and innocently aids the drummer in selling her mother an expensive fur cloak by consenting to try it on. The effect is wonderful. It transforms her from a plain school-girl into a stunning young lady. Phillippson is so impressed with her appearance in the cloak that he wires the home office at once, telling them that he has discovered a perfect "thirty-six," and asking if they want her as a model.

Mayer, the "head boss," answers in the affirmative, and is astonished a few days later to be handed a letter of introduction by a commonly dressed girl who, he inwardly declares, does not impress him as being even a good-looking "thirty-six." He employs her with the confirmed opinion that he is losing money by dong so. Some time later Phillippson returns from his trip, and exhibits his many and large orders to the beaming Mayer, who praises Phillippson's diligence to Moritz in an effort to arouse ambition in the lazy fellow. When the drummer hears himself lauded and asks for an increase in salary as a reward for his work, he is told that the words of praise were only used for effect on Moritz and were not meant for him.

One day Mayer receives notice that the princess is going to call to choose a gown. He is greatly excited about it, and instructs the models to be careful to appear at their best. As the girls slink past the royal party in the fashion of the day Mayer feels exultant until Gertie appears. She is dressed in a rather plain gown, and Mayer is afraid she will cast a reflection on the stylish appearance of the other girls. Instead, she makes a decided hit with the princess, who purchases the gown in preference to the others.

The next morning Gertie receives an offer from a rival concern at double the salary Mayer is paying her, and sends her landlady down to the office with word that she has resigned. Consternation follows the woman's announcement, for the morning mail has brought a letter from the princess instructing them to have Gertie deliver her gown, and stating that hereafter no one else is to wait upon her in the store.

But one course is open to Mayer, and that is to marry Gertie in order to prevent her leaving the firm. Both Phillippson and Nathanson are paying attentions to the girl, but in spite of this rivalry Mayer succeeds in winning her, and adds another member to the firm of Mayer & Nathanson.

Authors Collaborate on "Zudora"

Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman and Harold MacGrath, novelist, met recently for the first author's conference on the new Thanhouser serial, "Zudora." The photograph here reproduced shows them sitting in the mystic apartment used in the opening scenes of the wonderful photoplay which is the creation of Dr. Goodman, and of which Mr. MacGrath will write the novelization. Dr. Goodman detailed to Mr. MacGrath, who fictionized "The Million Dollar Mystery," the early action of "Zudora."

"I expect great things of this new production,"

Harold MacGrath in conference with Doctor Daniel Carson Goodman, creator of "Zudora." Mr. MacGrath will novelize the photoplay for the newspapers.

says the novelist, who is known among his literary contemporaries as "the sage of Syracuse." "It is a new construction in photoplay writing of extraordinary interest, and I shall enjoy my part of the collaboration."

Selig One-Reel Animal Pictures

The wonderful demand for Selig one-reel animal pictures immediately following the announcement of a series to be released, has demonstrated beyond a doubt that this class of photoplays is desired by exhibitors. Mr. Selig has been working on this series for some time and a number of exceptionally interesting scenarios have been prepared. A large number of these have been produced, and dates for their release will be announced later.

It is the intention of Mr. Selig to release one of these animal pictures every week, as quickly as the series can be announced. The first of the series, introduced as an experiment, was "The Loyalty of Jumbo," which was released September 20. It was received by exhibitors with unexampled enthusiasm and they began to inquire when other one-reel animal pictures were to be released. Then "The Rajah's Vacation," released October 21, "A Tonsorial Leopard Tamer," released October 23, and "The Grate Impeeryul Sirkus," released October 30, were snapped up by exhibitors far in advance of their release dates.

In most of the following Selig one-reel animal pictures, Kathlyn Williams will be featured, which naturally will furnish an added attraction and render them additionally profitable to exhibitors. All these releases will be made through General Film Co., and will constitute part of the Selig program.

In view of the great demand already evidenced for these Selig one-reel animal pictures, it will be advisable for exhibitors to make a special request at their exchanges in order to book them early.

"Master Key" Company In Frisco

The better to stage a number of scenes in the third chapter of "The Master Key" series, which calls for San Francisco settings, the Rex company under the direction of Robert Z. Leonard, will leave Los Angeles for the northern city within a few days. With him will go, in addition to the regular cast of Ella Hall, William Highby and Harry Carter, the author of the story himself, John Flemming Wilson. His idea in accompanying them is to place at Mr. Leonard's disposal his unusual knowledge of the water-front and other sections of the city, which will be invaluable when it comes to running down proper locations for the scenes to be photographed.

Mr. Wilson is eminently well-fitted to fill this part in the work, as during two years he covered the water-front and kindred sections of the city for the San Francisco papers. Later, he worked out of that port as a sailor before the mast, in search of local color for subsequent stories.

Harry Lauder Visits Universal City

During his stay in Los Angeles, where he appeared at the Majestic theater, Harry Lauder, his wife, and William Morris, his manager, were guests at the Universal's west coast plant. Under the personal guidance of general manager Isadore Bernstein, the little party was introduced to several Universay photoplayers, countrymen of the comedian. After watching several of the companies at work at the studio, the party motored to Universal City, where Mr. Lauder was initiated into the mysteries of production of several of the big features the company is staging at present.

Sans Grease Paint and Wig

By Mabel Condon

Thomas Wise.

"WERE you always — plump?" I asked Thomas J. Wise across the long wide table in the square room that is an inner of inner offices in the World Film Corporation suite in the Leavitt building, on Forty-sixth street.

"Plump?" queried Mr. Wise from the side of the room that he almost filled. "Yes," he answerd as his mouth that is like unto a half-moon and good to look at, elevated its corners and told me, "Yes, I've always been plump. I started my existence that way; it was in England and they tell me I weighed fifteen pounds at the start. Ever since I've been increasing the capital and paying interest on that start."

"But," I suggested, "imagine a plumpless 'Gentleman from Mississippi.'"

It wouldn't be ethical for me to imagine such a thing," answered the man who has made that role famous. "And I am not sorry that I am—fat, except," he added, "it is what prevents me from going back to England and fighting. I'd love to go back to England and fight," he repeated and there was no elevation of the corners of his mouth; in place of the glad expression that his blue eyes had held until just then, there was one that meant a longing to do this thing that he decided was best he should not do. Then of a sudden, the glad light returned and Thomas Wise offered the why of his not shouldering a gun in the cause of England.

"I'd make too good a target for the enemy. Though I came to this country when I was three," he continued, "the love of England is strong, with me. My mother brought seven of us here, when my father died. Seven of us," he repeated and his mind went back to what he could remember of that journey across the states. "It was forty-seven years ago and we crossed in a canvas-topped wagon. We lost one of us on the journey; he was the oldest boy, fourteen, and the one who would have been the biggest help to my mother right then."

He paused; memory, though vague, was compelling, and in the pause it occasioned, I became aware that the radiator in the corner had begun to sizzle and that the rain which had softly ushered in the morning, had become querulous patter. The cheery voice of Mr. Wise brought back himself, as a subject of interest, and he went on with his story as though memory, sad and sweet, had not beckoned.

"Yes, we crossed clear to California; no in-between state would do. There was gold in California, and we went. Well, I grew up there. William A. Brady and I were boys together; I've known him since I was eleven. We did amateur work. I was always ready to take part in any entertainment or show that anybody was giving and when I was eighteen I was in a little company that Joseph R. Grismer, Brady's partner had out there. Then William Gillette came along with a regular show; he was a young leading man and offered to take me to New York with his show. I came with him and have been here almost ever since. And," he added as an after-thought, "William Gillette is still a young leading man."

"And Thomas J. Wise is best known as the middle-aged 'Gentleman from Mississippi.'" I said.

"Yes," agreed Mr. Wise, running his plump hand over the high forehead, that wasn't always forehead, and over the graying hair that curls up over his ears and makes the more becoming, the wide-rimmed soft hat he wears.

"Yes," went on Mr. Wise, "I'm best-known as 'A Gentleman from Mississippi,' and so it was one of the first Brady releases chosen by the World Film. I played it first in Chicago in 1900 and since then I've played it in almost every big city in the states. But being the 'Gentleman' in front of a motion picture camera was like playing a new role. That helped to make it the more interesting. For I found it an occupation full of interest.

"At first, the crowds that formed on the side-lines, watching us make the exterior scenes, gave me my nearest approach to strage fright. In Washington, Pennsylvania avenue was flanked by thousands, when we made scenes in that street. But there was nothing difficult about the work; I knew I wasn't to look at the camera and I was told to work slowly. That, though as rather difficult, as the stage part called for quick work. I'm to do another picture to be made by the World Film. It's 'The Life of P. T. Barnum'—and it ought to be good," he commented.

"And how," I asked the man with the half-moon mouth, "do your stage friends like you in pictures?"

Mr. Wise, his elbows on the table, rubbed his plump hands together and chuckled. "They said," and he stopped to chuckle some more, "'Wise, you're a male Mary Pickford.'"

"But," I asked, taking my own umbrella from among the many in the corner holder, (though Mr. Wilk, publicity manager, had told me to take my choice), "have you seen Mary Pickford?"

"That's it," returned Mr. Wise as we went through the doorway, one at a time, necessarily, "she is the screen star I have seen most." And again he chuckled.

"Last night," he said, as we piloted our umbrellas toward Broadway, "I was elected councilman of the White Rats by 200 out of 225 votes. And on an independent ticket," he finished as we reached the corner.

"Well, good-bye," we said to each other, interfering, meanwhile with traffic on Broadway.

"Good-bye," we each returned. And then Mr. Wise turned toward Longacre Square and a twelve o'clock rehearsal of "The Song of Songs," and I splashed across the street for a cup of tea.

Taking Moving Picture Panoramas

Described by Scientific American

HOW interesting it would be to combine the panorama's illusion in space with the moving picture's illusion in time! Why not have "animated panoramas?"

As far back as fifteen years ago, a French inventor designed a "kinetorama," destined to project such panoramas on the walls of a circular hall, but the method used, a battery of ordinary kinematographs, each covering a given portion of the circumference, was too complicated to be adopted in actual practice.

A Bavarian engineer, Dr. Hans Goetz of Munich, has simplified the problem by using the ordinary moving picture camera suitably modified.

Ordinary panorama cameras are known to be based on the rotation of an objective round a vertical axis, this objective recording on a semicircular film a panorama covering an angle of 140 degrees as a maximum. Another type of panorama camera is arranged to rotate round its stand, while a film in its interior passes in front of the slot.

Fig. 1. Sections from a panoramic film.

The accompanying diagram is a top plan view of such an apparatus: a is the vertical axis around which the camera b rotates. The objective c comprises an adjustable slot d, below which a film e is arranged to pass under the action of a gearing controlled by the axis, while unwinding from drum f on drum g.

When this apparatus is made to rotate once round its vertical axis, the whole panorama is reproduced photographically, or, as it were, unwound, on the film. However, it suffices to provide for a continuous rotation at a speed corresponding with the normal rate of moving picture projection (that is, about fifteen revolutions per second), in order to produce a most unexpected conversion, and to transform the camera into an ideal panorama kinematograph. The pictures thus obtained, at first sight, do not seem to have anything in common with moving picture films, and are nothing but a panorama continually unwound, comparable to a wallpaper border (Fig. 1). However, on examining the panorama more closely, the pictures are seen to differ from one another, any moving objects occupying more or less different positions, as on the sections of an ordinary kinematograph film. In fact, the only distinctive feature of the panorama film is the substitution of a single, continuous picture for an intermittent succession of film sections.

Interior of experimental mechanism.

This picture has to be projected on the walls of a large circular hall, so as to cover simultaneously the whole of its circumference. In an ordinary kinematograph, films are, of course, projected by an intermittently operating mechanism, each section being successively illuminated, projected, and advanced in one-sixteenth of a second. The projection of moving picture panorama films is by no means more difficult, provided the camera described be supplemented by some illuminating means.

In order to facilitate the understanding of the underlying principle, let the film be supposed to be lighted intensely by a lamp arranged close behind it, above the axis of rotation a, thus converting the camera into a lantern projecting on the screen a narrow picture, in accordance with the width of the slot d.

Suppose the apparatus, installed in a circular hall with white walls, to be set rotating slowly: Narrow pictures, corresponding with each point of the original scene, will appear successively at the various parts of the circumference. If a tree was standing on one side of the scenery, in taking the kinematograph record, and a house on the other side, the tree will be projected in succession on opposite sides of the hall. Owing, however, to the persistence of visual impressions, the human eye will perceive simultaneously successive parts of the picture, provided the apparatus be turned round at a sufficient speed. In fact, the narrow bands composing the projection will melt into a single continuous picture covering the whole circumference of the hall like a real panorama. A similar principle has been embodied in the "photorama" designed by the Lumière brothers, where rotating objectives were arranged to project a photograph wound on a glass

In actual practice it is, of course, impracticable to arrange the lamp immediately behind the film. A powerful searchlight is therefore installed outside of the apparatus, the light of which is thrown by mirrors through the hollow axis of rotation.

The astonishing result obtained by Dr. Goetz's apparatus may be described as follows: The Lumière "photorama" at each rotation projects an always identical picture, the picture passing before the slot of this apparatus is seen to vary continually, each turn bringing a new phase of the original motion into view. In fact, the projection thus obtained is a real moving picture panorama, performing its natural movements, where houses and other immovable objects, of course, remain in position, the same as on an ordinary kinematograph film. The apparatus, it is true, requires an intense illumination; since, however, the insertion of a glass trough containing an acidulated 1 per cent solution of copper sulphite eliminates heat effects to 96 per cent nearly, this does not entail any danger.

Moving picture panoramas literally place the spectator in the midst of a given event or scenery. He sees himself transferred to the center of traffic in a city where vehicles and pedestrians converge from all sides, to aerodromes, where airships and aeroplanes unceasingly perform their maneuvers, to horse, bicycle and automobile races, football matches and other sporting events, processions, popular festivals, expositions, etc. He is afforded an opportunity of watching from the "Officers' Hill" the startegic operations of armies, and from the conning tower of a battleship the maneuvers of a fleet. He is able, in the moving picture theater, to fancy himself aboard a steamer or in an open carriage, traversing the most fascinating scenery.

Panorama films may as well be cut into sections and projected intermittently on a plain screen, like ordinary kinematograph pictures.

Dakar—Principal Port of French West Africa.—Pathe. The harbor of Dakar is one of the busiest commercial centers on the Atlantic coast of Africa. The bay is a beautiful body of water, deep enough to accommodate all sorts of steam and sailing craft. The tourist always sees many interesting sights along the roads and at the station. Like a fortress, the governor's palace looms high above the surrounding country. The Sengalese troops present a unique and pleasing appearance. Among them are to be found some of the best sharpshooters on the West African coast, not only of the ordinary small arms and rifle but of the latest designs of the rapid fire machine gun. Senegal is intensely tropical and many luxuriant palm trees along the National boulevard go to make this a most beautiful thoroughfare. The market place of Dakar filled with its throngs of busy bargain hunters is one of the most interesting parts of the town.

Arab Troops (French Algiers).—Pathe. Swift of foot, like lightning on his wonderful horse the Arab soldier has long been the subject of art, poetry, and prose. Oven burning sands and in desert places where the ordinary man may not pass, the Arab is at home and happy. The farther his horizon of desolateness stretches away from civilization, the better he likes it. Greatly feared and respected as a warrior down through the centuries from the days of the ancient Carthaginians, the Arab soldier today forms a most serviceable branch of the great French army. Unlike the other European armies, however, but better suited to his particular desert needs he has an added branch or fight force—the camel—cavalry which is one of the most efficient of the military departments. Due to his adaptability to desert marches the camel fast of foot and almost tireless can take the Arab soldier where man or horse could not go. As a fighting machine the camel seems to recognize his worth and seems to delight in the drills and long rangy canters over the desert plains and uplands. All the pictures here shown of the Arab troops were taken during the recent inspection of Monsieur Noulens, the French Minister of War in Algeria.

Typical Russian Dances.—Pathe. Not newly discovered Brownies, but real Russian dwarfs, the leader of who is twenty-eight years old and less than two feet five inches tall, introduce themselves in various Russian dances. Most interesting of these is the sword dance performed by six little fellows no one of whom is over thirty inches in height.

"Kell," he is known to fellow members of the press and when he signs "Fraternally, Kell," he means it. He is big in mind and body and he thinks nothing of writing reams of publicity gratuitously for friends, for the reason that he likes to write and he is alone, all alone, in the statement, "I don't need the money; I make enough with my other work." The "other work" consists of writing scenarios and serving as "from screen to the stage" booking agent, at intervals. The yellow sheets that come from 67 Morris street, New Rochelle, bear the letterhead "John William Kellette,—Scripts" and always the yellow sheets are sure to contain chatter that is breezy and original. "Kell" is a valued member of both the Inquest and Ed-Au Clubs and, the following is his own outline of his life history. Born, Lowell, Mass., Feb. 8, 1872. Quit school, aged 9, because of death of both parents. Bootblack-newsboy in Boston during blizzard, 1888. Went to Northboro, Mass., hired out to farmer for chance to grow up and learned printers' trade on Home News there, 1890, staying until 1896, going back to Boston to become foreman of S. Wing & Co's. print shop, where he remained a year. Became city editor of Chronicle, North Attleboro, Mass., 1897, and when war broke out in '98 enlisted in Sixth Massachusetts Volunteers, private, Company F., and was a war correspondent in Porto Rico until close of war. Mustered out in Marlboro, Mass., January 21, 1899, and on Feb. 8, 1899 married Leora Elizabeth Osborne, at Shrewsbury, Mass., and resumed work on Telegram until 1904, in which year "Kell" began the study of linotypes, taking charge, in October, 1904, of the Rutland Herald's linotype plant, remaining for five years. Came to New York after trip through South from Maryland to South Carolina in 1910 and 1911, settling in New Rochelle in June, 1912. Wrote first script in August, 1912, sold to Universal, and since then have written 128, sold 76, with rest pending. Wrote words and music for two songs and chatter about "The Million Dollar Mystery" for Bracy & Farrington and booked them direct through Loew's Booking Agency, managing the act on a proposition that allowed "Jones the Butler," and "Braine the Conspirator" to work in pictures during the day and give night performances only. Is a thirty-second degree Mason, an Elk, a Shriner, and never entered a beauty contest.

Lionel Belmore, who has recently appeared with William Faversham, has been engaged by the World Film Corporation, to appear opposite Clara Kimball Young in the screen version of the Owen Davis play "Lola." Mr. Belmore is directing the rehearsals of "The Marriage of Columbine," which is to be the opening attraction at the Toy Theater, in addition to his work in "Lola."

Kathlyn Williams is making a thorough study of her role in "The Rosary." This Selig star never fails to make a most searching investigation into the character of the person she is to represent, while the possibilities of her role never are slighted.

Edwin August, managing producer of the Eaco Films Inc., is busily engaged in the filming of an unusual photoplay entitled "Failure versus Success," in which he portrays a dual role. It is a psychological study in twenty-two episodes and two hundred and ten scenes, portraying that the conditions of success and failure, as regarded from a worldly standpoint, often depend largely upon opportunity and environment.

Cabbages are all grown. That is why Wm. Garwood of the "Flying A" forces in Santa Barbara is worrying. The Chinese cook who rules his household seems to be unable to understand his master's restlessnes. Garwood's clubs seem to have lost their soothing qualities. The studio of course quiets, but to cure seems impossible.

Pauline Frederick is under exclusive contract with the Famous Players Film Company, for whom she is to appear in a series of important film productions. The Famous Players will present Miss Frederick within a short time, in the motion picture version of Henri Bernstein's emotional drama "Sold," and later in Hall Caine's "The Eternal City."

Helen Gardner, with a company including Nicholas Dunaew and Rex Hitchcock, has gone to Sparkhill, New York, under the direction of Charles Gaskill. This locality was found extremely characteristic of the pictures which Mr. Gaskill wrote, some of them being produced entirely in the open.

J. P. McGowan of the Kalem Company is now working on the seventh installment of "The Hazards of Helen" which features Helen Holmes. Each reel is virtually a separate story and some thirty of them will be issued.

Scenario writers are advised that all scripts intended for the Selig Polyscope Company should be addressed to the executive offices, 20 East Randolph street, Chicago, Ill. This rule applies to California and coast writers as well as others.

Billy Weiss, roadman of the Pittsburgh branch of the World Film Corporation is reported to be making a "clean-up" in getting business for that office, according to reports.

The Red Cross Society, during its bazaar at the Grand Central Palace, wishing to introduce moving pictures as an added attraction appealed to the Vitagraph Company of America for a contribution. "A Million Bid" and "Goodness Gracious," were contributed to the program.

The newest announcement from the World Film Corporation is that Lew Fields is to be seen in their photoplay service. General Manager Lewis J. Selznick has arranged to have Mr. Fields make his first appearance in "Old Dutch," which was one of the most successful plays in which he was seen while operating the Broadway Theater. Among the players engaged by the World Film Corporation to support Mr. Fields are Vivian Martin and George Hassel.

A little time back, Francis Ford of Universal produced a romantic two-reel drama written by Grace Cunard around some fanciful, principality and excellently acted by two of them. So successful was this that orders came from the powers that be, for more of the same style of story and the result is they are putting on another fanciful two-reel feature called "The Madcap Queen" by Miss Cunard.

Stella Razeto, leading woman of Director E. J. Le Saint's company, is the champion lawn-moweress of the Pacific film colony. At least the Selig star claims the title. She managed to do her own extensive lawn in less than a week, but hubby found her in tears at the close of the last day. She found the grass, where she began, had all grown up again.

The first four weeks' bookings of "Zudora" (produced by the Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation) have made a very auspicious showing, as results are about 100% greater than those secured by the "Million-Dollar Mystery" in the same period of time.

The most conspicuous jump in the motion picture stocks last week was in Syndicate Film Corporation; 120 is bid now with only a few shares offered at 150. We are advised that if the books were closed today the Syndicate Film Corporation could liquidate and pay out well over 150 on the common as well as on the preferred.

The demand for General Film Company preferred is weak at the present time, but we understand their earnings are satisfactory.

Harry Weiss, manager of the Chicago office of the World Film Corporation, has signed the Saxe Circuit of houses in Wisconsin on Shubert and Brady features. This makes a total of 14 Milwaukee houses on the books of the Chicago office for Shubert and Brady features.

Reina Valdez is leaving the Santa Barbara company, Aubrey M. Kennedy having taken his own two companies to the studios in the coast town. Miss Valdez is undecided just what she is going to do and has two flattering offers but is inclined to take a short rest before resuming work.

Jack Cohn, editor of the Universal Animated Weekly, has instigated the writing of a story, the title of which will be "Save Your Children's Lives." In it will be brought out the fact that if the clothing of the children is washed in a certain solution of ammonia it will be made fireproof. It was through the suggestion of the Coroner of the Borough of Brooklyn that Editor Cohn did this.

Henry P. Rhinock, brother of Joseph Rhinock, the theatrical magnate, secretary of the Shubert Theatrical Company, arrived in Cincinnati from New York to join the World Film Company's selling force.

. A specially selected company is busily at work in the studios of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, Long Beach, Cal., preparing a series of twelve photoplays, varying from two to three reels in length which will thoroughly treat one of the most vital questions of humanity. Each episode will be separate and at the end a prize will be offered for the person who gives the best answer to the question "who pays?"

The Picture Playhouse Film Company has opened a new office, located at 202 Andrews Building, Dallas, Texas, and has installed Mr. P. A. Block as Manager. Mr. William J. Lee, general manager of the exchanges, has spent some time in Dallas arranging for the opening of this office and has already received a number of advanced bookings on the Picture Playhouse Film Company's releases.

Great compliments are being paid Ashley Miller for the bevy of pretty girls he selected for the cast in "His Chorus Girl Wife" with Gladys Hulette, the Edison ingenue, in the leading role.

The Forty-fourth street theater, where Andrew Dippel's opera comic company began an engagement last Wednesday in "The Lilac Domino" is equipped with a Radium Gold Fibre screen, the product of the Atsco department of Alco.

John Harvey, owner of the wonderful dog Shep, is producing "The Doctor's Sentinel," a one-reel Thanhouser-Mutual drama.

The next release of the Cosmos Feature Film Corporation will be Mrs. Thomas Whiffen in the five-part photoplay "Hearts and Flowers." The great feature of this picture is the wonderful acting of Mrs. Whiffen, the "grand old lady" of the American stage, for twenty-eight years leading character woman for Charles Frohman.

Mable Trunnelle has a pet monkey named "Commodore" that plays an important part in "A Gypsy Madcap," the first of the series of "Olive's Opportunities."

Bryant Washburn who plays the villain in the Essanay drama "His Dearest Foes," was saved by his dog "Kewpie," a four pound full blooded bull terrier pup given him by one of his admirers, from a "savage" attack by E. H. Calvert, hero, during the taking of one of the scenes. The pup didn't understand it was only acting.

Irving Cummings, known widely both in the legitimate and in photoplays as a leading man, has been engaged by B. A. Rolfe of B. A. Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., for prominent parts in a number of forthcoming releases through the Alco Film Corporation.

Hudson D. Maxim, son of the famed inventor of high power explosives, is now managing the studio of the Colonial Motion Picture Corporation at 226 West Thirty-fifth street, New York City. Young Mr. Maxim is a Yale graduate and prior to the outbreak of war in Europe was engaged in the film business in London in the capacity of continental sales manager for the Transatlantic Film Company, which distribute the Universal brand abroad. He is now up to his shoulders in work, co-operating with T. Hayes Hunter, the Colonial director-in-chief, and F. A. Coigne, the acting director of the "Adventures of Wallingford" comedies. This Wallingford series consists of separate stories in pictures, to be released one a month.

A series of cartoons by A. B. Frost, the famous artist, in the Century Magazine furnishes the basis of the plot for "Dizzy Joe's Career," produced by Eddie Dillon of the Komic-Mutual Company at the Reliance and Majestic-Mutual studios in Los Angeles.

The work of establishing the Alco programme in Canada has begun. A. C. Langan is in the Dominion to the north of us in the interests of the Alco Corporation. Since August this concern has opened seventeen exchanges, covering the entire United States.

In the three-part Edison "What Could She Do?" Gertrude McCoy performs a feat of great daring. After surprising a band of kidnappers in their den, she climbs a swinging ladder four stories to the roof of a tenement and makes a drop through the skylight to the floor below, a distance of fifteen feet.

That it will take the motion picture business several years to adjust itself, but that when it does it will be a vital power in controlling the public opinion is the theory which was advanced by John Bunny during his recent stay in Chicago. "As water runs over the pebbles in a brook it is clarified and as two or more bodies rub together both become smooth," said Mr. Bunny, "and it is the same with this great industry of ours—problems must be solved and obstacles surmounted until the fittest men rise to the work of guiding the silent art to the position it is entitled to."

The $1,000 prize scenario, won by Miss Elaine Sterne in the New York Evening Sun contest, is now in course of production by the Vitagraph Company under the direction of Ralph Ince. Anita Stewart essays the leading female character and Earle Williams the leading male part.

So beautiful was the enlargement of the photograph taken by Gilbert Warrenton of Edna Maison as the Madonna with baby that the Universal Company have had a number of copies of the pictures finished to give to exhibitors the country over.

Edward J. Le Saint, the Selig producer seldom goes to a motion picture show. He says that all his spare time is taken up in preparing, altering and thinking over the photoplay which he puts on and he goes over each scene in his mind for the following day's work.

"Stop! Stop! My mustache's coming off!" shouted Jack Richardson, erstwhile villain of the "Flying A" studios, as he rushed out of the middle of a scene in "Old Enough To Be Her Grandpa." The detached appendage resulted from his vigorous impersonation of the rejuvenated grandpa. Incidentally, Mr. Richardson is making much of the title role in this comedy, and the Richardson smile is worth going some distance to see.

Fred Thompson, who left the Vitagraph Company to go with the Imp and came back to the Vitagraph and went to the Famous Players Company and came back to the Vitagraph Company, has accepted a position as director for the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Company. He has gone to California to start work with them as soon as practical.

Otis Turner, has had a full sized, old fashioned brick house built at the Hollywood, Calif., studios for the production of a two-reel criminologist story. The house has taken two weeks in the building and is a sample of the thoroughness which Mr. Turner insists upon in his productions.

Myrtle Stedman of Bosworth, Inc., will be one of the prominent people who will appear at the gambol of the Photoplayers Club at the Mason Opera House on the nights of October 30 and 31.

Conforming to the policy recently inaugurated, of presenting a new program every two weeks, the Vitagraph Theater will offer on Monday, Oct. 26th, and for the two weeks following, two new feature pictures, a four-act psychic drama entitled the strange story of "Sylvia Gray," featuring Helen Gardner, and a three-part burleque, "The Fates and Flora Fourflush."

The films made by Joseph De Grasse of the Universal in the hills, featuring Pauline Bush have been run and have furnished a big surprise to many, for few people have credited Pauline Bush with a vein of comedy, simply because she never acted in anything which called for the lighter vein.

The picture business is no respector of seasons, much to the frequent discomfort of the players. The other day found Miss Fischer of the "Beauty" company, looking more cheerful than might have been expected, bundled up in bed under a beating sun in the glass studio and Mr. Garwood of the Flying A Company a little later, wearing a heavy winter overcoat at a temperature of ninety in the shade—only he wasn't in the shade—far be it that this should ever be said of Mr. Garwood. Scenarios calling for bathing suits and babbling brooks and other coolish things would be mighty welcome to the participants these warm days.

In a recent issue of a New York paper there appeared an article about Mrs. Edwin Carman and a statement from Dr. Edwin Carman that his wife had been offered a proposition from the Vitagraph Company to pose in a six-reel feature introducing the murder scenes. The Vitagraph Company wishes to state that it has never made any such proposition to anyone and states most emphatically that it does not believe in such portrayals, and never has or never will desecrate the art of motion pictures to the level of morbid sensationalism.

During the absence of Al E. Christie Eddie Lyons will direct the Nestors as well as act in them.

The K. C. Booking Co., Incorporated, which handles all of the features made or otherwise controlled by the Kinetophote Corporation, of 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York, signed contracts this week with C. R. Scott, of the Dallas Film Company of Dallas, Texas, to take all of the output of the Kinetophote for Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Arkansas.

A private showing of "The Path Forbidden" and "The Key to Yesterday" was given at the Ziegfeld theater, Chicago, Ill., last Sunday morning for the benefit of exhibitors who contemplated booking them.

The Famous Players Film Company will shortly begin the production of "The Love Route," the famous comedy-drama of love and railroads, by Edward Peple, author of "The Spitfire" and the recent success, "A Pair of Sixes." The film version of this noted modern romance will be produced in the west with Marguerite Clark, the dainty star of "Wildflower," who left last week for Los Angeles, to appear in a forthcoming production for the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Photoplay Co., to which company the Famous Players loaned the services of their star for a limited time.

C. A. Taylor, who is traveling through New York state in the interests of the New York Alco Film Service, reports to the home office that he has closed contracts for the Alco program in the leading cities of the state.

Through an agreement entered into by Webster Cullison, director-in-chief of the Eclair producing forces and the faculty of the University of Arizona, a complete film is now in process of making for the purpose of advertising that well known school of the Southwest.

Directly following the important announcements that the Famous Players Film Co. have secured two such celebrated dramatic successes as "David Harum" and "The Old Homestead" comes an authoritative statement from that company that it has now obtained the film rights to the great emotional drama, "Zaza." In the film version of this great dramatic triumph, the Famous Players will star Pauline Frederick, who has won unusual distinction in the current success, "Innocent," and who has already completed engagements in two forthcoming Famous Players productions, "Sold," and "The Eternal City," the first of which will be released during the next two months.

M. J. Slopack of the Globe Theater of New Haven, was a visitor the other day to the New York Alco Exchange. Mr. Slopack secured exclusively for New Haven the Alco program.

Luke Wilson, seventy, and still active as an acrobat, is having his troubles. Ever since it was announced that he was looking for a convenient ravine in which to stage the big scene of "The Span of Life," which the Kinetophote Corporation is filming, he has had to suspend his practice period answering letters offering ravines all over the country. Luke says that since he is to be one of the trio making up the human bridge over which the heroine flees to safety, he wants to see the ravine before he accepts any one of the scores offered.

Mayor Carter H. Harrison of Chicago, and Andrew M. Lawrence, publisher of the Chicago Examiner, were guests of George Kleine at a recent private exhibition of Mr. Kleine's big, new six-part spectacle, "Julius Caesar."

Cecil R. Wood has returned to his old post as chief operator for the New York Alco Exchange. Mr. Wood spent the past few months in the South selling Radium Gold Fibre screens.

The Alco Film Corporation announces that its next release, that of Nov. 16, will be Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's story of child life in the English nobility, "Little Lord Fauntleroy."

George Kleine announces the early release of "Mme. Dubarry," featuring Mrs. Leslie Carter in the title role. In addition to the splendid work of Mrs. Carter, the picture is characterized by lavishness of production and a wonderful attention to detail.

Three seals have been acquired by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and added to the company's zoo at Universal City, Cal. The seals will be used in motion pictures.

The camels at the animal farm at Universal City, Cal., were sheared recently, principally as a sanitary precaution, and the resulting camel's hair was sold for $350.

Manager Guy C. Smith of the Broadway theater, Oakland, California, signed a contract with the Alco Film Corporation of California, which is said to be one of the largest ever executed in Oakland. The amount involved is one hundred thousand dollars. Manager Smith has contracted for the Alco program for a period of five years.

Mary Fuller, the beloved Victor star, has had a dressmaker busily preparing a handsome costume to be worn at the ball of the Cinema Exhibitors' Club of the Bronx. Miss Fuller will lead the grand march.

The Famous Players Film Co. have secured the exclusive motion picture services of that celebrated young star, Marie Doro, who has one of the largest metropolitan followings of any of the younger stars on the American stage. The Famous Players will present Miss Doro in her greatest dramatic success, "The Morals of Marcus," by William J. Locke.

William K. Hedwig, well and favorably known in the trade, has sold out his interest in the Harvard Film Corporation, and with headquarters in the Knickerbocket theater building, is busily engaged in preparing a series of productions which will shortly be placed on the market.

Scarcely a day passes without the entrance of some new concern to the film industry. The latest one to be announced is the Egan Film Company, with offices at Room 703, Columbia theater building, New York City.

ROLL OF STATES.

ARKANSAS.

A suit styled the State of Arkansas for the use and benefit of Pulaski county, ex rel. Robert L. Rogers, prosecuting attorney, vs. the American Photo Play Theater Company, was filed in the Circuit Court October 13, for judgment for $1,000. It is alleged that the defendant, a corporation organized under the laws of Arkansas in that it is doing business in Argenta, as the laws of rkansas in that it is doing business in Argenta, as the Aptco theater, without having filed its articles of incorporation with the secretary of state as required by law. The suit is to collect a penalty for violation of this law.

CALIFORNIA.

Articles of incorporation of the Robert A. Hazel amusement company have been filed. Its purpose is to handle picture films, and its place of business is Palo Alto.

The Liberty theater, the new picture playhouse located on Market street, San Jose, opened a few days ago. It is a very pretty playhouse and represents the latest ideas in arrangement and equipment.

Work has been commenced on a new motion picture house on Adeline street north of Felton, Berkeley. The seating capacity is to be 1200 and the cost $10,000. It is to replace a structure now there, the property of William F. Krohn, who secured the permit for the new work. This makes the fourth moving picture playhouse of permanent constructive type now under way. The others are the new $60,000 building on Kittredge street east of Shattuck, a $10,000 building on Durant avenue adjoining the new Elston & Clark block, and a $10000 theater at Ashby and College avenues. All of these houses, it is planned, will be in operation before January 1.

E. J. Arkush, the new manager of the Bell theater, in Redwood has decided to make improvements in the building which will add both to its appearance and accommodations. The plan will include the remodeling of the front, doing away with the steps at the entrance and providing a lobby. An addition of 11 opera chairs will be made and improvements in the service as promised.

Walter Evans has opened his new motion picture theater the Mission, in Dinuba. It has a seating capacity of 600 and equipped throughout with the finest opera chairs. The building and furnishings cost in the neighborhood of $12,000.

COLORADO.

Manager Hyde, of the Crystal theater in La Salle, has changed his film service from the Mutual companies to the General Film company.

Mr. Wrightsman, who formerly ran the picture show at Brush, will shortly open a show at Fort Morgan.

FLORIDA.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

Pathe Daily News No. 73—Pathe November 2.—Elizabeth, New Jersey, is shown celebrating its two-hundred and fiftieth anniversary, Governor O'Neill of Alabama, celebrates good roads day at the old Jefferson Davis' home in Montgomery, views of the 100-mile automobile race in which Burman smashes the world's record at Galesburg, Illinois, opening of the Massachusetts Homoepathic Hospital at Boston, where the use of the new anesthetic, known as "twilight sleep" is being made famous, together with intimate views of the devastation wrought by the war in Europe, shown by scenes taken at Kambras, Arras, Hazebrouck and Paris, France, make this issue vividly interesting.

Hearst-Selig Pictorial No. 71—Selig—November 2.—Speed test of the United States battleship "New York." Close up view of Miss Christobel Pankhurst, the famous England suffragette. The race between Directum First and William at Grand Rapids, Mich. Mine disaster in New York harbor and other interesting topicals are given. In the war section, we see the Belgian army retreating from Antwerp, the sons of well known English families erecting their own barracks and interesting views are given of the Belgian infantry in action beyond the fortification of St. Nicholas.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 72—Selig—November 5.—Pictures of the terror stricken refugees fleeing from Ghent, English recruits being drilled at Aldershot, and close up views of a batch of German prisoners makes the war section of this topical interesting. This weekly also includes views of the mine disaster at Royalton, Illinois and a picture of the new military aeroplane built by Glen Martin, being tried at San Diego, Calif.

A Better Understanding—Biograph—November 9.—The pretty daughter of the country boarding house keeper has a faithful suitor in the hired man, and when a young composer from the city comes to the home, she falls in love with him. Despite the objections of her rural lover and her father, she marries the young composer. They live happily until the composer becomes infatuated with his accompanist. The wife then returns to her country home, and the husband, after discovering that his accompanist has another lover, follows her there, where, at the cradle of their baby, the two arrive at a better understanding.

With Slight Variations—Edison—November 9.—Bob Harding receives $50,000 and decides to see the world. Writing a note to Evelyn, his sweetheart, he departs on a steamer, where the crew discover his wealth and relieve him of his valuables and toss him overboard. Evelyn pursuades her father to let her go with him on a sailing cruise and by accident they arrive on the same island on which Bob is marooned. Bob has discovered a trunk on the island, filled with female attire, and, feeling lonesome, manufactures a companion by dressing up some sticks. Cannibals inhabit the island and Bob has a strenuous time routing them in an effort to save the party, but eventually succeeds. William Wadsworth and Bliss Milford featured.

Sweedie, the Trouble Maker—Essanay—November 9.—Sweedie has two admirers and though her parents favor Fritz, Sweedie prefers Leo, an actor. To overcome the objections of Sweedie's parents the actor makes up as a French count and calling upon Sweedie and her parents so impresses them with his wealth, nobility and importance in the world that Sweedie's parents are only too willing to give their consent to his marriage with their daughter. Sweedie of course knows all about the deception and even assists Leo in helping to hoodwink her parents, the two exchanging sly winks and nods during all the time that the wedding arrangements are being made. The wedding over, Sweedie's father discovers that he has been deceived, the police are summoned and in a free-for-all fight that results Sweedie shows her prowess as a white hope. Wallace Beery featured. N.G.C.

The Riddle of the Green Umbrella—Kalem (Two Reels) November 9.—Helmar, an old professor, owns an umbrella, the handle of which was once used to poison the victims of the Borgias. Reynolds and Lloyd are rivals for the hand of Dorothy, Helmar's daughter. Reynolds, charged with having stolen funds of the college, is ordered to return the money at once. Reynolds has been experimenting with racinus, a deadly poison, the fumes of which cause instant death, and when Helmar is found dead in the barber shop next day, Madeline Mack suspects Reynolds. The latter tries to fasten the crime on Lloyd by the umbrella. When Madeline enters Reynold's apartment, she is threatened with death and Reynolds confesses that he killed Helmar by placing racinus in his shaving mug. Just as Reynolds is about to give Madeline a drug, the girl hurls a vial of racinus into his face and he crumples up as the detectives arrive. Alice Joyce featured.

Lord Cecil Plays a Part—Lubin (the "Beloved Adventurer No. 9") November 9.—Lord Cecil, returning to England, meets Harry Ashton and Ethel, his wife, going abroad on their wedding trip and business. When Harry falls into the clutches of a couple of crooks and is swindled out of all his money, he embezzles $10,000 of his employer's, besides acting so brutal toward Ethel that the miserable girl is about to throw herself overboard, when Lord Cecil interferes. He recovers the stolen money by out-cheating the swindlers and returns it to Harry. Realizing that Ethel no longer respects her husband, Cecil resolves upon a difficult part. Waiting until Harry is watching him, he seizes the girl in his arms and kisses her. At Harry's interference Cecil laughs and Harry knocks him down. Ethel, believing her husband now a real man, loves him once more. The crooks, thinking Cecil still in possession of the $10,000 steal into his stateroom, but meet with a grim reception. Arthur V. Johnson featured.

Miss Tomboy and Freckles—Vitagraph—November 9.—The daughter of Judge Moore, sometimes called "Tommie," is continually tormenting her larger sister, the "duchess," particularly in regards to Frederick Barry, who calls upon the duchess. The duchess and Barry go autoing and Tommie and Freckles, her little friend, steal the lunch. When the autoing party discover that their lunch is gone, Barry goes back to look for it. He finds Tommie and Freckles enjoying it and cannot resist joining them. Tommie learns that she is falling in love with Barry and, following a barn dance, Barry sends a sentimental note by Freckles to his sweetheart. Lillian Walker featured.

The New Magdaline—Biograph (Two Reels)—November 10.—Mercy Merrick takes the first false step on the downward path when she is left alone in the world and eventually is arrested for shoplifting and, though innocent, sentenced to prison. Following her release, she is taken to the House of Refuge, but everyone she comes in contact with shrinks from her after learning her story. Going to the church for consolation she is inspired by the sermon of Rev. Julian Gray and determines to become a red-cross nurse in the Franco-Prussian war. On the battlefield she meets Grace Roseberry, who is going to the home of Lady Jeanette Ray. When a shell injures Grace, Mercy decides to impersonate the supposed dead woman and so gain a chance for a new life. Back in England, she is accepted as Grace Roseberry at the home of Lady Jeanette and falls in love with Horace Homecroft, a war correspondent. Meanwhile the real Grace Roseberry has been saved by a famous surgeon and returns to denounce Mercy as an impostor. Her conscience troubles her, even though others are willing to accept her as the real Grace and eventually she confesses to her lover, who turns from her. She finds refuge at last in the arms of the Rev. Julian Gray, who comforts her with the words "though the flower is crushed, it yet exhales a sweeter perfume."

The Heritage of Hamilton Cleek—Edison—November 10—This is the last of the Cleek series. Cleek's father is the ruler of a small principality across the sea. On dying he requests that his son be found and restored to the throne. At Cleek's marriage to Miss Lorne the ambassador informs him of his heritage. The famous detective refuses it saying that this country is his kingdom and his wife, his throne.

Within the Three Hundred Pages—Essanay—November 10.—A necklace belonging to Mrs. Stuvysant, which was years before smuggled from China, is stolen while she is in Lawyer Smirney's office. Chief Knox, of the police department, is about to arrest Smirney for theft, when he finds a diagram in Smirney's pocket which leads him to the hiding place of a necklace. Spider, a reporter, however, proves this necklace to be paste and eventually discovers that Ho Fing-Tang, a Chinaman in Smirney's employ, is the real thief and has concealed the real necklace within the three hundred pages of a big book in the lawyer's office. Ho Fing-Tang is killed in an automobile accident and the reporter wins fame for solving the mystery. Richard Travers featured. N.G.C.

The Widow's Might—Kalem—November 10.—When Tom introduces his uncle, Jones, to Gloria Gay, a dashing widow, Jones loses his heart. The widow, in fun, tells him the man she marries must woo her like a knight of old. Accordingly, when he finds her alone, Jones grabs here by the hair and begins to drag her away. The widow turns upon him and slaps him so hard and so fast that poor Jones flees in terror and is only saved by the arrival of the police, and then he discovers that he is being taken to a lunatic asylum. John Brennan featured.

A Bargain Table Cloth—Lubin—November 10.—Sally Huffy and Mollie Hardins, neighbors, are each given money by their husbands to buy a new tablecloth and, unknown to each other, each purchases a table cloth of the same pattern. Listless Looey, a tramp, steals Sallie's table cloth, which he sells to a peddler, who, in turn, sells it to Mrs. Doocey, wife of Police Sergeant Doocev. Sallie, noting Mollie's table cloth on the line, thinks it her own and, following a mixup between the Huffys and the Hardins, both families land in the police station. Meanwhile Looey has stolen back the table cloth from Mrs. Doocey's line and when he and the peddler are arrested the tangle is straightened out.

Butting In—Lubin—November 10.—John Brown tosses away his cigar and Weary Nigger, with no cigar and less money, seizes the butt. John, the cop, not allowed to spend money for cigars, sees a chance to secure the butt and gives Weary a lively chase. Weary is very unfortunate, for he encounters many obstacles which prevent his enjoying the butt. John, the cop, eventually captures Weary, secures the butt and smokes to his heart's content.

The Ranger's Romance—Selig—November 10.—A thrilling Western production, whose rapid action and beautiful backgrounds will make it popular. Tom Mix appears in the principal role. The plot is slight, but the incidents used are thrilling. The photography is very good. A settler and his daughter leave for the settlement but are attacked by Indians who have been furnished whiskey through a bootlegger. The ranger learns of their danger and leads the cowboys to the rescue. The wheel of the prairie schooner, in which they are riding, comes off, leaving the settler and his daughter at the mercy of the Indians. The ranger and cowboys arrive in time to effect a rescue and the ranger is rewarded by the girl's love. C.J.C.

The Senator's Brother—Vitagraph (Two Reels) November 10.—Henry and Paul Zanes, brothers, are country lawyers. Paul is ambitious politically and Henry is satisfied to remain in his modest surroundings. Paul meets and falls in love with Dorothy, but neglects to tell Henry of his engagement. Henry offers his brother the secretaryship of a senator, the position calling for an unmarried man. Paul quietly marries Dorothy, but in Washington pretends to be a single man. One day Henry is called to the bedside of a dying woman and learns that she is Dorothy, his brother's wife. He cares for her baby, named Dorothy, and disowns his brother. Fifteen years elapse and Henry has brought up Dorothy in ignorance of her parents. Paul has become senator for his native state and married a wealthy society woman. Paul's vote proves the deciding one in defeating a bill, but Henry will not consent to Paul's claiming Dorothy as his daughter, so the latter lives alone when his wife deserts him. William Humphrey, Anders Randolf and Leah Baird featured.

Andy Falls in Love—Edison—November 11—This is the best of the "Andy" series, and marks Andy Clarke as being one of the cleverest child-comedians on the screen. Not only is the plot amusing, but it affords Andy excellent opportunity for displaying his powers of mimicry and his funny little mannerisms. Andy falls in love with an actress, calls on her in her dressing room, and presents her with a bouquet. While he is waiting to take her out to dinner he meets her husband and grown-up son, and decides that he isn't as much in love with her as he thought.

The Everlasting Triangle—Edison—November 14—A tragic story, well acted and splendidly photographed. The ending is strong and severe, and to some, possibly, disappointing inasmuch as it does not leave the characters either comfortably situated or happy, but instead, ends with the death of two of them, leaving the third facing an empty, friendless world. Mabel Trunnelle and Frank McGlynn play the leads. The director's work is especially commendable.

Andy Falls in Love—Edison (12th "Adventures of Andy") November 11.—Lanky shows Andy a paper in which is the picture of a pretty girl named "Lizzie Weldon." When Andy voluntarily washes his face and hands and, later, surprises his mother by blacking his shoes, fears for his sanity are felt. A week later Andy discovers that Lizzie is to appear at the local theater as the star of a musical comedy and when he is unable to get by the stage doorkeeper, he weeds a garden to earn enough money to buy a bouquet which he takes to the theater, but when he drops on one knee and proclaims his love for the lady, he is surprised to have her husband and grown son appear. Disconsolate, Andy walks out to the end of a dock and hurls the bouquet into the river. Andy Clark featured.

Three Boiled Down Fables—Essanay—November 11.—A single reel subject containing three of George Ade's immitable fables in slang. All uproariously funny. Harry Dunkinson and Gerda Holmes are featured in "The Household Comedian." Wallace Beery and Charlotte Mineau in "The Prevailing Craze," and other talented players in "Why Essie's Friend Got the Fresh Air."

N.G.C.

A Midnight Tragedy—Kalem (Two Reels) November 11.—Dr. Warren, engaged to Marjory, breaks their engagement when he is dismissed from the hospital for his negligence. Marjory then weds Priestman, a scientist, who is blind. Through an accident Warren and Marjory are thrown together and Priestman, sensing their love, resolves to make it possible for her to wed the man who holds her real love. Priestman learns that a burglar is in the house and deliberately follows the thief expecting to be shot. The thief, however, sees that Priestman is blind and will not shoot, until the latter fires in the air and then the burglar sends a bullet into Priestman's heart. Warren and Marjory rush into the room and when the police bring in the burglar, neither she nor Warren know of the husband's deliberate sacrifice. Alice Hollister featured.

The Quack LUBIN (TWO REELS) NOVEMBER 11.—James McDonald, known as "Slim Jim," succeeds in fleecing a stranger and escapes from the police by sliding down a rope from the top of a twelve-story building. After killing a detective, Slim Jim becames a fugitive with a price on his head. McDonald's wife and baby struggle along with poverty and, ten years later, the baby, now a good sized boy, locates in a Western city. McDonald, located in the same city and now known as Dr. Reed, has built up a successful business selling "Dr. Reed's Celebrated Universal Specific." Young McDonald is a victim of consumption and is dosed with the "famous" remedy exploited by Dr. Reed and all the time grows worse. Meeting Reed on the street one day, the wife recognizes him as her husband and when Reed, in his car, hastens to the bedside of the child, he finds his own son to be a victim of his quack remedy. L. C. Shumway and Velma Whitman featured.

Peggy of Primrose Lane—SELIG—NOVEMBER 11.—Peggy leaves her home and her country lover to come to the city and become an actress. She is befriended by a soubrette and her artist friend and through them manages to earn a bare living. A band of counterfeiters use her as a tool and only through the influence of the artist is she saved from arrest. Her lover comes for her and she returns home with him. The character drawing is the chief merit of this picture, though the setting and photography are adequate. Stella Razeto, Adda Gleason, Lamar Johnstone and George Hernandez have the principal roles.

In Bridal Attire—VITAGRAPH—NOVEMBER 11.—While Mary, the bride-to-be is waiting, John, the groom, loses his collar button, rips his vest and is annoyed in other ways. Mary and her father arrive at the church and soon begin to grow worried when the groom fails to appear and they eventually return home. Meanwhile John gets dressed and starts for the church. The auto has a blowout, but he rides on trucks, trolley cars and runs down the street like a madman, but eventually arrives at the church after the wedding party has departed. Mary and her father depart for their country home in an automobile and John and the minister follow on a motorcycle and eventually John and Mary are married. Billy Quirk and Constance Talmadge featured.

The Fleur-de-lis Ring—BIOGRAPH—NOVEMBER 12.—A young girl, with whom a peasant is in love, is seized by a friend of the landlord of a tavern in the neighborhood. Rushing up, the lover frees her from the arms of the stranger, though not until the girl's arm has been bruised by a fleur-de-lis ring which the stranger wears. The lover and the girl's father vow vengeance, and that night the landlord and the stranger quarrel over the latter's cheating at cards, and the outcome of the affair is that the landlord is killed by the friend. Suspicion falls upon the peasant lover and the girl's father. Eventually the girl proves that a mark on the dead man's forehead was made by the fleur-de-lis ring on the finger of the stranger, thus freeing her father and lover.

Sophie and the Man of Her Choice—ESSANAY—NOVEMBER 12.—Slippery Slim, in love with Sophie, is abducted by Sophie's father and Mustang Pete, but outwits them and is carried to the preacher's house in a trunk where he emerges from his strange vehicle and marries Sophie, much to the surprise of Mustang Pete and Sophie's father. Victor Potel featured. N.G.C.

In the Hills of Kentucky—LUBIN (TWO REELS) NOVEMBER 12.—John Schultz and his son, Don, discover a vein of coal in the Kentucky hills and try to buy the land from Lafe Herron and his pretty wife, Roxie, without disclosing its value, but Herron refuses to sell. Having noted that Roxie seemed interested in Don, Schultz tells his son to attempt to win Roxie away from Lafe, so that he will be willing to sell. Bill, Roxie's brother, escapes from prison and stumbles into the Schultz's camp, where he is captured. His identity disclosed, Schultz arranges to have Lafe witness a meeting between his wife and Bill, the latter to be dressed in Don's clothes. Lafe sees the meeting and resolves to sell the land and leave the hills forever. Old Blazer, who has been a guide for the Schultzes sympathizes with Roxie and eventually tells her why Schultz wanted the land. Roxie then dashes for town to prevent Lafe from selling the land and arrives just in time to prevent his being swindled. Douglas Sibole and Louise Huff featured.

Lola, The Rat—VITAGRAPH—NOVEMBER 12.—Carlo, the head of a gang of crooks, ill-treats his Italian waitress, Lola, nicknamed "The Rat." Dr. Chester overhears Lola's cries when Carlo abuses her and interferes and sends her to a hospital. Lola, not knowing that Dr. Chester is engaged to Amy Thornton, secretly falls in love with him. She goes back to find work in an Italian laundry near Carlo's. Carlo and his gang plan revenge on Chester, but Lola overhears them and summons the police. As the police break into the room where Chester is being tortured, Carlo shoots Lola and the girl dies, happy in the knowledge that she has given her life for the man she loved. Maurice Costello and Estelle Mardo featured.

Life's Stream—BIOGRAPH—NOVEMBER 13.—On a fishing trip a young man meets a mountain girl, with whom he falls deeply in love. The young man's aunt and fiance journey to the mountains to "bring him to his senses" and the aunt threatens to disinherit him if he will not give up the girl. The girl, reminded of her lowly station in life, tells her lover that if, after two years, he still cares for her, he can come back. She then goes off to school, where she soon develops into a well-bred young woman, more cultured even than her lover, for the latter, compelled to work for a living, has taken to drink and sunk to a far lower station in life. However, he regains his manhood and by the stream where they first met, the two plight their troth.

The Heritage of Hamilton Cleek—EDISON (13TH OF "CHRONICALS OF CLEEK" SERIES) NOVEMBER 10.—Cleek is about to be married when the Apaches, whom he has so long pursued, again attack him. Cleek's enemies capture Miss Lorne, his sweetheart, but Cleek, suspecting immediately who is at the bottom of the abduction, traces the girl to a deserted house, where the entire band is captured. Just as the wedding ceremony is finished a royal councillor of Mauravania arrives and proclaims Cleek heir to the throne of that kingdom. Cleek informs the royal councillor that his kingdom is in England and his queen the new Mrs. Cleek. Ben Wilson and Gertrude McCoy featured.

A Question of Identity—EDISON (TWO REELS) NOVEMBER 13.—An adaptation from Mary Imlay Taylor's story, "The Window that Monsieur Forgot," in which the action takes place in France and revolves about the mistaken identity problem. Twin brothers, separated in infancy, grow up ignorant of each other's existence. One commits a crime and the other suffers for it, until the mistaken identity is revealed. See review on page 501, issue of October 31. Augustus Phillips featured.

The Prince Party—ESSANAY (TWO PARTS) NOVEMBER 13.—Prince Francis of Fourania, on a visit to America, is invited to become a guest at the Ogilvie house party, but declines at the last moment. He assumes the disguise of a tramp and appears on the grounds of the Ogilvie home and is induced by Mrs. Ogilvie to play the part of the prince, who has failed to appear. He accepts, and later saves the Ogilvie diamonds from being stolen by Atteridge, a society crook, and for his heroism is rewarded by the hand of Betty Ogilvie. Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne featured. A review appears on page 635 of the November 7 issue of Motography.

Ham, the Piano Mover—Kalem—November 13.—Ham and Bud deliver a new piano at the home of Mrs. Newlywed. Despite Mrs. Newlywed's objections Bert Chasem, a flirt, follows her home and when Mrs. Newlywed gives Ham $5.00 to throw Bert out, the latter mistakes Mr. Newlywed, who has just returned, for his victim and hurls him out. Mr. Newlywed returns with a policeman and the tangle is eventually unsnarled when Bert is discovered and captured. Ruth Roland and Lloyd Hamilton featured.

The Trap—Lubin—November 13.—Rita Hermanez, daughter of General Hermanez, is loved by Captain Raymond Orizba, a Mexican officer, and Charles Ross, an American traveler. When Rita shows her preference for Ross, her father demands that Ross leave town immediately. Orizba leaves town to hold up a pack train of gold, and when the pack train is attacked by the bandits, all are killed but one, who goes back to the border with the news of Orizba's treachery. Ross sends a note to Rita by her maid, asking her to elope, but the maid betrays them and Rita's father follows to surprise them at their trysting place. Orizba, now an outlaw, determines to seize the girl and enters the grounds of Rita's home, where he is seized and dragged away by the soldiers, who believe him the girl's lover. Rita escapes in an auto with Ross, and Orizba next morning atones for his treachery before a firing squad. L. C. Shuman and Velma Whitman featured.

Cupid Turns the Tables—Selig—November 13.—Too many characters in secondary roles take the vigor out of this story, but Lyllian Brown Leighton and John Lancaster make up for this fault by the clever portrayals they give the roles for which they are cast. A rich widow is so bothered by money seeking suitors that she disguises herself as an old maid. In this guise she meets Mr. Batch, a woman-hater, who saves her life. Many complications follow, all of which are aided by several young people who take an interest in the affair and at the end the widow and Batch discover that they are in love. C.J.C.

The Rocky Road of Love—Vitagraph—November 13.—Emmeline Burr, a spinster, drops her purse on the street in an endeavor to meet Simon Giggs, a bashful bachelor, but unfortunately the latter is seen picking up the purse and arrested. Emmeline turns and explains the affair. Learning that Giggs is a painter and decorator, she orders him to decorate and paint her home. He commences work at once, but knocks over a stepladder which strikes Emmeline and she falls in his arms. Other catastrophes follow and when he is declaring his love he knocks over a lamp which gives him a chance to rescue Emmeline and prove himself a man. Flora Finch and Jay Dwiggins featured.

The Deadly Dispatch—Biograph—November 14.—The ambassador's ball is a nest of international spies and when two of them are caught, a girl spy discovers that a dispatch she has will save them, she rides to the rescue. A policeman, attracted by the shooting, demands to know what is going on and they gather round him and explain, "it is only a moving picture."

His Wife's Pet—Biograph—November 14.—"Love me, love my cat," is the ultimatum delivered to Jones by his wife, so he has two of his friends take his wife to a picture show, while he chloroforms the cat. The fumes of the chloroform overcome him and while he is asleep two burglars enter and steal the silver. They escape with the wrong bag, however, and when Jones steals out of the house, he is arrested as a thief. Mrs. Jones returning home, is summoned to the police station, where the thieves have now been captured and she not only receives back her silver, but compels Jones to kiss the cat before she will forgive him.

Helen's Sacrifice—Kalem (1st Episode of the "Hazards of Helen") November 14.—Helen, night operator at Lone Point, learns that the daughter of Benton, the day operator, is critically ill. Benton receives a message ordering him to sidetrack freight train No. 245 until the fast mail passes, but Benton is so tired that he falls asleep ere he can carry out the order. Helen, reporting for work ahead of time, reads the message, after the freight has passed and mounting a horse takes a short cut, which necessitates a leap from a fifty-foot cliff into a river, and stops the freight train just in time to avert a horrible wreck. A report of the incident reaches headquarters and, knowing that Benton cannot afford to lose his position, Helen assumes the blame for failure to sidetrack the freight train, though it costs her her position. Helen Holmes featured.

Beating the Burglar—Lubin—November 14.—Liza Sniggs, engaged to Hi, a rube, flirts with Jerry, a burglar, who has entered the house next door for a week's rest. Hi is angered at Liza's flirtation and so breaks the engagement. Jerry, who has learned of the wealth of Liza's father, determines to marry the girl. Hi has discovered a number of disguises in the house occupied by Jerry and getting several small boys to accompany him, dressed in the clothes found in the house, Hi goes to the minister's, where Jerry and Liza are to be married, and represents himself and the children to be Jerry's wife and family. Meanwhile Liza's father has discovered that Jerry has robbed him and, with a policeman, rushes to the minister's and has Jerry arrested as a thief and Liza marries Hi. George Welch and Eva Bell featured.

The Everlasting Triangle—Edison—November 14.—Kate marries Santley of the West, much to Philbin's surprise. The latter returns East and, years later, writes kate, painting glowing word pictures of the delights of the East. The lonesomeness of the mountains is beginning to have its effect and the girl, in desperation, writes Philbin to come after her. During Santley's absence, Philbin and Kate depart together and Santley, returning, follows their tracks and discovers that they have gone into the desert instead of toward the railroad. He pursues them for days and eventually shoots two of the three horses, compelling his wife and her lover to draw cuts for the other one. Chance favors Kate, but she fails to reach the railway. Thirst in the desert causes Philbin's end and Santley dies with the name of the woman he had loved upon his lips. Frank McGlynn and Mabel Trunnelle featured.

Broncho Billy's Decision—Essanay—November 14.—An out of the ordinary Western picture in which G. M. Anderson, appears in citizen's clothes, as the division superintendent of a railroad. In running an extension, the road plans to cut off the home of an old man and his daughter, but when the division superintendent learns that the line, as projected, would run across the grave of the old man's wife, he changes the route and saves the home of the girl, with whom he has fallen in love. G. M. Anderson featured. N.G.C.

Magazine Cooking—Lubin—November 14.—Ernest Forrest and Dolly, his wife, are a loving young couple, but Dolly knows nothing about cooking and when their cook departs, Dolly, after reading the menus in a column of a lady's magazine, decides to prepare luncheon "all by herself." She tells her husband to be sure and return home for luncheon. Ernest rashly invites his employer to luncheon with him, but when Dolly's fearful and wonderful dishes are served the situation becomes serious. Eventually the chief article on the list turns out to be a laughable surprise and the ludicrous aspect of the affair averts disaster for Ernest. Burt Butcher and Sadie Midgley featured.

The Fatal Note—Selig—November 14.—This is a very pleasing comedy acted on a dramatic scale. Several rain scenes are well handled and the interior settings are rich and well arranged. A scene showing a donkey standing under a tree in the rain with a jealous husband creeping up upon him, thinking him his wife's lover, will probably be good for a hearty laugh in the average house. Tisdale discovers a note signed by his wife's lover and goes to meet him at the appointed place, prepared for a slaughter. He sees the bushes move and creeps up on him, but it proves to be a mule. The kick Tisdale receives puts him out. When he is revived his wife tells him the note is one that he wrote her before their marriage. The ending is rather obvious. Adele Lane and Edwin Wallock have the leads. C.J.C.

Ann, The Blacksmith — VITAGRAPH (TWO REELS) NOVEMBER 14.—After her father's death, Ann with her brother, Eddie, continues to carry on the blacksmith business. Eddie has a weakness for liquor and she has difficulty in getting him to leave the saloon. That night the saloon-keeper is robbed and Eddie, awakened by the commotion, is mistaken by the saloon-keeper for one of the robbers. The following morning Eddie is arrested and Ann starts on the trail of the bandits. She attempts to capture them, but they overpower her and she is only saved by the arrival of the sheriff. Ann, the blacksmith, eventually becomes Ann—the sheriff's wife. Anne Schaefer featured. On the same reel is an educational subject, entitled, The Making of a Newspaper, 638 feet in length.

Mutual Program

A Slice of Life — AMERICAN — (TWO REELS) — NOVEMBER 9 — The authoress searches for a slice of life and becomes interested in a man whose mind has been made blank by a fall. She falls in love with him only to give him up to his wife when she appears. A complete review will be found on page 651 of this issue.

Our Mutual Girl — CHAPTER 43 — RELIANCE—NOVEMBER 9—After a tour of shopping at Wanamaker's Margaret motored over to Paterson, N. J. to view the silk-workers' parade from Governor Fielder's box. Farly that morning she had had a call from Ralph telling her that he had inherited his uncle's silk mill, and that one of the will's conditions was that he take charge immediately and show that he was capable of handling the business on profitable terms. After the parade she decided to pay her friend a visit at his factory. While waiting in the superintendent's office she overhears a plot to overcharge the machines and burn the mill. She disguises herself as the superintendent's accomplice, and fools him for a time, but he soon sees through her scheme. In anger he attempts to throw her into the whirring machinery, but she struggles fiercely and attracts Ralph's attention. A blow sends the foreman unconscious, and Margaret embraces her hero.

His Trysting Places—(TWO REELS)—KEYSTONE—NOVEMBER 9 — Clarence and Ambrose are both married, and both are completely under their wives' control. They meet in a restaurant one day, get into a quarrel, and in the maze of flying dishes and other loose decorations they get their overcoats mixed. What their wives find in their overcoat pockets is not exactly to their credit, and they are whipped accordingly. The quartet finally comes together, and the affair is straightened out. As a parting blow Clarence gives Mrs. Ambrose the love note he found in Ambrose's pocket, and he and his wife walk off while poor Ambrose is being disciplined by his enraged wife.

Motherhood—BEAUTY—NOVEMBER 10—This delicate subject, handled in a most appealing manner by Director Harry Pollard, and filmed amid rarely beautiful floral gardens, makes an offering worthy of praise from every point of view. The acting of Miss Margarita Fischer, who has been absent from the screen for several weeks, is a real treat, as she rises to the heights of emotion in several of the scenes. Little Kathie Fischer as Cupid is also pleasing. A girl and a man meet in the garden of love and discover the flower of love. They are married and find happiness and contentment in their little vine-covered cottage, until the call of motherhood comes to the woman. She is rebellious, repulses her husband and flees to her room, where she dreams of the coming of the child, of the growing resentment and separation which results because he was an unwelcome guest and the violent parting, where the son pushes his mother away and strikes the father. The woman awakens, and rejoices that it was but a dream. She realizes that there is no fear in love and goes into the garden to find her husband and to atone for the ache her rudeness has caused him.

The Niggard—MAJESTIC—NOVEMBER 10—Elmer Kent's small salary is more than eaten up by his expenses. In addition to being his mother's sole support he is burdened with paying weekly installments on their cottage. Several times the payments are late, and now two weeks have elapsed since he made the last. On Saturday morning he receives a foreclosure notice from the real estate agent. At noon he rushes over to his office with the money, but the agent has gone for the day. He follows to the beach hoping to meet him, but his mission is ended on his meeting Wirt, a care-free friend. To make matters worse Wirt meets some girl friends and the quartet goes off on an amusement tour, Wirt paying all the bills. Finally the girls taunt Elmer with being a tightwad. To vindicate himself he spends all of his salary. Monday he pleads for an extension of time with the agent, but is refused. Elmer and his mother are forced to move into a stuffy suite of rooms, and Elmer again takes up the struggle of life. A tag shows the girls enjoying themselves ignorant of the misery caused by their remarks.

The Terror of Anger—(TWO REELS)—THANHOUSER — NOVEMBER 10 — Gilbert Rawlings' first awakening to the fact that his wife does not love him comes with his finding a note from her stating that she has gone forever. He takes up pursuit, but the chase does not last long for the elopers' auto goes over the edge of a cliff, killing its occupants. Returning home and seeing his baby boy sleeping, Rawlings is filled with hatred for all womankind. He dreams that he trains his boy to despise the opposite sex, and that, in a quarrel over the question he is about to kill him. Just then he awakens and realizes that, because his own wife has proven untrue, is no reason to believe that all women are the same.

The Stolen Masterpiece—AMERICAN—NOVEMBER 11—Acting and settings excel in this drama of society and the underworld. An appealing human interest touch is given the story by the silent pleading of a woman of the slums when her husband is tempted to return to the life of crime he formerly led. Ed Coxen injects a thrill by climbing hand over hand up a ladder several stories from the ground. Winnifred Greenwood plays the woman lead. One unplausible point is noted where the society man takes the picture from the crook, who supposes him to be his pal, although he looks directly at his face. The offering as a whole is very worthy, A young clubman loves the daughter of a wealthy man but her father objects to the match, as he thinks the young fellow is not capable of supporting his daughter. The father is a lover of fine pictures and has one of great value, which a band of crooks steal, despite the pleading of the wife of their leader to be straight. The leader, an artist of no mean ability, makes a copy of the original and returns it to the millionaire's home but the clubman manages to place the crooks under arrest and restores the original picture, whereupon he wins the girl's hand.

Destiny's Night—(Two Reels)—Bronco—November 11—During the absence of the Bordens "Educated Dan" Miller gains entrance to the house and begins ransacking the upstairs. Maude Dunwoodie also visits the house with the same intention and begins work on the first floor. Miller hears her, sees that she, also, is a thief, and decides to pose as the house owner. Maude begs mercy, telling him the story of her life, and pointing out that she never got a chance. They are startled by the bell ringing. Miller goes to the door, and there finds a deserted baby. The sight of Maude with the baby in her arms affects him, and he asks her to marry him and help bring up the baby right. Just after she consents Borden enters, having returned to the city on a hurry call. He takes a liking to the pair, and allows them their freedom on the condition that they name the baby after him.

The Widow's Children — Reliance — November 11—A barn on the Widow Kelton's farm is directly on the line surveyed for a line fence by the Mountain Water Company. Not understanding, she refuses to have it removed, and they set it afire. One of the little children runs into the barn in an effort to save the two horses, and is saved by the superintendent of the fence gang. This serves as an introduction to the family, and the friendship which grows out of their acquaintance finally results in the marriage of the widow and the superintendent.

The Friend—(Two Reels)—Domino—November 12—Grant Keller, a wealthy young artist, falls in love with his model, Daisy Edwards, but because of the difference in their social positions he marries a girl of his own set. Later Daisy inherits some money, and through hard work, aided by her little inheritance, she becomes a successful miniature painter. Bruce Livingstone, a friend of Grant's, falls in love with her, and they become engaged. When Grant learns of it he commands Daisy to tell Bruce of the past, and, on her refusal, tells him, himself. Maddened with jealousy Bruce breaks the engagement. Daisy seeks forgetfulness in high life and a year afterwards drowns herself in the river.

In the Clutches of the Gangsters—(Two Reels)—Kay Bee—November 13—Molly Mason recalls her invitation to Chick Hodge to call when she learns that he is a member of the "Corrigan Gang." He is seized with a longing to reform and be considered good enough to call upon her. He obtains a position, saves money, and wins Molly's consent to marriage. While buying the furniture he finds that he is short of money and goes to the bank to draw some out. Sandy, a member of the gang, follows him, and attacks him in the hallway. Molly hears the struggle, and assists Chick in routing the gangster. Chick finds in an easy conscience and home life full repayment for his breaking with the gangsters.

The Folly of Ann—Majestic—November 13—Ann leaves her country home to make her way in the world as a writer. She is unable to sell any of her stories, and is ejected from her rooming house for not paying her rent. She rests on a doorstep, but soon afterward is driven away by a policeman. Further down the street she sits down on another doorstep, and accidentally finds the house key under the mat. Seeing a policeman approaching she takes the key and enters the house. The resident returns home, finds the key gone, and enters through a window. Thinking he is a burglar Ann grabs a revolver and orders him to throw up his hands. She then tells him her troubles, and he informs her that he is one of the publishers that have refused her stories. He consents to reread them, and a romance begins which makes Ann's life story end happily.

The Floating Call—(Two Reels)—Reliance—November 14—Bella fights her way through professional jealousy until the reporters finally acknowledge her as "one of the boys." A big counterfeit story is in the wind but will not break until the whole gang and their outfit is captured. To get on the inside track Bella takes up the trail herself, and by some clever sleuthing manages to learn the location of the counterfeiters' headquarters. She notifies Connors, the Secret Service man who is one of the suitors for her hand, and leads a raid on the place. Bella secures the "scoop" for her paper, and is shortly afterward announced as Connors' bride-to-be.

A Fortune in Pants—Royal—November 14—A young messenger entrusted with the delivery of a famous precious stone is left at a small way-station, and while waiting for a train, goes in swimming in the river. A tramp steals his trousers, rifles them of everything but the stone and throws them in an ash-can. Here they are found by a clothes dealer who sells them to an actor. Clad only in the shower shield the messenger goes in search of his trousers. The clothes dealer tells him of finding them and they go in search of the actor. Under the doors of a barroom the messenger spies his trousers, and dives in after them. When the tramp, clothes dealer, and actor see him extract the precious stone from the pocket of the pair of trousers they collapse.

Out Again, in Again—Komic—November 15—Mr. Henpeck, being anxious to join the boys, arranges with two pals to dress as policemen and he will feign insanity. At a given signal they are to rush up and take him out. In the meantime a crook chased by two cops takes refuge in Henpeck's kitchen. Mrs. Henpeck gets wise to hubby's game, locks him in the kitchen, and gives the signal as arranged. The crook compels Henpeck to change clothes with him, and when the friends arrive they find themselves looking into the muzzle of a thirty-eight. The real cops find Henpeck and rush him off to the cooler. Mr. Henpeck is finally released promising never again to try to put one over on wifey.

The Odalisque—(Two Reels)—Majestic—November 15—May and Annie, stock girls, are courted by Joe and Eddie, wagon drivers. Curtiss, an oily-tongued buyer, is impressed with May's beauty and grace, and obtains a position for her as a model. Daily contact with nice clothes and wealthy people cause May to regard Joe as too coarse for her. Her salary as model is more than balanced by her expenses, and she manages to get along only by the attention, suppers, etc., given her by Curtiss. He has an object in all of this, thinking to get May into his power by obligating her. He lays a trap for her by having her visit a woman friend of his, but his plans are interrupted by the entrance of Joe who has followed May to the adventuress' home. A free-for-all fight results in his successfully rescuing May from the danger into which she has fallen by living beyond her means.

An Ill Wind—Sterling Reliance—November 9.—The proud and haughty police chief of Pumpkin Center rules his force with an iron hand. After much drilling he departs for home intent on signing some valuable papers. While doing this, one of the papers is blown into the room of a girl, and the only way to recover it is to crawl into the room by the window, which the chief does. While there the girl returns and the chief takes refuge in a folding couch. She, hearing the noise, mistakes him for a burglar and her screams soon bring her policeman sweetheart. The chief is roped in the couch, bundled into the patrol wagon and taken to the police station. The couch bursts open, and the policemen are all horrified at discovering their prisoner to be none other than their chief. He immediately takes revenge on all concerned in the affair.

His Heart, His Hand, and His Sword—Victor (Two Reels) November 9.—This is the first of the "Terrence O'Rourke, Soldier of Fortune" series. Terrence O'Rourke finds himself in Paris without funds, and, in a spirit of recklessness, pawns a watch given him for bravery and enters a prominent Parisian restaurant to dine. While there an incident occurs which makes him greatly admired by Princess de Grandlieu, and thoroughly hated by her husband, the prince and her legal adviser, Chambret. After dinner O'Rourke tries his luck at the gaming table and loses the balance of his money. Meantime the princess receives a note by messenger telling her that her brother's life is in danger. This is one of the prince's schemes, for on the brother's death his fortune will revert to the princess, and the princess, therefore, will have control of more money. The princess organizes a rescue party, and requests O'Rourke to lead it. He consents much to both the prince's and Chambret's discomfiture. What results from this venture will be told in the second release.

The Life Savers—Crystal—November 10.—Joe and George come to the seashore and ask a policeman to direct them to a hotel. Having heard that a wealthy young widow is staying at one of the hotels, they are anxious to meet her. The policeman directs them to an insane asylum and they beat up the cop. He picks up a brick and throws it, hitting another arm of the law. The two cops pursue Joe and George. Later, hearing that an enormous reward has been paid to two life savers, they decide to take the part of life guards. While on the beach they see a man drowning; the widow begs them to save him, as he is her brother. They back out at the last moment and run away. The widow, learning the truth about the two fakers, has them placed in the asylum.

The Last Trump—Gold Seal (Three Reels) November 10.—The fourteenth installment of the "Trey O' Hearts" series ended with the fall over the cliff of the motor car containing Marraphat and Jimmie. At the opening of the fifteenth installment Alan and the party are seen gazing down into the canyon at the wrecked machine and its inanimate occupants. Later while Alan lies asleep in the bunk house Judith kisses him. Rose sees this and is about to shoot herself in her insane jealousy, but Alan awakes in time to stop her. Trine's auto is seen approaching, and the party captures it and turns it to their own use. Seated in the rear seat Trine secures Judith's revolver, and attempts to shoot Alan. She interferes in time to save him, but the bullet lodges in the chauffeur's shoulder. He loses control of the machine and it shoots over the embankment. Trine is the only one injured by the fall. Alan decides to marry Rose at once. At the last moment Judith determines to attend the ceremony. Trine hears her go out, and to his astonishment, on trying to get out of bed, finds that the accident has cured him of his old infirmity, and that he can walk. He proceds to the chapel and attempts to shoot Alan, but just then a bolt of lightning strikes in the aisle killing Trine and Rose. Much against her will Judith consents to Barcus' plan of deceiving Alan into believing that it was Judith that was killed instead of Rose. Alan recovers consciousness and he and Judith embrace. End of series.

The Two Thieves—Nestor—November 10.—A burglar enters a bank and finds the cashier dead, a note to his wife telling that he is short in his accounts. A woman's picture on the desk recalls to the burglar's mind the days of his boyhood when he shielded this very girl from a group of toughs who had thrown her books in the mud. He then rips open the cashier's shirt, musses the office up to indicate a struggle, blows open the safe, and departs. The next day he reads about how the gallant cashier died protecting his employers' money. Reminiscently he draws from his pocket the fruit of the night's work, a letter and a woman's photograph.

The Yellow Streak—Eclair (Two Reels) November 11.—"Kid" Donovan is hailed by the fight fans as the coming champion. His sweetheart warns hims that if he doesn't quit the ring immediately she will break off their engagement. He consents and withdraws his name from the coming championship battle. The papers and fans score him as being "yellow" but he remains firm in his promise. Unable to find work elsewhere he secures an appointment in the fire department. Shortly afterward the girl is injured in a big fire and is rescued by Donovan. It is necessary to send her away for her health, but funds are short, and finally the "Kid" challenges the champion. He wins, and with his purse sends his sweetheart to the

He leaves it on a doorstep, but a policeman who has seen him forces him to return for it. To his surprise there are two babies there now. The officer insists that he take both. On unwrapping the strange child at home they find $500 in bills tucked in its clothes, and a note stating that the money is to pay for the child's care for a year at the end of which time its parents will call for it. Overjoyed at their good fortune the cobbler and his wife give thanks to heaven.

The Dog Raffles—Sterling—November 12.—A gentleman thief has a trick dog for an assistant, and things go fine until one night the dog, in entering an apartment, finds a stick of dynamite which another thief has placed upon the safe. When he appears outside with it in his mouth his master flees panic-stricken. He runs into a police station, the dog following, and in a second the place is vacated. The chase leads to the river, and after the danger is all over the police march the crooks back to the station house.

Siss Dobbins, Oil Magnet—Powers—November 13—One day Siss Dobbins overhears a conversation between two city men in which one tells the other of finding oil on the Dobbins farm, and of the low figure at which he is buying the property, its owner being ignorant of its real worth. Dobbins changes his mind about selling when he learns this, and puts wells of his own in the ground. The family becomes wealthy within a short time, and Siss leaves for the city to attend school. Three years later she returns, and attempts to renew her acquaintance with the storekeeper's son who was her constant companion when they were young, and who is now a lawyer. She finds him distant and shy, and finally decides that it must be because of her fine clothes. The next time she sees the young lawyer she is dressed in calico as she was before the oil strike. This makes the fellow feel more like her equal and he proposes.

When the Girls Were Shanghaied—Nestor—November 13.—Mrs. Newlywed and her girl friends make up a slumming party. Newlywed gets wind of it, and he and a number of friends deck themselves out in sailor attire, shanghai the women, and put them to work on a ship, furling sails, swabbing the deck, etc. The girls have made their trip in men's attire and cannot back out now that the tide is turned against them. The men allow them to escape, and then hurry to get home before them so they can deliver their lecture with proper dignity.

A Girl of the People—Victor—November 13.—When Hilda and her father come to America the latter sends her to work in a sweatshop under Michael, an ignorant and cruel foreman. Six years elapse, and Hilda has grown to beautiful girlhood. Michael complains to her father because Hilda refuses his attentions, and the girl is beaten for repulsing her employer. She runs away, and becomes a member of a band of gypsies. Rigo, the leader, becomes enamored with her, and to protect herself from him she steals his revolver. Soon after she shoots a young farmer while in the woods in the belief that he is Rigo following her. When she discovers her mistake she flees to the city, thinking that she has committed murder. There she becomes famed as a dancer. Rigo takes advantage of Hilda's belief that she is a refugee from the law and threatens her with exposure unless she buys his silence. One night while dancing in a cafe Hilda meets a man who befriended her years before. He is an artist and engages the girl to pose for him. One night shortly after their engagement Rigo comes upon them in a cafe. As he is denouncing Hilda for refusing to grant him money the young farmer walks in. Rigo loses no time in getting out, and Hilda is no longer shadowed by a supposed crime.

The Silent Peril—101 Bison (Two Reels)—November 14.—The newspapers report the invention of a "powerless boat," invaluable to its owners and a positive menace in the hands of an enemy. The Secretary of State calls upon a secret service man, Jack Parsons, to ascertain if the boat is the wonder that it is heralded. Tully, a clerk, overhears the conversation between them and sells his information to Baroness Aldax who buys and sells diplomatic secrets. She and a foreign agent agree that Parsons should not be allowed to reach his destination, but Jack recognizes them on the boat and fools them. During the trip Jack has fallen in love with Marie Von Glahn, and on landing he meets her father. Parsons, himself an electrical expert, plans the destruction of this wonderful boat. He sees the boat leave shore, throws a switch on his transformer, and, in the battle of science, the boat is rendered a complete wreck. Marie arrives, breathless, and asks his assistance for her father who is in the control station on shore. He accompanies her and discovers that the alien wave that has caused the boat's destruction has also killed its inventor, the father of the girl to whom he has given his heart.

Hunted Down—U. S. FILM CORPORATION—(THREE REELS).—Jack Davis is elected sheriff of Sagamon Center and

Boyle, his rival candidate, determines to get even. Grace, loved by both men, is about to elope with Boyle when his true character is exposed to her and she marries Jack. A year later while the sheriff is at his wife's sick bed, he learns that Boyle and a band of lawless followers are raiding the town. He arrests Boyle, but takes him to the border and sets him free. He returns and finds his wife dead and a new-born daughter left to claim his love. Eighteen years pass and Davis is still sheriff. His daughter, Doris, is the pride of her father's heart. Boyle returns and determines to even his score with Davis through the daughter. He is successful in ruining the girl and she sees but one way out of her plight—self-destruction. Davis is told to find a murderer wanted in another county and the photograph looks familiar, though he cannot place the face. He saves Doris from taking her own life and learns that the man he wants as a murderer is also the man who ruined his child. He sets out to find the man and after a long chase captures him. After he has brought him to the ground with a bullet from his pistol, he finds that it is Boyle. The renegade repents and is taken back to town by the sheriff, where he marries Doris just before he passes away.

World

One of Millions — Dyreda (Four Reels)—November 6.—Gladimer Kubelow, a young soldier, leaves his mother and sweetheart, Maria, when war is declared. The mother realizes what a serious thing it is, but Maria thinks only of the glorious part of it. The girl realizes the horror of it, however, when a neighbor staggers into their home, wounded by the fire of the enemy. He tells of the last he saw of the man both love, when he was shot down on the battlefield. That night, the mother and Maria find Gladimer's dead body. Maria's mind is affected and the mother goes to the doctor, who gives her some medicine, telling her that three drops will bring sleep, but more will bring death. She returns home just as the general of the opposing army demands lodging for the night. Her hatred overcomes her, and she poisons his wine with the medicine which the doctor gave her. The general crawls to the room in which the girl and her lover lie prostrated, and there he expires. The mother crazed by the events which have taken place, touches a torch to the house, and the bodies of all within are cremated, thus bringing out forcibly one of the many horrors of warfare.

The Wishing Ring—Shubert (Five Reels)—November 9.—Giles, son of the Earl of Bateson, is expelled from college, because of his carousals, and arrives at his friend Annesley's rose gardens just as the latter's gardener quits his job, because he has been accused of stealing roses, which were really taken by Sally, daughter of a poor parson. Giles is appointed gardener by Annesley, and the next time Sally attempts to secure a rose, she is caught by him. He is attracted by her and they become friends. One day they visit a gypsy camp, where she is told she will marry a nobleman's son. Giles buys a wishing ring for her. At the party Sally and the parson discover from a letter the earl sent, that Giles is his son, and must earn half a crown before he can return home. They resolve to bring father and son together, but when she attempts to an herb, which will cure the earl's gout, she falls from a cliff and is injured. The earl learns of her injury, and sets out to find her. Other developments lead to the earl eventually giving Giles the half crown which he desired, and which enables him to prove to his father that he is worthy of forgiveness. Sally and Giles are then free to love.

Across The Pacific—Blaney—(Five reels) November 2. When Mr. and Mrs. Escott, enroute to Montana with their little daughter, Elsie, are slain by the Indians, Elsie is found safe and unharmed by Lieutenant Joe Lanier, who is out scouting, and taken to the home of Lanier's mother, where she grows up into a charming and lovable girl, with whom Joe has fallen in love. Bob Stanton, a handsome stranger, visits the city and becomes attached to Elsie, though Joe warns the girl against him. Elsie resents his interference and Joe re-enlists when war is declared with Spain. Elsie later learns that Stanton has deceived her and starts for the Philippines to seek Joe, whom she now knows she loves. En route Willie Live, a war correspondent, assists her in many ways and helps her finally to land disguised as a young volunteer. Joe has been made captain of his company and Stanton, who belongs to the same regiment, is sent through the enemy's lines to defend block house No. 7. Joe's force is besieged and he begs re-enforcements. General Lawton sends Elsie, still disguised as a soldier, with the message that help is coming. After many adventures she and Willie reach the block house and just as the natives are about to wipe out the little band help arrives and the enemy is put to flight.

Miscellaneous

Saving the Colors—Cosmofotofilm—(Three Parts)—Roland, injured in an accident, is taken to a hospital where he meets, falls in love with, and marries Ruth Williams, his nurse. Ruth, later, installed in Roland's aristocratic home is overwhelmed by her surroundings and a quarrel results between the husband and wife. The declaration of war against Germany gives opportunity for many graphic war scenes and Ruth goes to the front as a nurse. Roland, awakening from a spree, answers his country's call and is sent to Belgium where in the battle of Mons he rescues his country's flag from capture and becomes a hero. The picture finishes with Ruth and Roland united.

The Mystery of Mr. Marks—Hepworth—(Three Reels).—Mr. Marks is a suitor for the hand of Isabell Denton, whose father is indebted to Marks for a large sum. Gerald Lee is also in love with Isabell. At a house party given by Mr. Denton, Marks and Gerald quarrel. The next morning, Marks is found strangled and Gerald is arrested. It later develops that Mr. Denton is a somnambulist and, following the reading of a book entitled, "The Stranglers", had killed Marks. Denton that night falls off the roof of his home while walking in his sleep. Isabell tells of her discovery and Gerald is released from jail. Picture is well handled and capably acted.

For King and Country—Picture Play House—November 2.—The King of Servia abdicates his throne and a regency is established until the crown prince can succeed him. Prince Francis rebels against the regent, but is crushed at the battle of Zura, and retires to Paris with his beautiful daughter. The crown prince, while completing his studies in Paris, falls in love with Francis' daughter and marries her. Several years later he returns to be crowned, and Princess Sonia wishes to marry him, and when she is repulsed by him she plots his ruin, but through the aid of the regent and other loyal members of the court, who conduct a series of counter plots, his crown is saved, and the young ruler and Francis' daughter ascend the throne together.

Too Late—Orpheum—Four Reels).—Suzanne's father loses his life in defending his country and her mother dies of a broken heart. Suzanne goes to sea and is saved from death in a storm by Prince Leander. They fall in love and when Leander's country becomes engaged in war, he refuses to leave the girl. His father pleads with her to go away and she does. When peace is restored, Leander seeks Suzanne, but when he finds her, she is merely a shadow of her former self and he does not recognize her. Heartbroken he returns to his royal home and has the girl placed in a convent where she finds solace in spiritual consolation.

The Robbers—Cosmofotofilm. — Karl von Moor loves his cousin, Amalia, and is very happy while attending a university. Franz, his brother, blackens his character in his father's eyes and then writes Karl that he has ben disinherited. Karl and several school comrades, who have also met with ill-fortune, become a band of robbers and terrorize the country. Franz, to bet rid of his father, manages to have him imprisoned in a dungeon. Karl visits his home and sees that Franz desires Amalia for himself. Franz tries to poison Karl, but a servant saves the outlaw's life. Karl leaves home and discovers his father, who dies of a broken heart to think that his son was leading such an unwholesome life. Karl leads his followers against his home and Franz, seeing them coming, commits suicide. Amalia is captured and brought before Karl, who is about to leave the band, but his oath forces him to be loyal to his followers. He slays her and then gives himself up to justice.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

American's Drama of the Racetrack

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

IN "Redbird Wins" the American Film Manufacturing Company will, on November 16, offer one of the most realistic race track pictures that this reviewer has ever seen on the screen.

The story begins with the birth of "Redbird" as a colt, and follows the career of this remarkable little steed, up to the moment that she wins the big event at the county fair, making her owner, Colonel James Dinwidty, the richer by one hundred thousand dollars.

A real southern atmosphere prevades the picture, from the moment that you get your first glimpse of "Redbird," as a tiny colt, until the last inch of film slides through the machine showing "Redbird" bedecked with a floral wreath, and Fern Dinwidty, nattily clad in a jockey's uniform, clasped in the arms of Phillip Pierpont, her Tennessee sweetheart.

The director has splendidly worked up to the climax of the race scene, and the spectator feels all the interest and enthusiasm of a real race, as he sees the horses get away in a bunch, with "Redbird" behind, watches them thunder down the stretch, with "Redbird" gaining, make the turn into the stretch, with "Redbird" running neck in neck with the leader, and, finally, thunder under the wire, a winner.

A real race track and a real crowd was used in the making of this picture, and it is accordingly most convincing in every particular. Harry Von Meter, as Colonel James Dinwidty, does a splendid bit of character work. Vivian Rich makes a most charming little jockey, and William Garwood a manly "Phillip Pierpont." Jack Richardson and Reeves Eason have the heavy roles, and after cheating the colonel out of several thousand dollars at poker, reward his southern hospitality by trying to "dope" "Redbird," the night before the race. ter and Perry Banks enact the roles of an old negro mammy and a colored butler, at the Dinwidty home.

As the story runs, Colonel James Dinwidty, father of pretty Fern, is jubilant over the arrival of a new thoroughbred colt, whom Fern names "Redbird." As a result of gambling losses, the colonel finds himself forced to sacrifice, not only the greater portion of his estate, but also all of his thoroughbred racing horses, with the single exception of Redbird, whom he keeps through sentimental reasons.

After Chick Mace and Ray Conners, two low-browed confidence men, swindle him out of several thousand dollars at poker, the colonel is still game enough to display real old fashioned southern hospitality, by asking them to remain as his guests, during the week that they say they are to be in the vicinity.

All but ruined, the colonel decides on one last desperate effort to regain his fortune and borrows ten thousand dollars from Phillip Pierpont, his neighbor and Fern's sweetheart. The colonel bets it all at big odds on Redbird to win, in the big event at the country fair.

Mace and Conners cover the colonel's money and knowing Redbird's chances to win are excellent, they drug the colored jockey and under cover of night, dope Redbird's feed.

Phillip Pierpont learns of the plan in time to prevent the little thorough-bred from eating the doped grain; the next day watches Fern, the colonel's daughter ride "Redbird" to victory, when the colored jockey, still suffering from the effects of the drug, is unable to remain in the saddle.

Following the race the colonel offers Phil Redbird as a present, as interest on the loan, made at the time when the colonel needed money the most, but Phil replies "No! I want the little jockey," so the colonel gladly unites the hands of the young people and gives them his blessing.

"The Ordeal" Passes Chicago Board

Jesse J. Goldburg, secretary of the Life Photo Film Corporation, returned from Chicago with the last five part feature release of the company, where the production was reviewed by the Chicago board of censors. "The Ordeal" was passed without a single cut or elimination, which is considered quite an endorsement of the picture, in view of the known severity of the attitude taken by the Chicago board on motion picture productions.

While in the middle west, Mr. Goldburg disposed of the rights to "The Ordeal" for Illinois, Iowa, Indiana and Nebraska to the Peerless Film Exchange, of Chicago, and for Michigan and Ohio on "The Ordeal" as well as "Capt. Swift," "Northern Lights" and "The Greyhound," prior releases of the Life Photo Film Corporation, to the Famous Stars Film Alliance of Cleveland, Ohio.

"The Little Girl That He Forgot"

Following "Hearts and Flowers," the Cosmos Feature Film Corporation will release "The Little Girl That He Forgot" a photoplay in five parts.

Miss Beulah Poynter will appear in the title role of this, her own play. Incidently it may be mentioned that Miss Poynter has written a novel along the same lines, which will shortly be published. The exact release date for "Hearts and Flowers" will be announced shortly.

Oliver Morosco Enters Film Arena

As a further indication of the remarkable development of the feature film, it is now officially announced that two such prominent theatrical producers as John Cort and Oliver Morosco, under the name of the Oliver Morosco Photo Play Company, have at last entered the film producing field, having just effected an affiliation with Frank A. Garbutt, of Bosworth, Inc. Among the more prominent dramatic triumphs that have been produced by John Cort and Oliver Morosco, which will now be presented to the motion picture public are "Peg O' My Heart," "Bird of Paradise," and "Help Wanted."

A Selig Three-Reel Special

The fourth of the Selig three-reel special features, released through the special feature department of the General Film Company entitled, "The Story of the Blood Red Rose," was shown to exhibitors on Wednesday, November 4 and undoubtedly made a profound impression. Its release date is November 11.

The Selig press department has referred to the story as "The poetry of picture play making" and, so pretty is the tinting of the scenes, and so romantic the story, and so daintily handled the production, that it really deserves the billing. Kathlyn Williams and Wheeler Oakman are the featured players. Miss Williams appears as Godiva, a beautiful peasant girl of the seventeenth century, while Mr. Oakman is Godiva's lover, Paulo, a sturdy huntsman.

The story concerns the meeting of Godiva and the king of Urania. The king, being smitten with Godiva's charms, has Paulo confined in a dungeon of the palace and later has his minions bring Godiva there also. The queen, meanwhile, having learned of the king's new mistress, plots with Sancha, a spy who loves her, to make away with Godiva. Ere she was captured, Godiva had received from a friend, old Hagar, a witch, a powder which would turn her into a rose in case she was ever in danger. When the king drags her down into the slimy dungeons beneath the palace and shows her Paulo in the oubliette, she makes use of the magic powder and a moment later is a beautiful white rose which falls between the iron bars of the grating and into the hands of her waiting lover below.

Later, when Paulo escapes from the dungeon and becomes a wildman of the forest, his only companion is the beautiful fragrant white rose. A year later, after killing the king as he is hunting one day in the forest, Paulo, himself, meets death at the hands of

Director Griffith and His Methods

By W. E. Keefe

D. W. GRIFFITH has been named "The Wizard of Motion Pictures." Among the countless number of men and women who have gone into this relatively new industry, few have made the progress in developing this wonder of the twentieth century reached by Mr. Griffith. He stands out, not only in the development of the art itself, including the technical parts of the industry, but in the development of the players. In the ability to detect latent dramatic talent in all sorts of persons, and then bringing out this talent and developing it along the lines best suited for the natural characteristics of the player involved, Mr. Griffith is almost without a peer. He seems to possess an uncanny intuition in divining natural talent in all sorts of seemingly impossible persons. His judgment is quick and unerring. He requires little time for study in divining the dormant ability "in the rough," so to speak.

D. W. Griffith.

Mere beauty of face or figure seems to be of no consideration whatever, in his judgment. Perhaps no better illustration can be drawn than his experience with Mae Marsh, the Majestic star, considered by motion picture critics to be one of the foremost actresses in silent drama. Two years ago while Mr. Griffith was director at the Biograph, he saw the young woman for the first time. She had followed her older sister to the studio, where the latter was employed.

Mae, who was then but sixteen years old, had been forbidden by her sister to come to the studios. The elder sister felt that Mae possessed no talent. Mae's curiosity to see the stage was too strong, however, and she followed her sister to the plant and made her way to an obscure part of the stage. She was then at what is known as "the awkward age," when the girl begins merging into womanhood. She was very thin and possessed numerous freckles. Her hair was plastered down tight on her head and tied in two pig tails down her back. Her arms and face were badly sunburned.

Mr. Griffith saw this timid girl standing awkwardly in a corner at the studio. No young woman who ever made a success in motion pictures ever appeared to a more decided disadvantage during her initial appearance at a studio stage than did Mae Marsh. Mr. Griffith saw immediately he had made a find, and Miss Marsh became a fixture at the Biograph, though almost every person at the studio ridiculed the idea of her ever becoming an actress.

Other notable instances are Mary Pickford, Robert Harron and Lillian and Dorothy Gish. One quick look at Lillian Gish when she called at the Biograph studios to see her friend, Mary Pickford, was sufficient for Mr. Griffith to know that he had discovered another find. A short time later, when he saw Lillian's younger sister, Dorothy, he perceived that he had found another star. All of these young women owe much of their phenomenal success in motion pictures to Mr. Griffith.

While each stands out foremost as an emotional actress, it was through Mr. Griffith's ability to divine the various shades of emotions best suited to each and developing them along their individual lines, that these young women came to be the popular film stars that they now are.

He perceived that Mae Marsh was phenomenal in intense, emotional roles, and yet a natural mimic. He coached and developed her along both lines. In Lillian Gish, Mr. Griffith saw that he had found a girl who, for natural poise of manner and power of expression, was probably without an equal. He perceived further that although she was wonderfully adapted to dramatic roles, she was entirely unsuited to comedy roles.

Lillian's sister, Dorothy, presented a slightly different problem. While also an adept in portraying deep, emotional feelings, she was equally versatile in depicting a mixture of dramatic and comedy roles. Mr. Griffith here demonstrated his rare ability to differentiate between the various shades of emotional acting possessed by each of the young women. He saw the different natural characteristics possessed by each and developed their individual abilities along the lines to bring out the best that was in them. The same holds true in regard to Robert Harron, who started to work for the Biograph Company as a messenger boy at $3.00 a week, while Mr. Griffith was connected with this organization. A few days after Harron went to work with the Biograph, he delivered a note to Mr. Griffith while the latter was directing a company on the studio stage. Mr. Griffith needed but a glance to assure him that here was some excellent raw material. Harron was engaged immediately to play small parts. Although to an outsider he was the poorest subject imaginable to develop the art of being an actor, he soon proved himself one of the most capable players appearing on the screen.

Mr. Griffith's players love him. He is kind and considerate to all. The novice and extra players in his company receive the same courteous treatment and attention that are accorded the principals. While frank and considerate to his subordinates, he brooks no familiarity. The extra player, while knowing that he or she will receive courteous treatment at the hands of Mr. Griffith, know that there is a certain line beyond which they must not go with this blue-eyed genius.

Mr. Griffith is never averse to receiving a suggestion from the members of his company; in fact, he encourages them in the practice. His success in handling players is phenomenal. He can take a cast of players, half of whom have some sort of a petty feud and grievance against each other, and in no time have them working harmoniously together, as if they had always been the best of friends. This is no small task when it is taken into consideration that actors and actresses are the most temperamental men and women in existence.

How Long Will Projector Last?

The question has been asked—"How long will a motion picture machine last and give good service under present day requirements?"

At a dinner party a couple of years ago, one of the prominent manufacturers expressed the opinion that the average life of a motion picture machine is about two years, but it seems that all manufacturers do not agree on this point.

In December 1907, the Colonial theater, of Kalamazoo, Michigan, then under the management of W. H. Johnson, purchased the first Motiograph machine that was turned out by the Enteprise Optical Manufacturing Company. After having been in continuous use during seven years, the factory has the following letter from the present owner of the machine:

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co.

I would advise that the machine in question is in very good condition and the results obtained with it are very satisfactory.

Yours truly,
H. H. B.

Some time later, the manufacturers offered within $75.00 of the original cost of the machine, to be allowed as a credit on a new machine, but the offer was rejected. One might judge from this that the machine is giving as good results as a new machine.

Edison Launches New Series

Reviewed By Charles R. Condon

LIFE ceases to be an endless monotony of events for the wealthy Lord Stranleigh in "The King's Move in the City" when he meets the charming Lady Sinclair, who offsets his first proposal of marriage with the smiling statement that he is not eligible as her husband, having never accomplished any real good in the world, and being only the pilot of a vast fortune left him by his ancestors. Goaded by this true but spicy piece of news, Stranleigh arouses himself from the bored atmosphere of the artificial world in which he has been living and determines to win Lady Sinclair's admiration and love.

The chivalrous manner in which this is accomplished is graphically pictured in the two-reel Edison release of November 27, which is the first of the "Adventures of Young Lord Stranleigh." Its title, "The King's Move in the City," is taken from a plan suggested to Stranleigh's mind by reading the manner in which a king of long ago distributed his forces in besieging a town. The series, which embraces four two-reel subjects, is the screen adaptation of the stories by Robert Barr which appeared in the National Sunday Magazine.

Charles J. Brabin is directing the series, and Marc MacDermott and Miriam Nesbitt are featured in it, the former in the title role and the latter as Lady Sinclair. It is hardly necessary to mention the marked and proven ability of these two stars who played the principal parts in "The Man Who Disappeared" series, and have become endeared to thousands of enthusiasts in this and other Edison pictures. The new series, if anything, affords them a much larger field for their versatility and offers splendid opportunities for playing refined, dignified parts where strength depends upon their own personality.

In addition to, or rather as the result of, its careful direction and well characterized roles, the picture is realistically staged and admirably photographed. Two of the scenes are unusual for a program release. One of them is the stock exchange scene in which hundreds of men are seen dashing back and forth, not aimlessly, but with all the appearances of transacting business. The other is the street scene in front of the burning factory. An overhead view shows the upturned faces of a gesticulating and excited throng watching the thrilling rescue from the top floor of the building.

Lord Stranleigh meets Lady Sinclair at a reception and so greatly does he admire her that he proposes before the end of the function. To his surprise he is told that the man who marries her must have the performance of some noble deed to his credit, and that he, therefore, is not qualified. Stranleigh obtains permission to accompany Lady Sinclair home. On the way they pass a blazing building, in the upper story of which are two girls calling for help. By offering a large reward Stranleigh persuades two men to risk their lives in effecting their rescue. Then he turns to his companion to be praised for his noble deed, but instead he meets the discouraging statement that he has as yet done nothing but demonstrate the power of his fortune.

Nonplussed, but inwardly pleased, at this charming woman's utter disregard for his name and position in considering his merits, Stranleigh determines to command her admiration by some achievement. Shortly afterwards the opportunity is presented to him, and he is quick to grasp it. The brokerage firm of MacKeller and Son, tottering on the verge of ruin, due to the crooked work of a ring of promoters, is advised to appeal to the eccentric but sharp-witted and good-hearted Stranleigh for help. Peter MacKeller finds his lordship at his club, indolently sprawled in an arm-chair and absorbed in the operation of polishing his monocle.

He succeeds in gaining Stranleigh's interest and subsequently his promise of assistance. That night, while reading, Stranleigh comes upon an account of how a king of former years completely demolished his enemy's forces in a battle by dividing his army into twenty different commands and making a simultaneous attack from as many different directions. The idea appeals to Stranleigh as being applicable to the MacKeller case and the next day he instructs twenty brokers in his plan.

The result is that the MacKeller stock not only regains its par value, but soars above it. When Stranleigh relates the case to Lady Sinclair, she pronounces it as a noble deed and consents to his proposal.

Lasky Releases "Ready Money"

The tide of hard luck is turned in "Ready Money" when Edward Abeles, as Steve Baird, realizes that financial drain only occurs when a man's bank account appears shaky, and that the man who has money does not have to spend it, but simply show it. When Steve tries to sell mining stock on honest representation he totters on the edge of bankruptcy, but when he is seen with a handful money, counterfeit money at that, he sells $25,000 worth of stock without his company even being subjected to an investigation.

Steve doesn't want to take either the counterfeit money or his friends', but both were thrust upon him. For a time he is in danger of being sent to prison for having counterfeit bills found upon his person, but this danger fades away when he is caught and searched and the detectives fail to recognize it as fake money. His inquiry to the stranger who gave it to him is met with "Good? It's the best I ever made."

The picture is in five reels, and was the Paramount release of November 5. Supporting Mr. Abeles are Bessie Barriscale, Florence Dagmar, Theodore Roberts, James Neil, Dick Le Reno, and a number of others whose faces are familiar in other Lasky productions. The photography is of distinctly Lasky quality, and the scenes are well made and chosen and are suggestive of their location in the story, whether it be the mining district of California or residence interiors in New York City. One interior scene is a masterpiece in its particular class. It is the cafe scene on New Year's eve, with an electric sign in the background flashing 1915. The scene is both broad and deep, and fairly alive with gay parties welcoming the new year.

What She Thinks of Films

Although Mabel Taliaferro is soon to be seen in the photoplay "The Three of Us," an Alco release, she is not one of the actresses who believe that all other forms of amusement except moving pictures will disappear. Yet she has great respect for the moving picture drama. "I never realized," she said, "how big a thing picture acting could become until I began to rehearse. I never learned so much in my life as I did during those first rehearsals. But eventually, I think that the screen drama will greatly improve. Nothing will be presented in the moving picture theaters except big features with well-known stars. The small screen picture is going out of fashion. All the successful moving picture productions of the future will be big affairs. The screen drama affords such splendid opportunity for the mob element and the public is quick to realize this. But the regular drama will not disappear, nor will the other forms of amusement. We have drama, vaudeville, circus and various forms of opera as well as musical pieces. The moving picture drama is simply a new amusement, a new form of dramatic art added to them."

Mabel Taliaferro.

"Mina" Is New Horsley Brand

Roy L. McCardell, the humorist, is richer today by $250 through winning the prize offered by David Horsley to the person suggesting the best name for the new brand of comedies which Mr. Horsley is producing at his big Centaur studios at Bayonne, N. J. Mr. McCardell suggested the name "Mina," the component letters of which stand for "Made in America." More than 800 suggestions were received, a preponderance of which came from exhibitors, but the list included prominent people in every department of the motion picture industry, and such literary lights as Harold MacGrath, the author, and Frederick Chapin, the playwright.

A Thrilling Eclectic Feature

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

A SMASHING climax surmounts a long series of exciting events, realistic scenes, and tense situations in the four-reel Pathe feature, "The Taint." The climax is smashing in more ways than one. It is so in a figurative sense, by forming a strong enough ending to give the story a forceful punch, and is also so in a literal sense, as is proven by the wreckage of the wild locomotive which was its vehicle.

One obtains a splendid view of the destruction of the uncontrollable engine, the camera being stationed beside the tracks, and but a few feet from the point of derailment. In fact, so close to the tracks were the director and cameraman when the engine rushed over the embankment that they narrowly escaped being buried beneath the iron mass.

Ruby Hoffman has a most difficult part as Vera Knight, the pretty country girl whose confidence is abused by Jose; who is unjustly sentenced to prison; and who, on being appointed to the secret service bureau, is assigned the task of securing evidence against her own son. Edward Jose as Paul Chilton, and Creighton Hale as Walter do convincing work in their parts, as do the remainder of the cast in their less advantageous roles. Of those supporting the leading characters the most prominent are Miss Francis as Madam Bartlett, M. O. Penn as Warcourt, Louis Hendricks as Senator Bristow, and Sam Ryan as Warden Turner. A better collection of artists is seldom seen in one picture.

Vera Knight secures a position as assistant to the eminent biologist, Madam Bartlett and in her laboratory makes the acquaintance of her accountant, Paul Chilton. Though fearing him, Vera is drawn to Chilton as a moth is to flame, and later pays the penalty. He pays no attention to her entreaties, and the disgraced girl asks for a vacation and returns to the farm.

When Vera returns and begs Chilton to marry her and insure her boy's birthright, he refuses. Madam Bartlett hears her plea, and threatens the man with exposure if he fails to keep his word to Vera. He consents, for the time being, but determines to secure the incriminating evidence against him, and make his escape. He makes the attempt that night, and is surprised by Madam Bartlett. Vera hears the sounds of the struggle, hurries downstairs, and there finds the dead body of the biologist, and near it a revolver. This she picks up. The servants burst into the room,

Just before the derailment in Eclectic's "The Taint" see Vera with the revolver, and accuse her of the crime. Their evidence is upheld in court, and Vera is sentenced to life imprisonment.

During the years that follow, her boy, Walter, is raised in ignorance of his real parents, thinking himself the farmer's son. He is successful in business, and becomes engaged to the daughter of Senator Bristow. About this time Vera frustrates a planned "jail break" and her sentence is repealed as a reward. Returning to the farm she learns the news of her son's success and engagement. She becomes a member of the secret service bureau, and a short time afterwards is assigned to the task of running down the foreign agent who has been reported as trying to steal the plans of the government's fortifications from Senator Bristow.

The "foreign agent" is none other than Chilton. Walter's love of gambling leads him into his father's net, though the latter does not know his identity, and to extricate himself from his financial troubles the boy agrees to do the man's bidding. At the last moment his conscience exerts its influence upon him, and he backs out. Chilton takes the work into his own hands, shoots the senator, and secures the plans. Vera remembers that in cases of violent death the retina of the eye often retains the visage last seen, and has Bristow's eye photographed. The result is a picture of her own son.

Mother-love overcomes her scruples and she destroys the tell-tale film. Then with a party of secret service men she takes up the case of Chilton who, abandoning his auto, has taken possesion of a railway engine. With the throttle wide open he fairly flies along the rails until he reaches a spot where the track is torn up. The engine plunges down the embankment, and Chilton is buried beneath the iron debris. Vera then informs Walter of his relation to the dead man. Anger and repulsion are followed by forgiveness in the boy's mind, and he embraces his mother.

Tenth "Lord Cecil"

"Lord Cecil Keeps His Word" is the tenth episode in the interesting series that the Lubin Company is releasing weekly. In it the Beloved Adventurer gets another set back, but immediately recoups his love affair with Betty and his fortune is permanently established. The followers of the exciting story will be delighted to see that virtue is duly rewarded and the mutual enemy is beautifully beaten at his own game. Betty's love is so strong that she throws aside the conventional and really proposes that she may become Lady Cecil. The worthy couple hasten to Gretna Green, over the Scottish border, and return to spend a delightful honeymoon at Croftleigh Manor. There are five more episodes of the series to be released, all of which are said to be intensely dramatic and to prove Lord Cecil well worthy of the sobriquet "The Beloved Adventurer."

Olga Petrova for "Pics"

Popular Plays & Players, Inc., announces that its December release will be Madame Olga Petrova, the noted Russian-Polish actress now touring the country in "Panthea." Madame Petrova will appear on the screen in "The Tigress," a photo dramatization of Ramsay Morris' legitimate play of the same name. Mr. Morris' play was based upon his novel "The Tigress." In the legitimate "The Tigress" had a long run.

Earns Her Salary

Beatriz Michelena, the star in the photo-drama of "Salomy Jane," is a real athlete. She has to be to fill her role in the scenario of the California pioneer-day play, of which she is the star. They have made her do all sorts of things. She has to race up and down a mountain road several times at top speed. She has to leap through a tangled field, over broken fences and brambles. She has to hop nimbly down a rocky creek-bed with a chance of a sprained ankle at every leap. She has to ride horseback, and, later, ride double in a breakneck race down a rocky road and over a field in a mad escape from pursurers. While fully clad she has to swim a river, clinging to a log for protection from her enemies.

The gamut of "stunts" required of Miss Michelena would test the nerve and strength of a circus performer. This versatile actress, trained for the grand opera stage and not for pantomine, certainly not for strenuous athletic feats, has demonstrated in this one photo-play alone that she has astounding qualities of stamina and courage,—for the things which she is called on to do and does without blinking make her rank with the most advanced type of "outdoor girl."

Lewis Completes "The Thief"

Edgar Lewis as director for the Box Office Attraction Company, has completed his screen production of "The Thief," which is in five parts. The picture is said to be one of the best reproduced from a famous play. Mr. Lewis is now preparing to present a film version of "Samson," another well known drama by Henri Bernstein, author of "The Thief." Mr. Lewis is a believer in stunts of magnitude and the Box Office Attraction Company is giving him a free rein in every particular.

Rex Players Return to Studio

Brown as berries the Rex (Universal) company under the direction of Joseph DeGrasse, has returned to the Hollywood, Cal. studio from the heart of the Sierras on the Angeles National Forest, where they have been camping for the past two weeks, staging "The Lion, the Lamb and the Man" and "An Idyl of the Hills," two stories of the Kentucky mountains.

So well balanced is the entire cast of both productions that it is next to impossible to praise one more than another. Lon Chaney, whose reputation as a character portrayer is well known, has never done better work. Laura Oakley, Millard K. Wilson and Tom Forman in their respective roles, as products of the mountains also carry their parts well. Miss

Pathe Planning New Selling Campaign

To Share Profits

THE house of Pathe is to be one of the publishing interests with the novel distinction that the works to be published are films, rather than books. Nevertheless, the house is to be known as that of Pathe, publisher, and the head of this house claims that whatever shall be offered to the exhibitor for purchase, shall bear the bona fide mark of Pathe approval. For the house shall offer none but the best; it is quality first and quantity afterward, though the road will be made so easy for those having films for disposal, that with quality assured, the quantity will follow.

Charles Pathé.

Once a film will have been accepted by the firm of Pathe, publishers, the latter assumes all responsibility for its life thereafter. And it will be to the interest of the Pathe house to make that life as long, glorious and satisfactory a one as possible.

The following is Charles Pathe's direct statement given to the motion picture press in a recent interview at the Pathe studio at Jersey City Heights. Hedley M. Smith, vice-president of the Pathe Company served as interpreter and the occasion was that of the following announcement:

"It was necessary for me, after my arrival, to take a few days to study the general conditions of the American cinematograph market since our situation is altogether different from what it was previously, when we were marketing our films through the General Film Company—and on this account I have to adopt a new scheme.

"I have come over here for a long stay—which will certainly extend to many months—perhaps a year, perhaps longer.

"I shall see all the producers of films who desire to discuss my new combination with me and, more than that, I shall, most of the time, inspect all the negatives that are offered to my company.

"It is my desire to group around me here, in the same manner as I have done in Europe, a number of the most intelligent producers of America who will be stimulated to make the best pictures and earn the most money.

"Since your visit gives me the opportunity to make the request, will you please tell all those who are unaware of our importance in the cinematograph industry and who may have been influenced by newspapers and other false rumors, that Pathe is not closing his business—that he will never close, so that those of his competitors or others who have desired such a result, will know and feel that we are still very much in the field.

"In view of the successive transformations in the cinematograph business its adaptation to the theater will soon be completed. I esteem that the programmes will be, in a near future, composed solely of features and "information" of the style of the Pathe News.

"Producers who heretofore have made it a rule to try to produce a film every week will soon learn that their idea is as false as would be the idea of a dramatic author who tried to produce half a dozen plays for the theater in a year. Three or four films in such a period, properly studied first from the point of view of the scenario, then carefully handled in the execution, such is the programme that must be followed in the future by the producer who wishes really to earn big money.

"The receipts from such productions, in the way I offer, will satisfy the reputation and the interests of the most ambitious film producer in the world.

"Let me mention, in proof of this argument, the case of the celebrated Max Linder—whose films I have no need to offer for sale today as they are always ordered in advance by my regular customers. As an employe in my studios, Max Linder earned 40,000 francs a year; as producer, through my present combination, he earns ten times that sum. Surely $80,000 a year is a prize worth striving for by the most ambitious, is it not?

"My scheme is indeed a simple one; it is, as a matter of fact, nothing more, nothing less than that which exists in regard to the stage and the publishing business, with this difference, that instead of giving a producer of films a disputable and uncertain percentage of the profits arising from his productions, he will receive from us exactly 50 per cent of the net proceeds from his film."

But the Pathe house will not endeavor to supply complete programs, for the reason that its belief is that no one program can offer sufficient variety to make it a worthy one. For no matter how good the product, there is always somebody else who has something good to offer. And the Pathe house further believes that it is the duty of the exhibitor to make his program a choice of all of the best. An open market, believes Mr. Pathe, is the future of the industry.

The subject of the Pathe manufacture and sale of non-inflammable film was touched upon and Mr. Smith, who has but come from the continent with Mr. Pathe, declared their use over there to be general in many portions of Europe and that a definite date is in sight when the use of non-inflammable film, in other portions, will be compulsory. He declared its use to be much greater in this country than formerly, though no campaign for its use here has been made since the film has become the practical one that it is now claimed to be.

The Canadian market is to be given the minute Pathe attention and altogether, the outlook for the publishing house of Pathe, in its various branches, is a wonderfully bright one.

Booking Offices Cover Country

The K. C. Booking Co., Incorporated, has closed contracts with enough big independent exchanges to cover the entire country with its exclusive programme, which now includes the releases of the Kinetophote Corporation and other features which have been obtained from independent producers.

In New England, the K. C. will book through the American Feature Film Co., of 162 Tremont street, Boston; the Eastern Booking Offices with branches in Pittsburg and Cleveland, will take the K. C. offerings in every instance. The Eastern head office at 1237 Vine street, Philadelphia, will book for Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Virginia, Delaware, and the District of Columbia. The Pittsburgh branch of the Eastern Company, 432 Wabash building, will take care of Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. The Eastern company's Cleveland branch, 218 Columbia building, will handle the K. C. films for the entire state of Ohio, and the K. C. is opening a branch office in Chicago to see that the product is properly handled in Illinois and Wisconsin.

In the South, the Atlantic Service Co., of Atlanta, Ga., will look after the K. C. interests in Georgia, Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina and Florida. The offices are to be situated in Atlanta, Georgia.

The far west and coast territory will be covered by the service of the California Film Service Corporation with offices in San Francisco. This company will distribute in California, Oregon, Washington, New Mexico, Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado, Nevada, Arizona and Utah. The California Corporation has opened a branch in Salt Lake City, Portland Ore., Seattle, Wash., Denver, Colo., and Los Angeles, Cal.

As announced last week, the K. C. has signed contracts with the Dallas Film Co., of Dallas, Texas, to take over the booking of features for Texas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, and Arkansas and the K. C. headquarters at 126 West 46th street will be the distributing center for New York State and Northern New Jersey.

Correction

Through error, the title of the Warners Features, Inc., review appearing on page 658 of our issue dated November 14, was "The Lost Chord" instead of "The Last Chord," which is its correct title.

Kerrigan Married—No, Not Jack

By outwitting an auto loaded with a gang of wild, hilarious, shouting desperadoes, bent on kidnapping them, Wallace Kerrigan, superintendent of the Universal ranch, and his bride of but a few hours, recently proved that romance and adventure are not all for the motion picture player. Some of it falls to the lot of the ordinary mortal.

Running away from their host of friends in Los Angeles, Mr. Kerrigan, (who by the way is Jack Kerrigan's twin brother) and Nina Richdale, popular member of Santa Barbara exclusive set, made a flying trip to Santa Barbara, where they were married secretly (or so they fondly supposed).

The news, however, leaked out some way and a crowd of their friends, newspapermen, photoplayers and the like from Santa Barbara hurried to the station to capture them as they were leaving, and carry them off, to pay the penalty of having attempted so rash a thing as a secret marriage.

A Film Rogues' Gallery

A rogues' gallery in moving pictures! That is what may result from the offer made to Police Commissioner Arthur H. Woods of New York, by the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial.

Police authorities of the world have had under consideration the plan to make motion pictures of convicted criminals for identification purposes, it being believed that such a record would show much more clearly the individualities and characteristics of a criminal than the ordinary still photography. The Hearst-Selig News Pictorial has offered to send two of its camera men into police headquarters to make moving pictures of "the line-up" of alleged crooks as an experiment, and Commissioner Woods has the matter under consideration. The experiment would be without cost to the city of New York.

Life Photo to California

San Diego, California, is the location decided upon by the Life-Photo Film Corporation for the establishment of a western studio. Life-Photo is another of the allies who release through Alco. The California scenery offers great variety which appeals to the officials of the producing organization. It is entirely possible, they say, to have forests, rivers, flat lands and deserts, prairies (at least moving picture prairies) within easy reach of the central plant. At the same time there is, of course, no restriction on the production in California of modern interiors. Jesse J. Goldburg, secretary of Life-Photo, and Leonard Abrahams, vice-president, are arranging their business affairs so that they can get away in a few days.

New York War Benefits

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York, comprising almost every motion picture theater in the city, in conjunction with the War Children's Christmas Fund, of which Mrs. John Hays Hammond is national chairman, and Miss Mary Garret Hay is secretary, will give special performances in the various theaters of New York to assist in the collection of gifts for the war stricken children of Europe. It is estimated that the proceeds of these benefits will make five thousand children in Europe happy on Christmas morn.

Essanay's "Scars of Possession"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

SPLENDID and lavish stage settings, odd lighting effects and capable acting by all the members of the cast, make Essanay's two-reel feature "Scars of Possession," the release of November 27, a decidedly worth while feature offering.

The whole theme of the picture centers about a transfusion of blood operation, performed in a city hospital, with neither party of the operation knowing the identity of the other. Francis X. Bushman is featured in the role of Payne Forsythe, the pauppered millionaire, and Beverly Bayne is seen to advantage as Louise, the sister of young J. Dukes Courtwright.

The transfusion of blood operation.

The hospital scenes are worthy of particular mention, since they are exceedingly convincing and careful as to detail, and one is unconsciously impressed by the fidelity to realism in this particular portion of the picture. It is rarely, also, that one sees more lavish stage settings than are seen in the last portion of the second reel, after Forsythe once more regains his fortune and, later still, when he visits at the home of the Courtwrights.

The story opens when Payne Forsythe, just left alone in the world by the death of his father, learns that instead of being the heir to millions, as he supposed, his father was on the verge of bankruptcy, through wild stock speculations. Forsythe in an effort to regain his fortune on the stock market, loses what little remains of his own funds, and then leaves town, vowing never to return.

A year later Forsythe wanders back to the old home, and while dressed in the remnants of his one decent suit, and sitting idly on a park bench, he notices a personal ad in a newspaper he finds on the bench, calling for the services of some young man, willing to give part of his life's blood, that a patient in one of the city hospitals may be saved, through the operation known as the transfusion of blood.

On account of his good health, Payne is selected at the hospital, from a number of applicants, as the man needed for a successful operation, and a few hours later, is wheeled into the operating room, to give up his blood for a girl, whom he is not permitted to see; for the hospital superintendent explains, that on account of the wealth and modesty of the other party to the operation, the name of the patient will not be disclosed, and the operation itself is performed through a screen, set up between the two cots, in which a hole has been cut so that the two arms may be bound together.

Following a successful operation, Forsythe leaves the hospital with a gnawing desire to know the identity of the girl whose life he saved, but the hospital superintendent still refuses to disclose her identity.

Meeting an old friend on the street, Forsythe obtains work in the stock exchange, and three years later is made a partner in the business. His fortune once more on the mend, Forsythe renews acquaintance with the wealthy Courtwrights, whom he had known before his father's death and, with the passing of time, realizes that he loves Louise Courtwright.

his society, his love affair moves very slowly, and Louise rejects his proposal time and again, though she will not explain the reason for her "no" while admitting that there is a reason.

Eventually Forsythe pins her down to a more detailed statement and is amazed to have her reply that she feels that she owes her life to a young man who gave up his life's blood, that she might live. Then baring her wrist, she displays the scar made the year before in the hospital, at the time the transfusion of blood operation was performed.

With a glad cry, Forsythe clasps her in his arms and explains that he was the young man to whom she feels she owes her life. He proves his case by turning back his shirt sleeve and displaying a similar scar on his forearm. A moment later, when her brother J. Dukes Courtwright, parts the portieres, and looks into the room, he beholds Louise clasped in the arms of her lover.

Universal's Feature Offices

Because he believes that big feature films such as "Damon and Pythias," "Neptune's Daughter," "Traffic in Souls," etc., must be handled like the largest legitimate attractions, President Carl Laemmle has instituted the Universal booking offices, its purpose being to take charge of all features of five-reels or over. From these offices, booking will be arranged, advance men will be sent out, advertising campaigns will be attended to and everything will be done on a par with the greatest Broadway success.

The first production to be released from the new booking offices will be the six-reel masterpiece, "Damon and Pythias." Probably among all former features produced by this concern, none stands out as artistically and wonderfully realistic as this picture. At the $1,000,000 Universal City in California, Mr. Otis Turner, known as the genius of the films, carefully mapped and planned the direction of the massive production. Whole cities were built, Grecian gardens were constructed, crude stone chiseled into statuary, the magnificent baths of the ancient Grecians were duplicated and everything done to create proper atmosphere. The leading parts were given to Cleo Madison, Anna Little, Henry Worthington, Herbert Rawlinson and Frank Lloyd, to support them.

Warners "Everyman"

Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude, the stars of "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray," are now being featured in another release of Warners Features, Inc., entitled "Everyman." It is in two reels, and is an allegorical subject picturizing the disappointments met with by Everyman in his quest of a companion to answer with him the call of Death. Everyman is a character representing the type of young man who lives with no thought of a hereafter, and no object in life other than to partake of life's pleasures.

One day the reckless young fellow is summoned to appear before his Maker to account for his deeds. The messenger grants his request to take a friend with him, and he sets off in search of one. He visits the various pleasures to whom he has paid tribute during his life, but among them he can not find a former boon companion who is willing to prove himself a real friend, by passing with him into the hereafter. Disheartened by the results of his search thus far, and sincerely repenting the years of jovial emptiness which represent his past life Everyman pays his first visit to Piety with his appeal. His plea is heard, and, accompanied by the angel of Piety, he ascends to the Fnal Judgment.

Constance Crawley impersonates Everyman, and Arthur Maude is seen as the stoic messenger of Death. The various pleasures and virtues are symbolized by groups of characters of the type that are associated with them in real life. C.R.C.

Some Wonderful Interiors

Some of the richest interior settings ever constructed for a motion picture production were built by Carlyle Blackwell for his five-part pictorial version of Richard Harding Davis' famous racing story, "The Man Who Could Not Lose." The decorations and furniture used in this production were loaned to Mr. Blackwell by members of the millionaire colony of Los Angeles.

THE TELEPHONE IN THE PICTURES.

IN the dramatic reproduction of social and business episodes the telephone frequently plays an important part. So it is not at all unusual to find that instrument an important "property," perhaps used several times in the course of a single reel of pictures.

But the property man in a moving picture studio must keep in stock a thousand and one articles—or more nearly ten thousand and one. He would be guilty of little exaggeration if, when asked to list his material, he wrote the one word, "Everything." So, perhaps it is hard to blame him for confining his telephone equipment to a single "common-battery" desk set. As a result, when the miner in a western prairie shack calls up his sheriff to tell him the outlaw has just ridden past, he uses a modern "common-battery" desk outfit, such as is used only in our larger towns. The photoplay farmers, of course, all enjoy the same sort of service.

It is noticeable, too, that the telephone appears in a picture household only when it is used in the plot of the story. The producer of the picture knows that all offices have telephones, and so we find the ubiquitous desk set in evidence on any office desk or table that happens to be serving the hero or villain. But in the home scene, however luxurious or squalid the furnishings, there is no telephone, desk or otherwise, unless the plot calls for it.

And when the plot does call for it—what wonderful service the photoplay actor is able to call forth! He lifts the receiver and presto! he is talking to the right number. A few frantic lip movements and he hangs up. The operator, not having any part in the play, is quite naturally omitted from the action, thereby saving several feet of film.

Far be it from us to add to the already torturous burdens of the motion picture producer and his property man. Besides, no doubt other technically precise industries besides that of the telephone might find opportunity to make carping criticism if they so desired. But the particular producer might well add one "magneto" wall set to his props, to use the desk set he already has in a few more promiscuous scenes, and to give the operator a chance to answer the impatient hero.

PICTURE INACCURACIES.

ONLY a few years ago a great many otherwise excellent pictures revealed, to the careful observer, small and sometimes ludicrous errors that went far to spoil the good effect of the producer's work Most of these inaccuracies took the form of minor anachronisms. A pair of suspenders or a sweater jacket on just one of a supposedly medieval crew; an automatic repeating rifle in a Revolutionary war scene; electric light fixtures in historic interiors; these are just a few of the possibilities of slip in period properties. And there are just as many small chances for error in action. Starting a rowboat by pushing on bottom with an oar, when a drowning has just been enacted on the same spot; the "drownee" rescued and shown with dry clothing; any change in the details of clothing, such as gloves, shoes, tie, etc., when the action shows that no change was possible; neglect to change these same details of clothing when the actions shows a lapse of weeks, months or years; the time shown on clock faces in the picture; discrepancies between close-up scenes and the corresponding action; these afford plenty of opportunity for the trying of producers' souls.

There has been a tremendous improvement in this respect. Most of the little errors have been eliminated; and big errors there never were. Yet a humorist in a Chicago daily paper, commented the other day on the mysterious appearance of a limousine motor car in the background of a picture of the Dickens period. The faults are not all dead yet.

It is difficult to take any large outdoor scenes today, of course, and avoid the intrusion of some modern work in the distance. The face of the earth is pretty well covered with telegraph poles and wires, railroad lines, wire fences, machine cultivated fields, grain elevators, automobiles, steel bridges, and other evidences of modern civilization, with which we are so familiar that we are apt to overlook their incongruity in a historical drama. But that only argues for extra care and watchfulness on the part of the producer.

It is a common fault to underestimate the powers of observation of the people. We are often tempted to say "Oh, they will never notice that." But they do notice it, and comment upon it, to the disparagement of pictures in general.

The gallery gods of the legitimate theater have learned to look tolerantly, from their bird's-eye vantage point, into the empty punch bowl of the stage banquet. But somehow they expect more from the pictures—which only goes to show that they really have a higher respect for the pictures. And be it said to the credit of the producer that the picture punch bowl never is empty. What anachronisms and incongruities creep into the films are there because they were overlooked amid a mass of petty detail. Seldom indeed can they be charged purely to slipshod practice. They only indicate that the production of pictures is an art of a myriad responsibilities, and those succeed in it whose mental alertness lets no item escape, however infinitesimal.

TO AID THE BELGIANS

Under the auspices of their excellencies L. de Sadeleer, minister of state for Belgium; Emanuel Havenith, Belgian minister to the United States; Hon. Pierre Mali, Belgian consul general in New York; the Belgian relief committee, and with the co-operation of the committee of mercy, a performance will be given at the Strand theater, New York city on the afternoon of Tuesday, December 8. The theater has been generously donated and many prominent members of the theatrical profession have volunteered to contribute their services in a unique and all-star performance. There will be no incidental expenses whatever, so that the entire proceeds from the sale of tickets will be turned over to the Belgian Relief Fund. Mrs. August Belmont is the chairman of the committee on arrangements.

WATCH FOR "COLLEGE WIDOW"

The Lubin company is now staging a big production of George Ade's, "The College Widow," which will feature Ethel Clayton and George Soule Spencer. Extremely interesting will be the football game played with all the vigor of the real battle between rival colleges. Many expert players have been engaged for the tilt, who will permit themselves to be gouged and done up in realistic style.

But wait—we'll let the enraptured reporter tell the story in his own fashion:

A Times-Tribune reporter had the rare privilege of meeting her yesterday afternoon. He had peviously seen her in the films; he had seen her on the stage. But not until he met and talked with her did he realize the rich beauty of her face and hair and eyes, the symmetry of her splendid figure, the softness of her voice or—and more than all else, —the genuine womanly feelings and emotions that are hers. Beautiful blue eyes, she has, as blue and as changeless as Colorado sky. Her hair is golden as a harvest field in October, her teeth are white as the pearl that shines in the bosom of a shell peering up at you from the ocean's depth, and ber face is as fair as a day in June, and as full of grace and charm as the face one sees in dreams, perfect her features, her eyes, her lips, her hair, but even these would not complete the magnetism of her charms were it not for her dimples.

WHY HE CANCELLED HIS BOOKING.

C. J. VerH., who recently returned from "that dear Milwaukee," tells this one of an exhibitor who had arranged a booking on "The Battle of the Sexes:" He visited a downtown house, where the film was being shown, to give it the "O. O." before beginning his advertising, and after seeing the entire show run off, donned his hat and coat and made for the exit. In the doorway he hesitated a moment and then slowly made his way back to his seat. The show began again, and he stuck until it was half over, and then once more made for the exit. Again he paused, once more turned back and resumed his seat. This time he remained until he had seen the whole picture run off again and then, highly indignant, journeyed over to the exchange. "Cancel me that film," he growled. "I don't vant it now. I vudn't take it under any gonzideration. By golly, you gan't vool der peepul. First Episode of "Zudora"

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

"THE Mystic Message of the Spotted Collar," the first two-reel episode of "Zudora," the serial photoplay which will follow "The Million Dollar Mystery," will be released by the Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation on Monday, November 23, and judging from the early incidents it is due to become even more popular than its predecessor. Marguerite Snow and James Cruze, who were Countess Olga and Jim Norton in the first mystery serial, appear as Zudora and Hassan Ali respectively, and Harry Benham, the popular Thanhouser leading man, enacts the role of John Storm, Zudora's lover.

Daniel Carson Goodman is the author of the scenario and Harold MacGrath will novelize the story for practically the same string of newspapers that used "The Million Dollar Mystery." Much care has been exercised by the director in selecting oriental furnishings for the home of Hassan Ali and the suggestion of the mysterious far East is excellently carried. A crystal globe, mystic room and strange revolving lights vaguely suggest a carefully laid plan on the part of Hassan Ali for any emergency which may arise.

Burn's hypnotized, confesses his crime.

A court room scene, which is used at two different periods of the first episode, is very spacious and much action is injected into the scenes which are taken in it. The acting of the three principals, as well as several secondary players, is excellent, and the handling of the supernumeraries is masterful. The photography is one of the big assets of the film.

The opening scenes describe the early life of Zudora. Her mother and Hassan Ali, her uncle, are both performers with a small caravan circus in the West. Her father is a prospector who has worked in the gold fields for years with no success. One day a great change in the life of Zudora comes. Her father finds that the Zudora mine, after which his little daughter was named, is in the center of a gold vein but his happiness is cut short when a blast kills him. His last words are that the mine shall become the property of Zudora on her eighteenth birthday. Word of her husband's death reaches Zudora's mother just as she is about to begin her performance on the tight rope and the shock so unnerves her that she falls to the ground during the act and is killed. Hassan Ali assumes the guardianship of Zudora but secretly plans to rid himself of her, as he will then be the possessor of the rich mine, as he is the next heir.

Storm resents his rival's insult.

Eighteen years pass and Hassan Ali has not been able to dispose of the girl, as he does not wish to implicate himself in any crime. He has become a mystic and makes his living in this way. Zudora, who has now reached her eighteenth year, knows nothing of the vast fortune which should be hers, as her uncle has kept her in ignorance of the past. Zudora is in love with John Storm a young lawyer, but Hassan Ali frowns on the match as he fears Storm will discover his treachery. The girl has developed wonderful deductive powers and Hassan Ali, seeing a way in which to rid himself of her, tells her that if she will solve twenty mysteries which he will give her she may marry Storm.

Hassan Ali, the mystic.

About this time Storm and another lawyer named Bienreith oppose each other in a prominent case and when the latter insults Zudora's lover he slaps his face in the court room and is challenged to a duel that night. The newspapers learn of the proposed affair and when Zudora reads of it she determines to keep her lover from risking his life. She succeeds in placing powders in a glass of water, which he is drinking, and his mind is made blank for several hours. Thus she knows he will not meet Bienreith.

The next morning, however, Storm's rival is found dead in his room and Zudora's lover is picked up by the police while wandering on the street and accused of the crime. Zudora knows Storm is innocent and secures Hassan Ali's permission to work upon this case as the first of the twenty mysteries she must solve. She discovers strange pencil marks on Bienreith's collar and in court notices that the marks on a pencil carried by Burns, one of Hassan Ali's confederates, are similar.

She secures a postponement of the trial and takes two attorneys to her home. She then manages to get Burns in front of a wheel of blazing lights and he, hypotnized, confesses that he committed the crime and tells how he did it. He does not, however tell that Hassan Ali planned the deed in order to rid himself of Storm for in a frenzy he grasps the lights and is electrocuted. Storm is freed and Hassan Ali congratulates Zudora upon solving her first mystery.

"Rip Van Winkle"

As its initial release through the Alco Film Corporation the B. A. Rolfe Photoplay Corporation has chosen one of the nation's pet traditions and widest-read stories, "Rip Van Winkle," and adapted it to a five-part picture from the original manuscript.

As is commonly known the story is one of Washington Irving's sketches from the "Papers of Diedrich Knickerbocker." It is interesting here to state that in an appendage to his script Diedrich Knickerbocker affirmed the story to be absolutely true, claiming to have seen and talked with Rip Van Winkle, and to have verified his strange tale with the reports of some of the oldest settlers in the little Dutch village.

Parts of the story are changed somewhat, in order to introduce counter-plots, and develop a strong climax in the last reel, but in the main the play follows the original conception of the events leading up to and following Rip's twenty-year sleep. Thomas Jefferson has the doubtful pleasure of clambering up and down the Catskill mountains, across streams, and through brambles and thickets in re-enacting the wanderings of old Rip, not to mention the indignities to which he is submitted at the hands of Dame Van Winkle. But he faces it all with the same resigned, good-humored expression that was typical of the man whom he impersonates and it is safe to say that a large percentage of the people who have read the story will find in Mr. Jefferson's characterization a Rip Van Winkle very much like the one their imagination created.

The patriarch of the Hudson river village finds talented and typically-Dutch companions in the persons of William Cavanaugh as the close-fisted landlord, Derrick Von Beekman; H. D. Blakemore as Nick Vedder; Clariet Claire as his scolding wife, Gretchen; G. Sabo as Hendrick Hudson; Wallace Scott as Hendrick Vedder; William Chamberlain as Von Beekman's nephew, Cockles and Maurice and Loel Steuart as the children, Hendrick and Meenie.

Fumigating the Stock Yards

During the last two weeks the Union Stock Yards of Chicago, the largest live stock market in the world, has occupied an important place in the news columns of papers the country over, due to the discovery that hundreds of the cattle were suffering from the mouth and foot disease, an epidemic so highly contagious that within a few days cattle in no less than five states had to be quarantined, and in many cases whole droves were killed.

As a result of the epidemic thousands of cattle in the Chicago Stock Yards were sentenced to death by the government inspectors, and the stupendous job of cleaning up the stock yards, and disinfecting and fumigating every pen and corral, was undertaken by the government, the yards being absolutely closed for the first time in forty-nine years that this task might be accomplished.

Such an important event was naturally filmed by the Hearst-Selig cameraman, and number 74 of the

Nickel Shows Must Raise Prices

Carl Laemmle's View

IT was the day before Carl Laemmle left for the west and his inspection of things at Universal City. And the subject was one in which the Universal Film Company's president was vastly interested. For that reason he ordered no interruptions for half an hour. During that time he made statements regarding the five-cent theater and its ultimate passing, and they so entirely covered Mr. Laemmle's range of thought on the subject that it was decided to make them generally known. The advance in admission price was the subject and it is one to which Mr. Laemmle is giving much consideration at present.

Carl Laemmle.

"But," admitted Mr. Laemmle, in the Universal's suite in the Mecca Building, "this campaign in which I am endeavoring to help the exhibitor to help himself, is a thankless one. The present return is the accusation that I am money-mad. I advocate a more-than-five-cent admission price not because I am money-mad, but because I know that the exhibitor's show is going to cost him more than it has formerly done, and I believe that his patrons should share this extra expense with him."

"But," countered the listener, "isn't the present time a rather hard one already, on account of the war's causing so many people to be out of employment?"

"It is hard for those who have been so affected," answered Mr. Laemmle, "but even they aren't going to tolerate bad pictures for a fee of five cents. And unless the price is raised the exhibitor can't afford a show that will be worth while. The public wants better pictures, not worse ones, and as the five-cent exhibitor won't be able to afford the better ones, why his patrons will go to a ten-cent house, where they can see the good ones. So why not become a ten-cent exhibitor himself and not only hold his patronage but add to it?"

"But what, do you find, is the exact condition which makes for the advisability of a general more-than-five-cent admission?"

Mr. Laemmle's reply was the following thoughtful one:

"The unceasing pressure from the public compels the expenditure of great sums of money where small sums sufficed a few years ago. Scenarios have been sold for outlandish prices—thousands of dollars in some cases. Famous authors whose works are now sought by film concerns scorn what would have been considered a big price two years ago. Where we used to be able to use painted scenery and props throughout an entire picture some time ago, we now have to use the real thing. This must either be built at a tremendous cost or else the stage director and his company of actors must travel to some distant corner of the globe to get the required settings.

"Nothing would please me better than to work some plan whereby every exchange manager and every exhibitor could sit in my office for a few weeks and hear with their own ears some of the staggering price propositions that come to me every day. We are right now seriously considering a proposition which will cost us $2,500 a week for just one scenario, this plan to run for 52 weeks! Fifty-two scenarios at $2,500 each! Think of it!

"An exchange man made a suggestion the other day. It was very good. It sounded very simple. I asked him how much he thought it would cost and he figured that five thousand dollars would cover it. I showed him that we are planning to adopt the very thing that he suggested but that it will be impossible for the Universal to do it for a penny less than one hundred thousand dollars. It will not sell an extra reel for us but it will make our exhibitors stronger with their patrons. We can't throw that much money away of course. Yet it will not sell a single extra reel of film for us. So our only recourse is to charge more per foot for the reels we do sell.

"I used to be in the clothing business. I can remember the time when the big firm of Hart, Schaffner & Marx used to sell suits of clothes at wholesale, even their cheapest quality for less than $15—an advance of fifty per cent. They were compelled to do it. Their raw materials cost them more. And the public demanded better styles, better workmanship and better grades of fabric. So they made what the public demanded, but they made the retail clothier help stand the added expense by charging him more for his goods. And he in turn, boosted the retail price. So that in the end, the very public which compelled the manufacturer to turn out better goods had to pay more money for them. Nothing else could be expected.

"Precisely the same situation prevails today in the film business. The manufacturers do not dare produce the class of pictures which could be made at slight cost a few years ago. The people won't patronize such pictures. They won't tolerate retrogression in quality. They demand constant improvement. The manufacturer who would make poor pictures in the fact of the public demand for betterment ought to lose his business; and he will.

"The exchange man has to bear part of the burden and he has to shift part of it along to the exhibitor. This leaves the exhibitor nothing to do but to raise his price of admission. In other words it is up to the exhibitor to make the public pay real money for the things it has forced us to do through its incessant demand for improvement. In every line of business on earth "the ultimate consumer has to pay the freight." If the government places a new tax on cigarettes, the cigarette smokers have to pay more for their smoke. If whiskey is taxed, the whiskey drinkers have to pay the freight. If clothing manufacturers are forced to spend more money to produce their goods, the wearers of clothing must bear the burden. In this respect the film business is no different from any other. The public puts down its foot and demands something different, something newer, something better all the time. If it doesn't get what it wants from one concern, it will patronize another concern that is more alive to its wants.

"I have made myself extremely unpopular with some exhibitors because I have advised them to pay more rental for their films and also raise their price of admission. I could have made myself popular instead, by telling them what good fellows they are and advising them to pay less for their films. If they had taken the latter advice it would have ruined them, because it would have ruined the exchange and thus would have ruined the manufacturer. But it would have made me popular—temporarily.

"I have always figured from the exhibitor's standpoint, because I know that what is good for him is good for me. So, regardless of a charge of money-madness, I still insist that the wise exhibitor will take the public into his confidence, tell them the situation and then raise his price of admission, whether he's using Universal films or any other films."

An Entertaining Selig Production

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

BECAUSE it presents a set of ordinary characters doing extraordinary things in a plausible way, Selig's two-part melodrama entitled "Out of Petticoat Lane," which will be released on November 23, is a film which will please an audience of any class. While it makes no pretense of being an out and out thriller, it furnishes enough excitement to appease the appetite of the average spectator and when it fades from the screen it leaves you with the impression that you have been splendidly entertained.

Jessie confesses her rash act to Walter and Marie.

Gilson Willets, who wrote the scenario, has created several very quaint though human, characters and F. J. Grandon, the director, has succeeded admirably in interpreting the author's conception of them to his players. Adda Gleason, Goldie Colwell, Earle Foxe, Charles Wheeler and Gertrude Ryan appear in the leading roles.

Numerous exterior scenes of exceptional beauty are used throughout the picture. The interiors are neatly furnished and contain the correct atmosphere of the place they represent. The photography is good throughout and several rain scenes are handled in a very clever way. Considered as a whole, "Out of Petticoat Lane" is a production which pleases because of its subtle appeal.

Mrs. McCarthy sends Meg Morris, one of her laundry girls, to Marie Stuart's home to borrow a small sum of money. Marie formerly employed Mrs. McCarthy and gladly grants her request and as Meg has been caught in a rain storm she makes her wait until her clothes dry. Marie's fiance, Walter Sumpter, who owns a bungalow in the hills, is visiting Marie and when he hears Meg murmur to herself that if she could have one vacation in the country she would die happy, he slips a note into her pocket telling her to go to his cottage in the hills where she may act as caretaker during his absence.

When Meg returns to the laundry "Biff" Nelson, a tough delivery man, tries to force his attentions upon her and though she repulses him the affair arouses the jealousy of Jessie Mack, who also works in the laundry and who loves "Biff." Jessie strikes Meg and is discharged by Mrs. McCarthy. When her unwilling rival returns home that evening Jessie follows her and when "Biff" becomes involved in a street fight outside her home and her attention is drawn toward it Meg is attacked by Jessie and knocked unconscious with a stove handle.

Jessie finds the note that Walter gave Meg, and fearing she has killed the other girl, flees to the hills. Walter visits his bungalow the next day and finds Jessie, who has fainted because of exhaustion. Marie arrives just as her lover is caring for the stranger and denounces him. Jessie realizes the folly of her jealousy, however, and explains to them all that has happened, saying she is going to pay the penalty. She rushes to the brink of a cliff and is about to commit suicide when Meg, who has been cared for at a hospital and has come to the country to regain her strength, saves her. They then become reconciled.

Jessie's jealousy is aroused.

The girls and their rural lovers confide in Mrs. McCarthy.

Time passes and Meg and Jessie find happiness in their new life. Both forget the man who caused them sorrow in the city and fall in love with Walter's gardeners. Mrs. McCarthy gives a picnic to her girls, near Walter's cottage, and Meg and Jessie attend with their lovers. "Biff" again tries to force his attention upon them but this time they have protectors and their rural lovers soon put the bluffer to rout.

"Out of Petticoat Lane" falls a little short of making two reels and the balance of the second reel is devoted to Seligettes of Doc Yak, the well known series of motion picture cartoons drawn for the Selig Company by Sidney Smith of the Chicago Tribune, which show several amusing adventures of the eccentric character.

Tribune's War Films

On Tuesday noon, November 10, a private showing of the Chicago Tribune's war films, taken by Edwin F. Weigle, staff photographer of the Tribune, in Belgium, was held at the La Salle theater, Chicago. The pictures were made by special arrangement with the Belgian government, on condition that 50 per cent of profits from the exhibition of the films be turned over to the Belgian Red Cross. The pictures are remarkably clear, considering the conditions under which they must have been taken, for it is understood rain and fog prevailed during the time when most of the negative was secured. Smoke from the battlefield also helped to mar the film which might otherwise have been secured. Scenes are shown in Antwerp, Termonde, Alost, Aerschot, Lierre and Malines, and in one scene a German shell is clearly shown hitting a small barn in the background. The first public exhibition of the films takes place, beginning next Saturday, November 14, at the Studebaker theater, on Michigan Avenue. The film is being booked by the Central Film Company, Orpheum theater building, and state rights are for sale by the International Motion Picture Company, 7 South Dearborn street.

"The Clansman" Completed

The Mutual Film Corporation announces that Director Griffith has completed "The Clansman" the spectacular story written around the operations of the Ku Klux Klan in the south. Arthur James, publicity director of the Mutual, alleges that more persons appear in this production than any other that has ever been made—claiming that no less than 15,000 human beings appear in several of the mob scenes. In the leading roles are such stars as Mae Marsh, Blanche Sweet, Dorothy and Lillian Gish, Henry Walthall, Spottiswoode Aiken and others. It has not been definitely announced when "The Clansman" will be released, but it probably will be first shown in New York within the next two or three weeks.

Vitagraph Star Welcomed

W. L. Myers, manager of the Palace Theater, of Waterloo, Iowa, forwards us a clipping from a Waterloo daily describing the appearance of Miss Lillian Walker, pretty Vitagraph star, at his house one day last week. The Waterloo paper says in part:

A dainty little woman, young, beautiful and altogether fascinating, stood at the door of the Palace theater yesterday and today, smiling on everyone, shaking hands with those who greeted her, answered questions and exchanged a word of gossip here and there with the hundreds of theater patrons who thronged the movie house at the different performances. The little lady—she appeared hardly more than sweet sixteen—was Miss Lillian Walker, the pretty "Miss Dimples" of the Vitagraph company, with whom everyone feels acquainted, for she has appeared here hundreds of times in as many different roles upon the moving picture screen.

The announcement that Miss Walker was to appear in person in Waterloo created quite a stir among the moving picture fans (there are thousands of them here), but the excitement reached its height when she actually walked onto the stage and was greeted by a burst of enthusiastic applause which indicated in a small measure the popularity of this little movie actress. She was charmingly gowned in a becoming shade of green silk net over white with a basque of velvet trimmed with silver. The gown set off to best advantage her beautiful skin and her soft golden hair which seems to form a halo about her round dimpled face. She is all smiles and charm and the impression which she made among her friends here eclipsed even that of her former appearances upon the screen.

This was the first time Waterloo people have ever had an opportunity to see and hear a real moving picture actress and their appreciation was evident in the enthusiastic reception which was accorded their favorite. Miss Walker is appearing today at the Palace and will greet her friends again this evening. From here she goes to Fort Dodge for one day and then returns directly to Brooklyn.

The American Film Manufacturing Company announces that they have changed their title "A Slice of Life" to "Betty Morse," a two-reel psychological drama, released Nov. 9, 1914.

The Alco Film Service of Missouri, 317 Floyd Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., under the management of William Sievers, is another addition to the list of Alco exchanges.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Pathe Daily News—No. 74—Pathe—November 4.—Views of the police and firemen's carnival in Jersey City, N. J.; Andrew Carnegie unveiling the statue of Robert Burns in Pittsburgh; A torpedo boat ashore near Norfolk, Va.; Reunion of Confederate veterans in Mobile, Ala.; the disaster in the coal region near Royalton, Ill.; pictures of the candidates in the race for the governor's chair in New York and numerous views of the terrible struggle taking place on the battlefields of Europe.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial—Selig—November 9.—The sending of Christmas presents from Los Angeles, Cal. to Europe; the razing of two chimneys in Salem, Mass.; dedication ceremony of Longfellow's home; war pictures taken in Ghent, Belgium and Plymouth and Salisbury, England.

A Family Intermingle—Columbus—November 10.—Bob Noble, while attending college at Boneville, meets May Brock and learns that they both come from Piketown. While their children are at college, Mrs. Noble and Mr. Brock meet and get married, not telling each other that each has a child. Bob is requested by his mother to send her mail in future care of general delivery, and under no circumstances to come home without notifying her first. Surprised at this, Bob decides to go home and investigate. He leaves a letter for May, telling her that he is going home. She, thinking his love false, decides to follow on the next train. Arriving at Piketown, Bob learns of his mother's marriage and goes to see her at Mr. Brock's house. He is rudely pushed into a room by his mother, but not in time to prevent Mr. Brock seeing a strange man with his wife. Mr. Brock is very angry and his wife, afraid to tell him it is her son, leaves the room. Much to his surprise, his daughter arrives and the tables are turned—Mrs. Brock sees her husband with a strange woman. Mr. and Mrs. Brock have a real argument, deciding to separate. The children then appear and everything is explained satisfactorily.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial—Selig—November 12.—The United States troops leaving Ft. Sheridan, Ill., for the mine strike, near Ft. Smith, Ark.; motion picture study of Joseph G. Cannon, recently re-elected to the house after two years of private life; a suffrage meeting in New York; Meadowbrook fox hunt on Long Island; Ship Massapequa leaving with provisions for Belgium; the foot and mouth disease in the Chicago stock yards and the regular war section, including the latest pictorial war news.

The Child Thou Gavest Me—Biograph—November 16.—John Graham, a sea captain, is greatly attached to the little son of his friend, Robert Morris, and longs for a child of his own. Graham and Morris go to sea and while they are away both wives give birth to a baby girl. Mrs. Morris dies, as does Mrs. Graham's little girl, and the latter, fearing to tell her husband of the loss of their child, substitutes her dead baby for Mrs. Morris'. Graham returns home with word that Morris has been lost at sea and the Grahams adopt Morris' orphan son. Years later Graham tells the adopted son that he wants him to marry the girl, whom he thinks is his own daughter. The horror of the situation paralyzes Mrs. Graham and she becomes a helpless invalid. Morris' son loves the doctor's daughter and the girl, who is really his sister, loves the doctor's son. Graham is set on their marriage and not until Mrs. Graham, urged on by the horror of what is about to happen, tells her husband the truth does he change his mind.

It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. In that case please see that we are advised of your film titles and release dates, and furnished with a brief synopsis of the story. This department is intended for every film manufacturer, whether he uses our advertising pages or not.

The Adventure of the Lost Wife—(Eleventh of the Octavius Series) Edison—November 16.—The Burtons have a quarrel over dancing questions the night before Octavius arrives to spend a week-end with them. Mrs. Burton disappears, and when Octavius arrives the next morning all is in an uproar. He at once gets on the trail and follows her footprints to the boathouse and then embarks on an exploring excursion about the bay. He finds an empty rowboat and in an endeavor to examine it falls overboard and barely manages to swim to a small island. Here he finds Mrs. Burton and convinces her to return home but they discover that Octavius' boat, like Mrs. Burton's, has drifted away. While the amateur detective is fishing for his boat Mr. Burton arrives in a motor boat and takes his wife home. In their joy they forget Octavius and he is forced to paddle to the mainland with a plank.

Countess Sweedie—Essanay—November 16.—Sweedie again gets in wrong in this picture and furnishes considerable amusement thereby. A large ball room set, which is quite exceptional for this style of comedy, is used for the climax scenes. Wallace Beery and Ben Turpin have the leads. Countess Von Swatt goes on a slumming party and loses one of her calling cards in the "hash house" where Sweedie works. Sweedie finds the card. Next day an invitation to a ball to be given by Mr. Wealth is delivered by mistake to Sweedie. She has an idea; she will go to the ball and pretend to be the countess. The night of the party, Sweedie arrives at the Wealth home, accompanied by a waiter from her place of employment. She is introduced to the waiting guests as Countess Von Swatt, and in the middle of the introduction, stubs her toe and rolls down the stairs. She is paid great attention by all present and they insist upon her demonstrating the modern dances. Sweedie and the waiter are in the midst of the Swedish tango when the real countess arrives. Upon seeing her the pair make a rush for the door, but are captured and spend the night in jail, but Sweedie is happy that she was a countess for a while. C.J.C.

The Man of Iron—Kalem (Two Reels)—November 16.—Lucius Stanley, a stern upright man, refuses his son John's request for money with which to pay his debts. The boy takes the money from his father's safe, intending to return it when he inherits a fortunte, which will be his on his twenty-fifth birthday. Stanley has the boy sent to prison, despite the pleas of his mother and sister. A year later, John is released from prison, secures his fortune and goes to New York where he squanders it. John's sister leaves home after a quarrel with her father and also goes to New York. At a party given to some chorus girls by John, his sister is present and this brings John to realization of his own position. Brother and sister return home in time to save the life of their mother, whose heart was broken by their conduct. Stanley realizes that his stern manner was the cause of all the trouble and repents.

Lord Cecil Keeps His Word—(10th of the "Beloved Adventurer" series)—Lubin—November 16.—Lord Cecil arrives in England to save his estate from sale under mortgage foreclosures and is followed by Carson and Betty. Carson tells Lord Cecil that he has no legal right to the mine and that it belongs to Elizabeth Lee, an orphan. The Englishman's honor forces him to give up the fortune, but Betty tells him that she loves him and that she wants him to marry her. They hurry to Scotland, where the ceremony is performed, though Lord Cecil fears he faces poverty. The next day he is amazed when his banker informs him that he has kept his word and married an American heiress and that all his debts can now be paid. The banker then conducts Lord Cecil into another room, where Betty awaits them and he receives another surprise when he learns that she is not Betty Carson, but Elizabeth Lee. Carson is informed by Scotland Yard that his presence is no longer desired in London and Lord and Lady Cecil leave for Croftlaigh Manor to spend their honeymoon.

"The Thrilling Adventures of Count Verace."—Mina — November 16. — Count Verace makes a hit with the girls at a summer hotel, especially with Dora. George, her sweetheart, is jealous and forbids her to see the count. George, seeing them together, hires a gang of thugs to revenge him on the Count. The gangsters drop the count from the roof of a tall building but he jumps up uninjured. They tie him to a railroad track but he loosens the ropes and jumps onto the cowcatcher of the onrushing engine. The count is recaptured by the thugs after a chase through the woods and bound to the rear seat of an automobile. The automobile is sent over a precipice with a thrilling crash, but the count crawls out from under the wreckage uninjured, and goes back to the hotel. He is making love to Dora when George comes in, sees him and faints away, crushed by the count's triumph.

Sisters — Vitagraph — November 16.— Lizzie Desmond, a factory girl, is about to elope with Tom Cassidy, a married man whose wife is dissipated, when Rose Allen, a wealthy settlement worker, tells her how wrong her step would be. Tom is persistent, however, and Lizzie feels she cannot give him up. She goes to Rose to tell her she is going West with him and the settlement worker surprises her by saying that she is going to elope that night with her lover, who deserted her years before. Lizzie is horrified, as she has always regarded Rose as a saint and she begs her to give up the plan, saying that they will fight out the battle together, sisters in time of temptation. The two worthless men become tired of waiting for the girls and pass out of their lives forever.

Ernest Maltravers—Biograph—(Two Reels) — November 17. — Because she saved him from death at the hands of her father, a gypsy robber, Ernest Maltravers, a millionaire's son, secretly marries Alice. His father's death calls him to his home and when he returns to his little cottage, Alice has disappeared. He shuts up the cottage and goes abroad to forget. Alice has been kidnapped by her father and is held a prisoner by him until after the birth of her daughter. One day she escapes and returns to the cottage only to find it closed. A kind woman gives her shelter and she spends many years with her. Maltravers on the continent meets his old acquaintance, Lumney Ferrers, and through him meets the musician, Castruccio, and the latter's sister, Florence. Ferrers has won Florence's heart, but he scorns her and she dies. Her brother vows vengeance on him. Years later, Castruccio teaching music in England has as a pupil the daughter of Alice, and is also engaged to the girl. Ferrers attempts to win her away from Castruccio and the men lock in a deathly struggle, which ends when the worthless man is hurled over a cliff. Maltravers consents to act as Castruccio's best man and on the day of the wedding he again meets Alice and a happy reunion takes place.

A Moment of Madness—Edison—November 17.—In spite of all her efforts to win him, Aldridge spurns Inez' advances. His love for Rita, Inez' chum causes Inez, while in a jealous rage, to try and take Rita's life. When her plans miscarry she herself goes to the death planned for her rival. A complete review will be found on page 619 of the November 7 issue.

The Servant Question—Essanay—November 17.—A very pleasing little comedy with a thought behind it. Ruth Stonehouse and Raply Holmes in the leading roles are delightful. The photography is good, and the setting all that can be asked for. Ellen, an heiress, becomes tired of living an idle life, so applies for a position as maid to Mrs. Newlyrich and is accepted. The following day she is seen by a wealthy baron. He is infatuated, and next morning when he reads an ad for a chef in the same household, he applies and is engaged. That evening Lord and Lady Montford are to be the guests for dinner. The baron makes a miserable attempt at cooking, and after the second course the butler is given orders to discharge the chef. The enraged baron enters the dining room where he is recognized by Lord Montford, and at the same moment Ellen enters and is given a hearty welcome by Lady Montford. The baron is given a formal introduction to Ellen, and the four depart to get a square meal. C.J.C.

The Peach at the Beach—Kalem—November 17.—Ham takes his neighbor's wife, Mrs. Hothead, to the beach, after telling his wife that he had been called out of town on business. A cameraman takes the pictures of both and a thief steals his wife's pocketbook from him, as he had used her money to finance the excursion. Some weeks later the Hams and Hotheads visit a motion picture theater and the first picture shown is of Ham and Mrs. Hothead. Mr. Hothead and Mrs. Ham immediately start a riot, but finally the Hams make their getaway and return home, where they find the purse, which the crook took from Ham, on the doorstep. In it is a note explaining the crook's reason for returning it and also telling of the things he saw at the beach. This does anything but square Ham with his wife.

Cheap Transportation—Lubin—November 17.—Emil Schultz, stranded in a small hamlet receives an offer from a motion picture company in Florida, but he has not the necessary money to pay his transportation. He strolls into a field and sits on a tree stump which is dynamited and is blown up. He lands in the water and is picked up by a dredge and dumped on to a mud scow, but the foreman discovering him kicks him into the river. He is then picked up by the anchor of a ship bound for Florida. He refuses to scrub the deck, but cannot face the cold water again, so he manages to crawl into a box and completes the water trip in this fashion. He arrives in Florida and the box is subject to several rough tumbles before it finally falls from a wagon in front of a train which gives Emil another boost. He lands in front of a racing automobile and is dragged to the studio. Rushing in he learns that the position is no longer open. He faints and is dumped into the river. Undaunted, he starts swimming back to New York, a thousand miles away.

She Was the Other—Lubin—November 17.—The chief of the Riverside police is despairing of making his men neat and orderly. He reads in a newspaper that a brother chief has solved his problem by appointing a woman inspector and decides to appoint his sister to that office. Now the chief has two sisters, Helen, a stunning woman, and Cutie, who is older than she wants to be. The men all know Cutie for the cops are the only men that will talk to her and they even make fake arrests to escape her wiles. They know nothing of Helen and they hold an indignation meeting and declare that they will make business brisk for Cutie when she gets on the job. Monday comes and the cops turn up in the most disreputable shape but when Helen arrives they realize what a sight they are. They hustle out through the doors and windows and presently return all spruced up and the chief congratulates himself that his troubles are at an end.

The Sheriff's Reward—Selig—November 17.—A thrilling western drama typical of those in which Tom Mix is featured. Rose Boland, a young ranch owner, discharges her foreman, and the latter, out of revenge, joins a band of cattle rustlers, and engages with them in looting the Boland cattle, finally going so far as to capture the pretty ranch owner herself. The sheriff swears in the cowboys as deputies, and not only rescues Rose, but rounds up the rustlers, finally receiving as a rewards the hand of the pretty ranch owner. Tom Mix and Goldie Caldwell featured. N.G.C.

Hope Foster's Mother — Vitagraph (Two Reels) November 17.—Hoping to give her mother some of the luxuries of life, Hope Foster, an actress, asks for a more important role in the production. Her sincerity makes an impression on the manager and when the leading lady becomes indisposed, Hope takes her place. Hope's mother is taken ill and the girl wants to nurse her, but the mother will not hear of it, as the play opens that evening. At the theater her mind is on her sick mother and Hope finds it difficult at first to successfully carry her part, but her playing in the last act, endears her to the public. She hurries home and finds her mother lingering between life and death. Beautiful vision scenes show the mother's soul about to pass into eternity, but when her daughter bends over her it returns as though by a miracle and she safely passes the crisis of her illness.

A Millinery Mix-up—Edison—November 18.—A short comedy on the same reel with "Buster Brown and the German Band" which contains considerable humor. Dan Mason, Carol Cushman and Gladys Hulette have the leading roles and the bits of "business" they inject into the action throughout will cause many laughs in an average audience. Mrs. Tightwad asks her husband to buy her a new hat during breakfast but he refuses. When she visits his office and finds his stenographer wearing the hat she desired she proceeds to destroy it. Tightwad has to buy the girl a new hat and he has just completed the purchase when his wife takes it away from him. He then has to purchase another hat and finds he is out the price of two, where he could have paid for only one if he had granted his wife's request in the beginning. C.J.C.

Buster Brown and the German Band—EDISON—NOVEMBER 18.—Another one of the pleasing series, which features Norris and Helen Millington as Buster Brown and Mary Jane. A German band cause the disturbance this time and Buster makes another of his resolutions at the close of the reel. It is on the same reel with "A Millinery Mix-up." Buster's mother is entertaining the neighbors and Buster cannot resist the temptation to have a German band play under the window of the reception room. The goat, awakened from his slumbers by the noise, proceeds to chase the band away, despite Tige's objections. C.J.C.

The Fable Proving That Spongers Are Found in a Drug Store—ESSANAY—NOVEMBER 18.—No attempt is made at developing a plot in this fable-film, but a series of incidents are shown which are both amusing and true to life. It shows the numerous favors asked of the druggist and proves that when he overcharges a person for a prescription he is only evening up his account with the public. Robert Bolder appears as the druggist and more than a dozen other players are used to portray the various types of pests with which the man who deals out prescriptions has to contend. C.J.C.

His Nemesis—KALEM (TWO REELS).—NOVEMBER 18.—To save himself from ruin Manning, of Manning & Co., commits a theft and places the blame on Reynolds, an old employee, who receives a three-year sentence. Beatrice, Reynolds' daughter, certain that her father is innocent, manages to ruin Manning through his son, Joe. She also ruins Joe, and when both are penniless, gloats over their misery. Her conscience gives her no peace, however, and determined to right her wrong, she becomes a religious worker. Reynolds is released from prison and starts out to kill Manning, but when he learns of what his daughter has done, he wavers in his determination. Manning, Joe and Reynolds find Beatrice working in the slums and all start life anew.

The Marriage Wager—LUBIN (TWO REELS) NOVEMBER 18.—Jacques and Pierre Roques, brothers, are sworn enemies, due to a bitter quarrel over the distribution of the family wealth. Pierre, fearing death at the hands of Jacques, flees to America with his daughter, Beth. Henry Leeds, a young bachelor, signs an agreement at his club to be married within twenty-four hours. The next morning he realizes what he has done and goes for a ride in the country to think things over. The same morning Jacques has located his brother and enters the mansion determined to secure Pierre's wealth, which is secreted in the cellar of his home. Jacques imprisons Beth in her bedroom and Henry passing in his car receives a note from her calling for help. He rushes into the house and frees her. She hurries into the cellar, while Henry cares for the butler, whom Jacques has also injured. Jacques locks Beth in the treasure vault and ties Pierre under a death-dealing port-cullis. Henry attempts to rescue them and struggles with Jacques, while Beth and her father slowly go to their death. Henry finally kills Jacques and rescues Pierre and the girl. Remembering his wager, he proposes to her and a short time later telephones his club that he has won his wager.

The Broken "X"—SELIG—NOVEMBER 18.—Phillip Elliott, mayor of a small town, twenty years before had been a member of the "X" gang of bank burglars, who had as their insignia, a small scarf pin in the shape of the letter "X." One day a stranger appears to Mayor Elliott and astonishes him by displaying the "X" scarf pin and demanding his help in robbing the bank. The following morning, with the discovery of the robbery, no suspicion attaches to the mayor, and the local police are baffled in their efforts to obtain any clues to the bank robbers. Secret service men called into the case discover Stanley, one of the thieves, passing a one thousand dollar bill, and his confession finally leads to the rounding up of the other members of the gang including Mayor Elliott. Guy Oliver, Lemar Johnstone and Stella Razeto featured. N.G.C.

Fixing Their Dads—VITAGRAPH—NOVEMBER 18.—Both deadly rivals for the hand of Widow Hathaway, Kirkland and Livingston, gentlemen farmers, do all they can to break up the love match between Dick and Florence, their respective children. Dorothy, a city friend of Florence's visits her and decides to help the young people overcome the objections. She flirts with both the farmers and Florence manages to take pictures of both Kirkland and Livingston in rather compromising position with Dorothy they are forced to withdraw their objections to the marriage. When the farmers again visit the widow, they find that she has gone away to marry an old sweetheart. Both then realize they have been a couple of old fools.

Henpeck Gets a Night Off—BIOGRAPH—NOVEMBER 19.—Dick invites Henpeck to a party in his flat and Henpeck manages to secure his wife's permission by telling her that Dick is sick and that he will have to sit up with him that night. A "but-in" in the flat next door peers through the key-hole and then hurries to tell Mrs. Henpeck. The guests learn of the discovery, however, and hide in the "but-in's" flat, so when Mrs. Henpeck arrives her husband is sitting up with Dick as he said he was. She is very sorry for the sick man and administers a mustard plaster. When the other guests are driven up stairs and into the flat by the "but-in" a general riot takes place in which jam is plentifully administered. Henpeck, however, convinces his wife of his innocence.

A Fowl Deed—BIOGRAPH—NOVEMBER 19.—Mrs. Dodo's maid is so interested in reading a novel that she allows a tramp to steal an uncooked chicken, which he wraps up in Mrs. Dodo's new waist. Mrs. Punk gives her maid a waist similar to that of Mrs. Dodo's and she goes out riding with her fiance, a chauffeur. The tramp discards the waist when he cooks the chicken and a detective finds it stained with blood and rushes to the station house. Mrs. Dodo thinks her maid has stolen the waist and hurries to the police station. The detective brings the blood-stained waist to the station and Mrs. Dodo thinks her maid has been murdered. The chauffeur is arrested for speeding and Mrs. Punk's maid appears with her waist. All complications are finally straightened out by the presiding police officer.

A Horse on Sophie—ESSANAY—NOVEMBER 19.—Trick photography, assisted by eccentric acting on the part of Victor Potel, Margaret Joslin and Harry Todd make this one of the best "Snakeville" comedies which have ben released for some time. The plot swings about a deal in horses. Sophie writes a note to her aunt telling her that she is undecided whether to marry Slippery Slim or Mustang Pete, but says she will accept the one who buys the best looking horse. Slim intercepts the note and immediately goes to the deacon who owns the finest horses in town. He buys the deacon's prize steed, but when he attempts to drive him, the animal refuses to move an inch. In the meantime Mustang has heard of Sophie's plan, so he also goes to the deacon and buys a horse. This one refuses to go forward and takes Mustang for a nerve-racking ride backwards. Slim and Mustang trade horses, each thinking he is putting it over on the other. When the two rivals discover that both horses are "lemons" they proceed to mix in a fistic encounter. While they are fighting the deacon comes along, helps Sophie into his buggy and drives away. C.J.C.

On Suspicion—LUBIN (TWO REELS) NOVEMBER 19.—Maud Gray and her fiance John Maddox, an attorney, quarrel because he believes in the use of the third degree. Maud receives a letter from her wayward brother to come to a nearby town and aid him and while there is suspected of being a female crook, who has been operating in theaters and hotels. She is arrested and Maddox prepares to prosecute her without knowing who it is. The real crooks make their getaway with the gods they have stolen and are arrested for auto speeding. They are released after having paid their fine, while Maud is given the third degree and arraigned in court. Maud's fiance recognizes her when the trial takes place and frees her. When they are alone again he admits that he has been wrong about the third degree.

Too Much Burglar—Vitagraph—November 19.—Henriette Joyce takes her sister's daughter, Trixie, as a companion and supports the remainder of the family in payment for her services. Henriette has a strain of morbidly romantic sentiment in her nature and Trixie's chief duty is reading cheap novels to her. Tom Perry, a young bank clerk, meets Trixie and they fall in love, but Henriette threatens to discharge her unless she gives up Tom, as she says he is not a hero. The young people get an idea and have Phil, Tom's friend disguise himself as a burglar and break into the house, thus giving Tom a chance to be a hero. Two real burglars break into the house, however, and the young men prove real heroes and capture them. Henriette then withdraws her objections to Tom, as she feels she has found a real modern hero and wishes to keep him in the family.

The Girl and the Miser—Biograph—November 20.—Because she is known as a sensible girl, the miser wants to marry her and her parents, blinded by his wealth, urge on the match. The young minister advises against it, but his objections are overruled. The minister plans to give the girl some corals as a wedding present. She visits his home and admires the corals. The presence of a servant causes her to neglect putting them back and she takes them home. The minister thinks they have been stolen and asks the sheriff to search for them. On the day of the wedding she follows her impulse to wear them and the sheriff, seeing them, accuses her of being a thief. The miser denounces her and she then finds her true lover in the minister, who stands by her side when the others turn against her.

What Could She Do?—Edison (Three Reels)—November 20.—Forced to seek employment through the death of her father, Sylvia undergoes many trying experiences in the life that is new to her. Finally, employed as a detective, she recovered a child from kidnappers after a severe pistol fight, to win the man she loved and repay Hetty who had befriended her. A complete review on page 665 of November 14 issue.

The Means and the End.—Essanay (Two Reels) November 20.—A delightful character portrayal of a girl with high ideas by Gerda Holmes and an exciting struggle in a darkened room by Richard C. Travers and Lester Cuneo, coupled with a story that has an idea behind it make this offering one which no exhibitor should falter in booking. The interior sets showing the home and office of a millionaire are richly set. Raply Holmes, as a money king, is well cast and acts his role in a very creditable manner. The photography is clear but greater care should have been exercised in condensing the sub-titles. William Hildebrand, a capitalist, oppresses the poor in order to further the enterprises he is constantly at work on. His one redeeming trait is his great love for his daughter, Helene. Vincent Archer, a sociological worker, knowing that early in his life Hildebrand was responsible for the conviction of an innocent man on a murder charge, uses this means to force him into helping erect a home for the poor. Another man, Jim Parker of the underworld, knows of the murder and threatens Hildebrand. Because he has fallen in love with Helene Archer secures the evidence that Parker holds, thereby freeing Hildebrand. Archer however, feels that the means he used to gain his end were not honorable and believes he does not deserve Helene's love. Hildebrand, seeing the lovers' plight, removes the obstacle and all ends happily. C.J.C.

Fatty and the Shyster Lawyers—Kalem—November 20.—Fatty slips on a banana peel while alighting from a street car, and Steel & Gouge, rival lawyers, scent business. They chase Fatty and in the mixup all are arrested. When Steel pays Fatty's fine, he wins the client. The car company is sued and during the trial Fatty is brought into the court on a stretcher. The railroad doctor applies electricity and Fatty flees toward home terrified. As Lawyer Steel has declared, Fatty has been paralyzed by the fall, he has to fix things up by saying that the electricity cured him. The next day a bill for $500 from the car company arrives for curing Fatty and when Lawyer Steel comes to see his client he is thrown out of the house, much to the amusement of Gouge, who is passing at the time.

The Unknown Country—Lubin—November 20.—Edgar Marsh and Robert Strong are fellow students and have studied the occult deeply. Both fall in love with Alice Gray and she accepts Robert. Marsh determines to avenge himself and manages to hypnotize Robert and himself bringing about a total suspension of animation in both bodies, setting free the inner natures or souls. His soul quickly enters the body of Robert, but Robert's refuses to enter the form of Marsh. Marsh clothed in Robert's body prepares to take his place as future husband of Alice, but the girl's spiritual love cannot be deceived, though her physical senses are and she breaks the engagement. Defeated, Marsh, in Robert's body, returns to the place where his own body still lies inanimate and again exchanges souls with Robert. Robert, himself again, goes to Alice and she recognizes in him the man she really loves. Marsh's spirit, however, has been absent from his soul so long that he has passed from a state of suspended animation to that of true death.

The Mysterious Black Box—Selig—November 20.—A laughable comedy in which Sid Smith is featured in the role of Bill, a lazy fellow employed in the shipping department of Foggs' wholesale house. Bill is in love with Betty, Foggs' daughter, while Foggs is stingy with his wife, and angry at Bll. Bill has a lunch box shaped like a camera and one day suddenly surprises Foggs while holding his stenographer in his arms, the latter having tripped over a chair and fallen. Foggs concludes that Bill has taken their pictures, and to keep the matter quiet, not only permits Bill to marry Betty, but lavishes presents upon Mrs. Foggs, in the hope that she will forgive him, in case she discovers the picture Bill has taken. Finally Foggs learns that Bill has a lunch box instead of a camera. N.G.C.

The Professional Scapegoat—Vitagraph—November 20.—Wimperis is employed by the superintendent of a big department store to be a professional scapegoat. Whenever any of the customers register a complaint, the floorwalker drags Wimperis to the foreground and "discharges" him. The scapegoat then sobs and weeps until the customer is heartily sorry for having complained. In time Wimperis falls in love with Enid, a beautiful saleswoman, who is being pestered by the attentions of the floorwalker. She is very sorry for him during his first few bits of trouble, but soon learns the joke. One day a lawyer inquires for Wimperis and, as per his custom, he whines and pleads. He forgets his position, however, when he learns from the lawyer that he has been left a large fortune. Enid and Wimperis are then married and the floorwalker is hurled into a pile of crockery. Five years later their little son has inherited his father's traits and when he breaks a saucer, he performs the same stunts his father did when he was on "discharge duty."

Blacksmith Ben—Biograph—November 21.—Blacksmith Ben's sweetheart elopes with an artist and years later he sees the same trouble coming upon his helper, Joe, when another artist courts Daisy, the young man's sweetheart. May, Daisy's sister who loves Joe, tells him of her perfidy but this only leads to a quarrel between the lovers. Blacksmith Ben, however, determines to set matters right and when he discovers that Daisy and the artist plan to elope, he sends Joe to the meeting place and himself meets the artist on the way. He forces him to sign a confession telling the girl that he is married and threatens to brand him with a redhot iron if he ever sees her again. The artist then flees from the village and when Daisy gets the note she is reconciled to Joe. May sees them together and sadly goes away, while Blacksmith Ben looks on, happy to think that he spared the young man the pain that he has suffered.

Dickson's Diamonds—Edison—November 21.—In trailing the burglars, who had stolen $200,000 worth of diamonds from the store of Nathan Dickson, Felix Boyd, the famous detective and Jimmie Coleman, a central office man, are led to an old barn. They discover a man with a heavy beard and follow him. He is attacked by a number of other men and is knocked unconscious before the detectives can rescue him. The other men escape and Boyd and Coleman, upon examining the unconscious man, find it is Dickson, the stolen diamonds clutched in his hand.

Broncho Billy's Scheme—ESSANAY—NOVEMBER 21.—Without much of a plot, this offering holds the interest from the first scene to the last and is sure to please the fans who follow the Broncho Billy productions. The idea is rather new as far as picture productions are concerned, though many of the situations touch upon the old style western. The photography is very good. Colonel Emmett's daughter is captured by an outlaw, who blindfolds her just before taking her to his hut, so in case she escaped she would be unable to lead anybody to his rendezvous. She is told by one of his accomplices that he intends forcing her into marriage, so she feigns illness. While the outlaw goes for a doctor, she writes a note saying that she is not ill, and is being held for ransom. The outlaw arrives with Broncho Billy, the doctor, whom he has also blindfolded. The girl slips him the note and he pretends to be attending her. Before being blindfolded for the return journey he fills his pocket with white pills, which he drops at intervals, marking the trail. He then notifies the sheriff who follows the trail and rescues the girl after his men have overpowered the gang. C.J.C.

The Plot at the R. R. Cut (Second episode of the "Hazards of Helen")—KALEM—NOVEMBER 21.—Gregg and Benton fall in love with Helen, who has temporarily been assigned to the station at Quarry Depot and bad blood springs up between them, though Helen is impartial in her friendship. Benton tries to kiss her, but Gregg interferes and in a fight which follows, the worthless man is beaten by Helen's protector. To avenge himself, Benton determines to blow out the side of a hill, burying Gregg and the men he is superintending. Helen learns of the plot, but the explosion takes place before she can warn Gregg. The telegraph wires are torn down, but the plucky girl climbs a pole and splices them. She then telegraphs to the city for aid. The relief train comes and, as Gregg is being placed aboard it, he asks Helen to become his wife, but she refuses, as he is not the man she feels she can love.

The Tale of a Coat.—LUBIN—NOVEMBER 21.—Tony, a tailor's apprentice, is in love with Lena Hopf, who is cashier in the same establishment. Lena writes a very loving little note to Tony and when Ralph, a customer, has a coat pressed it finds its way into his pocket. Ralph also has a sweetheart and when she accidentally finds Lena's note she will listen to no explanation. While Ralph is trying to square himself, a crook steals the coat and disposes of it to a second hand dealer. Mr. and Mrs. Hay from the country pass the shop and buy the coat. Mrs. Hay finds the note and another row ensues. When the row is at its height, Ralph appears and calls an officer. The whole affair is explained at the police station and four aching hearts are soothed.

The Daddy of Them All—LUBIN—NOVEMBER 21.—The County Welfare Society, to encourage larger families, offers prizes of ten dollars to every man who is father of ten or more children and a grand prize of a thousand dollars to the highest. Peters, a short, stubby man, has twenty-three children and thinks he has a chance to win the thousand. Upon his arrival at the committee room he finds the judges admiring a group of big fellows and when he puts in his claim they give him the laugh because he is so small and tell him to prove his statement. Then he dashes home and back again with Mrs. Peters and the children. He arrives at the hall with only a minute to spare, and Peters is the lion of the occasion. He takes the thousand but only for a minute, for Mrs. Peters quickly relieves him of all responsibility on that score. He has quite a problem on his hands when the round-up shows a count of thirty-three instead of twenty-three. Mrs. Peters happily relieves the tension on that point also.

Her Sacrifice—SELIG—NOVEMBER 21.—Tom and his sister live in a fishing village. Kitty lives with her dad in a neighboring cottage, while Bill, Kitty's sweetheart, earns his living by fishing with Tom and Kitty's dad. Bill and Kitty are engaged to be wed, and their happiness is unclouded until village gossip hints that Bill has won the simple heart of Tom's little sister. When Tom discovers that Bill's affair with his sister has been only a flirtation, he attempts to take the life of Bill, but Kitty interferes and gives up her sweetheart to the girl he is in duty bound to marry, though her heart is torn with anguish at her sacrifice. Kathlyn Williams, Wheeler Oakman, Chas. Cleary and Gertrude Ryan featured. N.G.C.

Mary Jane Entertains — VITAGRAPH (TWO REELS) NOVEMBER 21.—An unexpected business engagement prevents Brown from accompanying his wife to a tango ball and she goes to her mother's to spend the evening, leaving the house in care of Mary Jane, her maid. Percy, the grocer's clerk, calls on Mary Jane and is royally entertained by her at Brown's expense. They find the tango tickets, dress in Mr. and Mrs. Brown's evening clothes and attend the ball, where they cause much merriment by their appearance. Brown finds that he will be able to attend the dance after all and informs his wife. They find the house in awful shape, their clothes gone and the tickets gone. Hurrying to the dance hall they discover the maid and Percy and to make matters worse, Brown flirts with the maid. The four mix matters and all are arrested. Mary Jane gives her last penny to bail out Percy and herself. She then finds herself without money and position.

The Man with the Hoe—THANHOUSER—NOVEMBER 15.—While studying the painting, "The Man with the Hoe," Richard West and his fiancee, Marion Clark, quarrel over the worth of a common laborer. Marion is friendly with the gardener on her father's estate and when she visits his sick wife, Richard, who doesn't know he is married, thinks she is going to see him. When he accuses her she breaks their engagement. Later West sells his farm and the gardener buys it. Marion is a guest there, and later West, whose health has become impaired, boards with the gardener and his wife. Believing that exercise will help him he goes out to the garden with the hoe and here Marion finds him. Both realize the situation is the same as the one represented by the painting and are reconciled.

Redbird Wins — AMERICAN — (TWO REELS)—NOVEMBER 16.—A rousing race-track story, concerning the fortune of Colonel Dinwidty, owner of the thoroughbred, "Redbird," and of the attempt of Chick Mace and Ray Conners to dope the horse and win the fortune, by betting against her. Fern, the colonel's daughter, dons a jockey's uniform, and rides "Redbird" to victory, when the colored jockey is doped by the race-track crooks, thereby winning a fortune for her father, and the hand of Philip Pierpont, a wealthy neighbor. See review on page 691.

Our Mutual Girl (Chapter 44)—RELIANCE—NOVEMBER 16.—Margaret's curiosity to see some of the old historical buildings of New York City leads her into a queer adventure. She alights from her limousine, and is approaching an old ramshackled dwelling set back from the curb a ways when an odd-looking creature is discovered coming down the path towards them. She accuses Our Mutual Girl of being an apparition of the past returned to torment her. She then explains her queer actions by leading Margaret into the house and showing her a photo taken when she was just about Margaret's age. It bears a remarkable resemblance to the girl. While telling the story of her past life the woman imagines she sees the spirits of her husband and lover. The silence plays on Aunt Abbie's nerves so strongly that she laughs. This angers the old lady and she orders them from the house.

When Queenie Came Back—Beauty—November 17.—Certainly the man or woman who cannot smile at the clever complications in this Beauty subject can never have experienced any domestic difficulties over the absence of a cook, for the picture is absolutely true to life in hundreds of American homes, though its finish may be slightly exaggerated. Queenie, the Van Dyke's cook, goes on a vacation, and in her absence, Mrs. Van Dyke not only proves utterly incapable of cooking, but fails to get along with any one of the numerous applicants who attempt to fill Queenie's place. When Queenie sends word that she is returning, the Van Dykes meet her at the depot with a band and an automobile, and escort her in triumph to their bungalow. Margarita Fischer and Mary Scott featured. N. G. C.

A Little Country Mouse—Majestic—November 17.—Dorothy, a sweet, unsophisticated country girl, pays a week-end visit to her cousin in fashionable Newport. She becomes involved in a game of bridge, and loses heavily to her hostess, who insists on immediate payment of the debt. Worried, Dorothy accepts the offered aid of one of the guests, and endorses his check to the hostess. He, however, has another purpose in view, and Dorothy is consternated at finding herself in his power. Her father being a clergyman and strongly opposed to gambling, Dorothy is unable to appeal to home for money, so tells her story to Lieutenant Hawkhurst. Through bribery the latter manages to secure some of the love letters written by the hostess, and, using them as a bludgeon, forces her to hand over the check. The engagement between Dorothy and Hawkhurst closes the affair.

Pawns of Fate—Thanhouser—(Two Reels)—November 17.—When the new governor takes his chair, he is urged by his fellow politicians to dismiss those who are holding office, but he retains all men who are fit for their positions. Among these is an old chief clerk, whose daughter is very grateful for the governor's consideration of her father. The governor's twin daughters are kidnaped by some criminals, who demand the pardon of one of their number before they will agree to return the children. The chief clerk's daughter and her fiance, a young police officer, rescue the twins after an exciting adventure and return them to the governor. The girl refuses to be thanked by the governor, as she said she only repaid his kindness.

Beppo — American — November 18.— George Field is seen to splendid advantage in the character role of Beppo, a poor Italian street musician. Beppo, pausing before the home a wealthy man, who has been threatened by the black hand, is suspected of being one of the gang, and dragged off to prison. Little Rosa, his daughter, awaits his return in their humble home, and when he fails to come back, is placed in an orphanage. Meanwhile, Mr. and Mrs. Lyons, seeking a child to take the place of the little girl they lost, are attracted by Rosa, and adopt her. Months later, Beppo is released from prison, pauses before the Lyon's home to play one of his favorite melodies on the accordion, and Rosa, hearing the music again, finds her father. George Field featured. N. G. C.

Shorty Falls into a Title—Broncho—(Two Reels)—November 18.—Shorty incurs the cook's hatred by thrashing him, and the latter, in a spirit of revenge, places a burr under the saddle of Shorty's horse. Ike Selby, the manager of the Wild West show, borrows Shorty's horse, and is thrown off in the ring. Thinking that this is one of the fellow's tricks he discharges him. Shorty meets Lord Chatham, who suggest that they change places for a time. Not knowing that his lordship is in wrong with the suffragette crowd, Shorty accepts and enjoys the luxuries of the Chatham household until besieged by the militant females. In a chase, Shorty runs toward the wharf, and arrives just as the boat carrying the Selby outfit leaves. He jumps into the water, swims to the boat, and is pulled on board by the cowboys.

The Hidden Message—Reliance—November 18.—To revenge themselves on May's father, a band of Mexicans kidnap her and demand a fortune for her release. They compel the girl to write her father begging him to yield to their demands. Unguarded for a moment she scribbles the location of the hiding place on the corner of the envelope. When Bronson receives the letter the stamp covers the secret message. He and the sheriff pay no attention to the envelope, allowing it to fall on the floor. The sheriff's child finds the envelope and tosses it into a pail of water. This loosens the stamp and the sheriff finds the hidden message. A posse is organized, the Mexicans attacked and captured and May restored to her father.

Nipped—(Two Reels)—Domino—November 19.—Nakado and Komura plan a revolution, secure arms and ammunition and hide them in the mission house. San Toy, Nakado's daughter, has been posing secretly for Tom Wright, an American artist. Komura meets and wants to marry her, but she repulses him. He follows her and sees her enter Wright's tent. In the meantime the artist discovers the hidden arms and ammunition, and with the aid of some American miners, blows up the mission. The revolutionists swear revenge. At Komura's suggestion they decide to capture Wright. San Toy hurries to the American's tent to warn him, but finds him gone. As Nakado, Komura and the Mexican general approach the tent they see a figure moving around inside. Thinking it is Wright, they shoot and kill San Toy. Komura exultantly points out the traitor to Nakado. Wright escapes.

The Master of the House—(Two Reels)—Kay Bee—November 20.—Guy Winston, a wealthy mine owner, is captured by Lois Herrington while on a business trip in the East. After their marriage Winston learns that the marriage was only for the purpose of bolstering up the shaky finances of the socially ambitious family. He tires of his humdrum existence, and decides to go back West. His wife laughs at his request to accompany him, but her scorn changes to admiration when he ties her in a chair and leaves her alone for a whole day. Just as Winston is about to board the train she rushes up to him and begs to be taken with him.

Ethel Has a Steady—Komic—November 22.—In Bill No. 11 that energetic youth's appreciation of beauty leads to a good bit of trouble—for others. Bill falls for the stenographer in another office, and starts to typewrite her a love letter. When he is about half through with it he is called away. Hadley and his girl and Ethel and her fellow all miss connection on their dinner engagements, and each one thinks it is because of the unfinished love letter on the typewriter. Bill finally explains all, and decides that he will journey through life alone, romances not being all that they are cracked up to be.

The Saving Grace—Majestic—(Two Reels)—November 22.—A little girl and her father, a drunkard, live in an old shack. The town minister takes an interest in her, and has the committee send her to school and provide her with clothes. She hears her father and another man plan to rob the postman, and notifies the minister of it. He arrives in time to prevent the crime, and, by kind words, makes the men feel ashamed of themselves. One day the little girl sees the minister embrace a girl whom he meets on the street. In a rage of jealousy she induces her half-drunken father to kill the clergyman. Again the minister calms him by kind words. In the meantime the little girl meets her "rival" and learns that she is the minister's sister. She hurries to him, asks his forgiveness, and later the father, a changed and better man, gives his daughter in marriage to the minister.

Universal Program

Animated Weekly No. 140—NOVEMBER 11.—Gifts for Europe leaving San Francisco; disposing of the apple crop in the northwest which was tied up by the war; J. Warren Kerrigan signing two-year contract with Universal Film Company; Freighter Massapequa, with food for European nations, sails from Brooklyn; President Wilson and ex-President Taft as guests of honor at the annual meeting of the American Bar Association, Washington, D. C.; numerous pictures of the English, Belgian and German troops in action; leaving for the front; cartoons by Hi Numyer.

The Treasure Train—(TWO REELS)—IMP.—NOVEMBER 16.—Within the period of five years John Armstrong rises from the shiftless occupation of tramp to the position of superintendent of a railroad. He learns that the girl telegrapher in one of the small stations is to be discharged to make room for a man with influence. He makes a plea for justice at the meeting of the board of directors, telling how five years before he had been the means of saving a "treasure train" by telegraphing with his foot a warning when his hands were tied, and how this same girl had received the message and stopped the train at her station. Armstrong ends by telling the men that his object is only to see justice done as the girl will soon be his wife, and will then resign. The directors are won by the argument, and the man with the influence takes his proper place in the applicants' line.

A Bear Escape—STERLING—NOVEMBER 16.—Two country kids decide to scare the city chap who has won their sweetheart. One dresses up in a bear skin, while the other joins the group of children. A real bear happens along and nearly scares the life out of the bogus bear, who takes refuge in a tree, the real bear following. After an exciting chase the bogus bear dashes into the group of children, followed by the real bear. A stampede follows in which the girl is lost. Later, the boys meet and search for the girl. This results in their finding her feeding the bear with sugar. She then refuses to have anything to do with the boys who have proven themselves cowards.

O You Mummy—CRYSTAL—NOVEMBER 17.—The long-watched-for mummy arrives at the museum and the professor is elated. Meanwhile his niece is being entertained by her beau to whom the professor strongly objects. She has Harry climb into the davenport as her aunt and uncle enter. Harry, who is suffocating, begins to yell. Harry peeks out; the professor discovers him and orders him out of the house. The college boys play a joke on the professor. They bind Mabel and substitute her for the real mummy. Arriving at the mummy's case the professor is surprised to learn that the mummy is alive; she walks out to him and soon is making love to him. He leaves the room to get a drink. Returning, the professor is alarmed to find that his mummy has gone. In the mean time his daughter has removed her disguise and she and her friends are talking in her home. The professor's tale of his loss is soon related and Mabel discovers his mummy.

Naughty Nellie — CRYSTAL — NOVEMBER 17.—Nellie's father dislikes Charlie and refuses to allow him to court his daughter. The lovers concoct a scheme whereby Charlie will be called in as a doctor to save Nellie from the effects of some "poison." The scheme almost works, but father sees through it just in time and throws Charlie out of the house.

The Opened Shutters—(FOUR REELS)—GOLD SEAL—NOVEMBER 17.—Complete review of this subject will be found on page 660 of the November 14 issue of MOTOGRAPHY.

The Phantom Cracksman—VICTOR—NOVEMBER 17.—Mary Fuller featured. The "Phantom Cracksman" is the one subject of comment in the clubs. Brandt sneers at the stories told of his cleverness and asserts that he would like to see him rob his house. His wish is gratified twice in the following two weeks. The second time he catches a glimpse of the thief's face and is surprised to find that it is a woman. Shortly afterward he sees her again, but this time as a society woman. He sends for the police and then accosts her. She tells him her story and when the police arrive Brandt attempts to shield her, but she falls with a bullet in her lungs.

His Night Out—JOKER—NOVEMBER 18.—Ernie dreams that he is a hero, and, supported by this information, he attempts to kidnap Betty from her selfish father, who is the stumbling block in the way of their marriage. After carrying the father and colored maid out of the house, thinking each time that he is carrying Betty, Ernie decides to bring the minister to the house, which he does, and the marriage is performed correctly.

The films of all the companies are now being submitted to the National Board of Censorship and when approved by them bear official stamp which is shown above. Screen productions having been thus approved are certain to entertain an audience of any kind without offending even the most sensitive person present.

The Universal Boy in Cupid and the Fishes — IMP. — NOVEMBER 19. — Mattie visits an uncle on the Jersey coast and is speedily initiated in the fisher fleet. Everyone likes Mattie, except Ralph, who is the bully of the settlement. His attentions to Rose, Mattie's cousin, are obnoxious to her. One day Mattie sees a sailor lashed to a portion of a mast and calls the fishers and has the castaway brought ashore. The unfortunate works with the fishers and it is not long before there is a romance between himself and Rose. Ralph grows jealous. Knowing it to be a prison offence to catch fish under the legal size, he takes a very small one and puts it in his rival's basket. The fishing inspector sees the small fish and is about to place the innocent man under arrest when Mattie, who has witnessed the deed, comes forward and accuses Ralph. The indignant fishers cast him from the community. The castaway marries Rose.

Noodles' Return—STERLING—NOVEMBER 19.—Noodles' wife rules their home with an iron hand. Taking advantage of his wife's absence Noodles writes a good-bye note, then hurriedly leaves. Mrs. Noodles returns home, and finding her husband's note is heartbroken. She returns to her mother, after renting the house to a newly married couple. Noodles has gone to a saloon to drown his sorrow. After many rounds of drinks he decides that his wife is a pretty good woman after all. He starts for home and arrives after the couple have retired. Noodles attempts to pat his wife's face and finds a face with whiskers. Brown rolls over getting a whiff of Noodles' breath, sits up in bed. The two strangers face each other. A fight starts. Mrs. Noodles, having missed her train returns, just in time to get a few hard bumps but she does not mind just as long as she has her husband back.

When Their Brides Get Mixed—NESTER—NOVEMBER 20.—Lee and Bess elope; Eddie and Vic. do the same. Both couples stop at the same hotel, and are assigned to adjoining rooms. Lee goes out to attend to the baggage, leaving Bess in her room. Eddie leaves Vic. to go out and get a smoke. Bess looks for Lee and meets Eddie in the hall. They are brother and sister who have not seen each other for a year and Bess takes Eddie into her room for a chat. Lee, returning, sees them enter the room. He is about to break in when Vic. comes from her room and recognizes Lee as an old school friend. He thereupon goes into Vic.'s room and is seen by Eddie, who has just come out of his sister's room. Eddie then tries to peep through the key-hole. The house detective comes upon him and orders him downstairs. Lee comes out of Vic.'s room and rushes to his own room and is in the act of listening at the door, when the house detective orders him away. Both girls then go in search for their husbands. Eddie returns and finds his wife gone. Bess returning, meets her brother and they again go into her room, just as Eddie's wife, comes around the corner of the hall, and sees her husband enter a room with another girl. New complications arise between the two bridal couples and the house detective; both brides and bride-grooms are arrested. The police judge becomes so muddled in trying to understand the relationship of the quartette that he lets them all go.

Man to Man—Frontier—November 21.—Fred, sheriff of Tulare county, starts for the Inyo county seat to congratulate his brother Jack, who has just been elected sheriff. When he arrives he finds that Jay, the defeated candidate, has killed Jack. Investigations prove to him that it was a deliberate murder and he swears to be revenged on Jay. The manhunt ends in the desert, where the men meet, both of them weak from exhaustion, and without ammunition. A hand-to-hand struggle takes place and Fred staggers homeward victorious.

The Battle of Nations—Joker—November 21.—A comedy-drama based on the present war situation. The various countries involved are represented by young men with the exception of France, which is represented by fair Marie. She and Jake Shultz marry and are promptly disowned by both families. A year later a rosy-cheeked daughted acts as a mediator.

The Ninety Black Boxes—(Two Reels)—101 Bison—November 22.—This is the fourth and last of the "Adventures of Francois Villon." The vagabond is dispatched to the French court to confirm Louis' suspicions of a conspiracy. Villon finds that Louis is wrong in his belief, and so notifies him. He lingers at the court, and there meets the Duke and Duchess De Breuil. He and the duke quarrel and De Breuil challenges the adventurous poet to a duel. Villon dislikes the idea and suggests that their courage and skill be tested by attempting some feat that will save a life instead of destroy one. King Rene is pleased with the idea, and orders them to free the prisoners of the cruel John Balue. The duke flatly refuses so Villon accomplishes the feat himself Returning he is attracted to a camp of his vagabond friends, and stays there, but three years later the French king seeks him out, and raises him to one of the highest of the court dignitaries.

A Friend in Need—Eclair—November 22.—Josie steals a bicycle to obtain money to buy medicine for her dying mother. The messenger boy who owns the vehicle insists on a policeman's arresting her, but the officer gives the girl ten minutes' grace to return the wheel. When the time is up he enters the house and sees the girl kneeling beside her dead mother. He closes the door softly and pays the messenger himself.

Our Beloved Country—Eclair—November 22.—An interesting series of views showing the colonization of our United States and its inception up to the present date. The drawings are done in a most unique manner and besides being an educational film of the greatest value, "Our Beloved Country" will carry an appeal to every American. Various presidents of the United States with the dates of their administrations are shown and the film closes with a picture of Woodrow Wilson, and the American flag floating proudly above his head.

The Bachelor's Baby—Rex—November 22.—The love affair between Jack Hardy and Ann Farris is broken up when the latter receives a note stating that her father has committed suicide to escape paying the penalty of embezzlement. Ann sends Jack away and obtains a position as nurse. After two years the couple are brought together again by Katie O'Brien, who, to earn the fifty cents offered her for a baby by Jack, steals the one Ann is taking care of. A happy meeting takes place when Ann calls at Jack's apartments to take back the child.

Feature Programs

Alco

Rip Van Winkle—Rolfe Photoplay Corporation (Five Reels) November 9.—The familiar story of Rip Van Winkle's twenty year nap, as told by Washington

Irving in his "The Papers of Diedrich Knickerbocker;" with Joseph Jefferson in the role of Rip. See review on page 706.

Box Office

The Dream of Loco Juan—Balboa (Two Reels) November 17.—Loco Juan, a peon wood-chopper, is befriended by Carmincita, a flower girl, when he incurs the ill favor of Senor Dominquez. Juan, falling asleep, dreams that a fairy transforms him into a dashing hero, and in this guise he foils the plan of Senor Dominquez to abduct Carmincita. After a spectacular knife fight, he, himself, carries Carmincita away to marry her. Awakening from his dream, Juan discovers that he is still the half-witted wood-chopper, lying dreaming in the wildwood. Dorothy Davenport and Henry King featured.

The Vengeance of the Flames—White Star—November 17.—Sylvia accidentally shoots Wilder, and takes him to her home to dress his wound. A love affair develops, but Sylvia's father orders Wilder from the house, and commands his daughter to marry one of her own race. Batise, loves Sylvia, though, unknown to her father, he is a smuggler, and when he is chased to Sylvia's home by the police, and the shock kills the girl's father, he hides the note left by her father, telling her that she may now marry Wilder, and in its place leaves a note demanding that she marry him. Sylvia and Batise are married, though later the husband becomes infatuated with Yeta, and proves unfaithful to Sylvia. Wilder, now a member of the mounted police, eventually discovers Batise's falseness, and is on his way to tell Sylvia of it, when he discovers that she has given birth to a child. Wilder then seeks Batise, and finds him with Yeta. With difficulty he induces him to return to Sylvia, and is forestalled by Yeta, who offers Sylvia money to leave the country. Sylvia scuffles with Yeta, knocking over the coal oil stove, and setting fire to the cabin. Wilder rescues Sylvia from the flames, and Yeta, seeing the fire from a distance, goes to save Sylvia, but is overcome in the fire. Batise rescues Yeta, thinking it Sylvia, but both die from their burns, and Sylvia, at last, reclaims Wilder, the man she loves. Nan Christy, Fred Whitman and Madalene Pardee featured.

Eclectic

The Fireman and the Girl—Pathe (Three Parts).—Thurlow Bergen and Elsie Esmond, the popular leads of the Wharton, Inc., company, are here seen in a picture entirely different but no less interesting than in others in which they have appeared. Drama, light comedy, and melodrama are appropriately distributed throughout the picture, and are enlivened here and there with thrills and views of wonderful mountain scenery. The big secene is that of the fight in which Larry and Jim, rolling, tumbling, and fighting continuously are carried through the rapids. The story begins with Larry's visit to the mountains where he meets Sarah Lane. They become quite chummy and their unconcealed admiration for one another irritates Jim who is in love with the girl, himself. The lovers are harassed by Jim and his father, but finally they elope.

Here the story really ends, but the picture continues for a hundred feet or so with some comedy scenes that are not of vital interest or a part of the story.

The Quest of the Sacred Gem—Eclectic (Four Reels).—Edward Harding, visiting a friend in the city of Barrnipore, hears of a religious festival to be held in the temple that night, before a stone god in whose forehead is a wonderful diamond. That night he secures the jewel, eludes a Hindoo who sees him leaving the temple, and escapes. The Scene from the Eclectic's "The Crown of Richard III.

Hindoos follow him to America and kill him, as he lies in his berth on a Pullman sleeper, though one of them plunges to his death from the speeding train. May Rowland, Harding's niece, is willed the jewel and, later, at a party given to celebrate her engagement to Joe Marsden, Joe is hypnotized by a Hindoo juggler and compelled to steal the jewel from May's room. Coming from the room, Joe is himself robbed of the jewel by a fellow guest and May, thinking him a thief, breaks the engagement. A celebrated detective and his shrewd office boy eventually solve the mystery and the Hindoos again secure the jewel and return to their native land. Carles Arling and Edna Mayo featured.

Whiffles' Nightmare — ECLECTIC. — A comedy featuring M. Prince, in a dual role, that of two brothers. Some remarkable bits of double exposure are shown and there is plenty of fun.

Cupid's Pranks — ECLECTIC. — Ruth's mother likes Mr. Todilike, a sissy, Ruth's father likes Mr. Colfeat, extremely dignified, and the girl likes neither. When the two suitors attempt to court Ruth, a miniature war results and Ruth takes advantage of the fracas to elope with Jack, the man she really loves.

Max in a Difficult Position—ECLECTIC. —Max, with a rip in his trousers, is much embarrassed at a party he attends, though by use of chairs, tables, trays and his sweetheart's fan he is able to spend the evening without discovery by the others.

General Special

The Woman in Black—BIOGRAPH—KLAW & ERLANGER (FOUR REELS.—To save her father from suicide and disgrace, Stella Everett consents to marry Robert Crane, a wealthy politician, and breaks her engagement with Frank Mansfield, Crane's rival for congressional honors. Crane has ruined a young gypsy girl named Mary, and her mother, Zenda, known as the Woman in Black, seeks him to avenge the wrong. Chancing to see a campaign poster bearing Crane's picture, she plunges a dagger into it, as Mansfield passes by. Puzzled by her actions, he learns her story, and brings the two gypsies to Stella who is to marry Crane the next day. Everett, hearing the facts, is about to call the marriage off, when the Woman in Black suggests another way. The marriage takes place, and Crane, lifting his bride's veil, uncovers the face of Mary, the girl he wronged. Zenda buries the dagger in his heart. Mansfield is elected to office and marries Stella.

The Story of the Blood Red Rose—SELIG (THREE REELS) NOVEMBER 11.—A story of the seventeenth century in which Kathlyn Williams appears as Godiva, a beautiful peasant girl with whom the king is in love, and Wheeler Oakman enacts the part of Paulo, her huntsman lover. When Godiva is carried away by the king to his castle, she uses a magic powder given her by a witch and is turned into a white rose which falls into the waiting hands of her lover, who is confined in a dungeon of the castle. Later when the lover escapes and after killing the king, is wounded by an arrow and his life's blood stains the rose blood red. This part of the picture is hand tinted and exceedingly pretty. See review on page 692, this issue.

Stonewall Jackson's Way — LUBIN (THREE REELS).—When Stonewall Jackson arrives in Virginia, among his officers are Colonel Bradley and Captains Robert Randolph and Roderick Hilton, the father and suitors of Louise Bradley. Louise loves Robert, until Roderick resorts to a trick which turns her against him. When Quantrell, the guerilla, attacks the Bradley home, wounding the colonel, and burning the house, both Robert and Roderick beg to go to her rescue, but Jackson will not permit them to do so. Roderick, in a Union uniform, manages to save Louise in the guerilla camp, and then is captured, returning to the Confederate camp, where he is arrested and sentenced to reduction to the ranks. Jackson retreats, and saves his command by a forced march through the snow, in which Roderick and Robert fall, all but exhausted. Returning by a round-about way, they rout the federal troops and are both wounded, and picked up by servants of Louise. The girl comes upon her two lovers, and Roderick, ere he dies, confesses his miserable trick, thus restoring Robert to his rightful place in Louise's affections.

Kinetophote

The Spirit of the Poppy—KINETOPHOTE (SIX REELS).—Stephen Ford, a successful artist engages a model to pose for him, and through hysteria caused by morphine, which an unscrupulous physician has placed in her medicine, and incited by Jack Murray, a friend of Ford's, the semi-invalid wife accuses the artist of loving his model. The model, herself a drug fiend, induces the artist to try and forget his troubles by taking heroin, a powerful drug. The physician gives the wife an injection of morphine to quiet her and in time she acquires a desire for the drug herself. Husband and wife soon become slaves to their drug, the home is abandoned and, after a separation, Ford becomes connected with a gang of opium smugglers and his wife sinks lower and lower and eventually becomes a thief, in order to buy the drug. In the end, fate brings husband and wife together, the former being pursued by the police and the latter nearing death's door. The wife dies in an effort to shield her husband and the former artist, in a mad delirum, falls to his death, together with the model who first induced him to use the drug. Edward Mackay, Anna Rose and William Dunn featured.

The Span of Life—KINETOPHOTE (FOUR REELS).—Dunstan Leech, a gambler, plans to marry his mother's ward, Kate Heathcote. Kate is in love with Richard Blunt, the tutor of Leech's crippled half-brother, Cecil. Dunstan injects morphine into some grapes intended for Cecil, killing him. Mrs. Jelf, Leech's mother, determines to ruin Blunt by accusing him of robbery, but the plot fails, and Blunt leaves. While visiting a lighthouse, Blunt is trapped by Leech, and all but killed, when an up-set lamp sets fire to the structure. Blunt urges Kate to immediate marriage, and they depart for the diamond mines of South Africa, accompanied by three ex-acrobats. Leech follows, and with a band of Arabs, abducts Kate and her child. All are rescued by Blunt, and when on the point of recapture, the acrobats form a human bridge by throwing their bodies across a chasm, and permitting Kate to walk over them. Kate believing Blunt dead, returns to England, where she meets Leech's mother, who gives her a silver box. Leach learns of her possession of the box and tries to steal it. Opening it, he finds it to contain a hypodermic needle, left in the grapes years before, and his cry brings Blunt, now returned to England, to the room, but before Blunt can prevent it, Leech takes an over-dose of morphine and dies.

The Coming Power — KINETOPHOTE (FOUR REELS).—Frank Norman is elected candidate for governor on the Radical ticket. Carter, a financier, plots to control the actions of Norman, but without success. Vera, the daughter of Carter's tool, who loves Norman, warns him against his enemies. Carter arranges a frame-up by which Norman is accused of shooting a gangster in a saloon. Vera and Norman's political manager reach the gangster in the hospital, and obtain a statement exonerating Norman. Carter is exposed, and dies of heart failure, while Norman is elected governor, and becomes the husband of Vera.

The Little Jewess — KINETOPHOTE (THREE REELS.)—Isaac Zangwill sails with Sarah, his wife, and daughter for America. A storm wrecks the ship, and the daughter is tied to the mast and cast overboard, while the mother leaps after the child in the water. Isaac is picked up by the yacht of Stern, a millionaire Jew, and taken to Paris, while the wife and daughter journey to America, believing Isaac dead. Zangwill prospers under Stern's friendship, and is made Paris manager of his jewel shop, but his failing eye-sight necessitates rest, and he goes to America. Meanwhile Sarah and Rebecca in New York, cause the arrest of Jim Dayton and Eva Lumley, two diamond crooks, who endeavor to rob Zangwill upon his arrival in America. The girl by palming herself off as Rebecca, his daughter, puts a sleeping powder in his wine. The real Rebecca appears at this critical moment, and, eventually, not only brings about the capture of the crooks, but restores Isaac to his wife, her mother.

Paramount

The Man From Mexico—FAMOUS PLAYERS—(Five reels) November 9. The famous farce comedy with John Barrymore in the leading role. Clementina Fitzhew decides to spend a night with her mother, but, overhearing her husband planning a gay time at a cafe with his friend, Majors, she determines to follow. Fitzhew and Majors narrowly escape arrest when the cafe is raided, but later are pinched after a row with the cabman and given thirty days "on the Island." In order to account for his absence, Fitzhew tells his wife, who he is permitted to see, that he is going to Mexico for a month. His wife, not wishing him to know of her own escape in the raid, is with difficulty restrained from going with him. Fitzhew's adventures on the Island and his return at the end of his sentence in a Mexican costume, his getting into more tangles, and cleverly getting out again; and his hoodwinking Clementina to the end, furnish the funniest finish to one of the funniest farces ever written.

Ready Money—LASKEY (FIVE REELS) NOVEMBER 5.—Stephen Baird and Mike

Riordan set out from Gallup in search of gold. Discovering the abandoned Skyrocket mine, Steve buys it for thirty thousand dollars, paying ten thousand dollars down, and leaving for New York to secure the balance. James Morgan, owner of an adjoining mine, discovers a vien that leads toward the Skyrocket property. Steve, in New York, interests Jackson Ives in the mines, and the latter takes fifty thousand dollars worth of stock. On New Year's night, Grace Tyler another of Steve's friends, visits his apartment, and seeing him with the fifty thousand dollars in bills, believes he has struck it rich and floods him with checks for stock in the mine. Ives is suspected by the government of being a counterfeiter and the secret service men try to obtain some of his "phoney" money, but Steve slides the bills into an envelope, which he addresses to Grace and drops down the mail chute, thus foiling the sleuths. Soon word arrives from the west, that Morgan, hoping to destroy the Skyrocket, had caused an explosion there, which uncovered a huge vein of gold and made Mike and Steve multi-millionaires.

Syndicate

The "Million Dollar Mystery"—Thanhouser (Episode 21) (Two Reels).—This reel is marked by photos of a number of Washington celebrities, and views of the Broadway Rose Gardens. The "papers," which have formed such an important item in the story, pass rapidly from the hands of one character to another in this installment, but eventually are regained by Jones, the butler, after an exciting automobile chase across country, and the escape of Braine by leaping from a high bridge into the river. See review on page 654, issue Nov. 14. N.G.C.

Warners

Everyman—Warners (Two Reels).—Constance Crawley and Arthur Maud in a morality play. Everyman is summoned to appear before his Maker, and asks permission to bring a friend. Though he seeks out all his various haunts, he is unable to find a real friend, who will accompany him into the hereafter. At last he visits Piety, and, accompanied by the angel of Piety, then ascends to the final judgment.

Miscellaneous

A Strange Adventure—Eaco (Three Reels).—Edwin Burbank, becoming suddenly wealthy, moves to the city. Four years later, Alice, his wife, is taken ill and ordered to Italy. Burbank converts all his possessions into cash and leaves for his attorney's to get the money. "Eddie" Balfour, who has learned of Burbank's mission, secures the funds and later dopes him. Quinn, a detective, observes the crooks and the latter discovering this, leave Burbank alone and and exit into the cafe. Burbank, having regained consciousness, struggles out into the street and is pushed into a taxicab by a strange woman. Next morning he awakens in an unfamiliar room with a revolver in his hand and, later, is horrified to discover a murdered man in the same apartment. The wife of the murdered man accuses Burbank of the crime and secures from him all the funds he has on his person. Burbank's wife, nervous because of his absence, summons Quinn, the detective, who locates her husband and arrests the crooks. Edwin August featured.

A Double Haul—Eaco (Three Reels).—Edwin August, a millionaire detective, neglects his former sweetheart, Mabel Darnell, for Sylvia Hale, with whom he is infatuated. While working on a counterfeiting case with his partner, Detective Rogers, Edwin is summoned to investigate the murder of John Graham, though his only clue is a set of finger prints. Disguising himself as a crook, Edwin gains entrance to the den of the counterfeiters, where he is surprised to find Sylvia Hale. Rogers climbs along a clothes-line, seven stories in the air, to the den and obtains entrance just as Edwin is about to be killed. The two overpower the counterfeiters and prove that the finger prints found in the Graham murder mystery were made by Sylvia Hale. Edwin August featured.

A Victim of War—Benned (Four Reels).—Maurice, an army aviator, proposes to Helen Berker, who is in love with and loved by Ivan Warner, an officer of the country with which they are at war. Ivan persuades Helen to elope with him, when war is finally declared, and after many exciting adventures they cross the boundary line, and are married in a little village, and when the pursuing cavalry charge upon the village, Ivan and his bride escape by an underground passage. Running into the enemy, Helen is arrested as a spy and Ivan is left for dead. Maurice, learning Helen is a prisoner, arrives to rescue her, and the two depart in his aeroplane. Ivan, rejoining his men, discovers the aeroplane above him and, not knowing it contains his wife, orders his men to fire upon it. In the wreckage, he finds Helen, a victim of war.

Tillie's Punctured Romance—Keystone (Six Reels).—An uproariously funny picture in which Marie Dressler, Charlie Chaplin and Mabel Normand are featured. Charlie discovers that Tillie's father has a bank roll. He induces her to get the money and accompany him to the city, where he shakes her for Mabel, his city girl. Tillie goes to work in a restaurant, but Charlie learns she is an heiress, and returns to her, dragging her to the minister's where they are married. Then he breaks the news of her fortune, and the two begin life in a swell city home. Eventually Tillie discovers her fortune is all a mistake, when Charlie immediately deserts her, and she returns to the farm.

Called Back—Cosmofotofilm (Four Reels).—Gilbert Vaughan, blind, one night loses himself, and thinking he is returning to him own home, enters the house of Dr. Ceneri, just as Macari, a conspirator, stabs and kills Anthony, a nephew of Dr. Ceneri. Pauline, Anthony's sister singing in the next room loses her mind as a result of the crime. Vaughan's blindness is discovered, and though he was present when the murder was committed, they let him depart. Two years later, his sight restored, he meets Pauline in a European cathedral and falls in love with her. He marries her ere he discovers the loss of her mind, and later he is led by her to the room in which the murder was committeed where, by holding her hand, he obtains a clear vision of the deed itself and thus locates the murderer of her brother. Eventually Pauline's mind is restored, and the two live happily ever afterward.

Monsieur Lecoq—Leading Players—(Three reels). The Duke of Sairmuse weds Blanche Courtleigh and soon afterwards she is blackmailed by a band of ruffians, who threaten to tell her husband that her brother is a convict. When Blanche goes to meet the blackmailers, her husband follows and in a fight with them saves his wife and holds off the police until she escapes. Monsieur Lecoq, the famous detective, captures the duke, but cannot learn his identity. Hoping to discover his prisoner's name, Lecoq releases the duke and follows him home, but the duke's servant, Otto, holds Lecoq at the door until his master changes his clothes and appears in his natural guise. Baffled, Lecoq departs. Later, after the duke has discharged Otto, Lecoq disguises himself as the latter and, eventually, learns the duke's identity. Thus the reputation of the great detective is vindicated and he and the duke become fast friends.

The Ordeal—Life-Photo—(Five reels). A picture which shows a new phase of war,—one not recorded in history. At the opening of war, Jean, in love with Helene, hesitates to enlist and that night dreams that he has volunteered and gone to the front. He and a company of soldiers become separated from the main command and in an effort to reach the general, Jean falls into the enemy's hands and is questioned as to the whereabouts of his company. When he refuses to reply, the general has Jean's mother, sister and sweetheart shot before his eyes, but he still refuses to tell and is thrust into a dungeon. In the meantime his comrades rout the enemy and rescues Jean. It is at this point that he wakens, to realize that his "ordeal" was only a dream. See review on page 632, issue of Nov. 7.

Mary Jane's Burglar—Holland Film. A delightful conception of the struggles of a young country girl to secure recognition in the city in a peculiar manner. How she overcomes some of these obstacles and captures a burglar is not only very interesting but in spots very humorous. Maude Fealey and Tom MacEvoy featured.

It Might Have Been Worse—Holland. This is the story of a young married couple's struggles which grows more and more amusing with each foot of its length. Maude Fealey featured.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brevities of the Business

Was it not Bulwer Lytton who said: "In the lexicon of youth, which fate reserves for a bright manhood, there is no such word as—fail?" We are under the impression that it was, yet have no time to verify it. The reason that is quoted here is to drive home the fact that in the lexicon of his 26 years of youth, W. Ray Johnston knows not the word "fail." He has made a success of everything his hands have touched, and it seems incredible to find one of his years holding the high positions of assistant treasurer of the Syndicate Film Corporation of New York, distributors of Thanhouser's "The Million Dollar Mystery; secretary and director of the Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation, distributors of the New Thanhouser serial, "Zudora"; secretary treasurer and director of the "Big Productions Film Corporation of New York, which distributes all of the Thanhouser "big" features; secretary-treasurer and director of "Beating Back," the feature film picturizing the life of Al Jennings, a former notorious Oklahoma outlaw, and president of the North Avenue theater, New Rochelle, N. Y. These offices do not take in all of Mr. Johnston's activities, however. Recently, he said, that outside of the above, he had nothing to do but work. Notice, you youthful readers, that Mr. Johnston said work. That is the secret of his success. He works. His time is limited only by the face of the clock swinging around from 12 to 12. He never puts off 'til tomorrow what should be done today. He was born on January 2, 1888. His father was a prosperous furniture merchant, and Ray is one of a family of six, with three brothers and two sisters completing the family circle. His mother was laid at rest when Ray was seven, but the family, three years before that time, removed to Janesville, Iowa, where Ray graduated from the Janesville high school. In September, 1908, when he was 20, he went to Waterloo College of Commerce, at Iowa City and the following year graduated therefrom, during his year at college working morning and evening as mailing clerk for the Waterloo Daily Reporter. Upon graduation he accepted the position to the circulation manager of the paper, but resigned a year later to become secretrary to the general manager of the Citizens' Gas and Electric Company in Waterloo, which position he held until May, 1911, when he became cashier of the Iowa Mausoleum Company, a half-million dollar corporation at Waterloo. His great capacity for work did not go unnoticed, for in December of that year he was promoted to secretary of the concern and became sales manager with 18 salesmen under him. This position he held until January of this year (1914), and through his connection with the Mausoleum Company he became identified with the Vaughn Land Company, where he held the office of vice-president. He was also treasurer of the Western Realty and Investment Corporation. In January, through Dr. Shallenberger, now president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, he was introduced to the late lamented Charles Jackson Hite, the then president, and at Mr. Hite's suggestion Ray accepted the position of auditor of the Thanhouser company, and the following month was made confidential secretary to Mr. Hite, which position he held at the time of Mr. Hite's tragic death. Connection with Mr. Hite gave Mr. Johnston the opportunity the opportunity he sought to display his remarkable ability in mathematical lines. and Mr. Hite was quick to recognize it. Hence the perfect harmony that existed betwen them, and his loss has been greatly felt by Mr. Johnston, who was also the dead president's brother-in-law, because on May 16, this year, Mr. Johnston was married to Miss Violet Hite, Mr. Hite's sister.

The Cosmos Feature Film Company posters on the film featuring Mrs. Thomas Whiffen have quality as their first and main requisite.

Joseph Gollomb, who is a graduate of C. C. N. Y. and a master of arts of Columbia University, comes from the editorial staff of the New York Evening Mail to the eastern scenario department of the Universal. He was dramatic critic of the New York Call for three years and has been on the editorial staffs of the Evening World and several other New York publications, as well as special writer for the Evening Post and the Times.

George Baker, the Vitagraph director has always been a stickler on detail in his productions. He is always anxious to give a touch of realism to his scenes with a touch of nature. He, therefore secured several trained fleas to introduce in one of his scenes, but unfortunately he took them home with him for safe keeping. His house is now overrun with the pests and George looks as if he had been trying to penetrate a barbed wire fence, and it is almost impossible for him to stand still while talking to anybody, without scratching himself. He now has some pronounced views on fleas.

It will be gratifying news to the friends of Harry Lambart, the Vitagraph director, to know that he has returned from the Catskill mountains, very much improved in health; and it will not be many days before he is at work again at the Vitagraph studios.

Lucius Henderson, the new Imp director, has had a wide and varied theatrical experience. Coming, as he does from the ranks of the legitimate, where he spent many years treading the boards in many characters, he combines a fine sense of the true drama with his experience as a director of motion pictures.

Breaking all former records in big box office receipts at the Columbia theater in Long Beach, California, the Balboa Amusement Producing Company's four-reel feature film, "A Will o' the Wisp," was shown at the playhouse named last Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Cleo Madison, of "Trey o' Hearts" fame, has returned from her well-earned week's vacation and, apparently in better health and spirits than she has been for a long time, announces that she is again ready to take up her work as leading lady with the Gold Seal company under Mr. Lucas' direction.

The topic of greatest interest from a market standpoint in the last two weeks is the remarkable jump from 105 bid to 140 bid on Syndicate Film Corporation. It is now understood that if this company liquidated its holdings today it could pay out on an approximate basis of $200 per share for the preferred stock and also $200 for the common. This stock has surpassed all records in quick appreciation.

The other item of like import is the demand for Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation—the producers of "Zudora" serial, which will be released on November 23. The common stock is in strong demand, with none of it offered under 70. The bookings as of November 7 exceeded $400,000.

It is a noteworthy fact that, while other classes of securities have been utterly stagnant, there has always been life in the motion picture stocks, with active trading in practically all of the securities above quoted, except American Film Company, which it seems impossible to secure.

New York Motion Picture Corporation still remains at 60, and, while the opinion coming from headquarters would indicate that no dividends will be resumed until the financial world clears considerably more than it has up to the present time, we venture the opinion that this company will resume dividend operations before the end of January, 1915.

If "Constant Reader" of Philadelphia will refer to the July 25 issue of Motography she will find therein an interview with James Kirkwood.

The Universal Film Manufacturing has announced the signing of a new contract with Jack Kerrigan of the Kerrigan-Victor company, which covers a period of two years. He is at present working on a series by Louis Joseph Vance, called "Terrence O'Rourke" which promises to overshadow all the other work he has done since his connection with the company.

Beverly Bayne narrowly escaped death when attacked by a deadly copper head snake while taking a scene for the Essanay production "Every Inch a King," in the woods near Niles Center, Ill. She was skirting around some dense underbrush when she disturbed the snake which struck at her. Luckily she had on heavy riding boots and the fangs were buried in the leather, doing her no injury. She struck the reptile with her riding whip, stunning it. Francis X. Bushman and E. H. Calvert, who were near, rushed to her aid and killed the snake.

Miss Violet Mersereau, the charming Imp actress, for the benefit of her fans recently delivered two addresses. The first was at the Harlem Opera House, New York, and the second at Keith's Jersey City theater. Both were received with wild ovations. At the same time, "In Self Defence," a picture in which she played the lead, was exhibited.

A picturization of Cyrus Townsend Brady's dramatic story of the far-reaching influence of a child, "The Little Angel of Canyon Creek," adapted for the screen from the novel of the same name by Col. Jasper Ewing Brady, and the equally interesting drama of life, "Two Women," written by James Oliver Curwood, are the feature pictures of the current program at the Vitagraph theater and which begin their second week on Monday, Nov. 9.

For the first time in several months clever Lillian Gish is to be seen in a film play, in "The Tear That Burned," a Majestic-Mutual drama produced by Jack O'Brien at the Mutual studios in Los Angeles. Mrs. Gish has been taking a prominent part in D. W. Griffith's feature production, "The Clansman," but with the near completion of this picture she is able to return to the Majestic-Mutual two reel features for a time.

Leon Bamberger, who has been doing special work for the Buffalo branch of the World Film Corporation, has been transferred to the Indianapolis office to do similar work in connection with that branch.

In the two-act Amercian Film Manufacturing Company feature, "In the Candlelight," Vivian Rich shows her ability as a clay molder. Making funny faces out of clay is one of Miss Rich's pastimes.

By the side of Mona Darkfeather's new home in Hollywood is a vacant lot and at the back of the bungalow is a stable in which is housed Comanche, Mona's pinto pony. Every morning Mona dons overalls and lets Comanche loose; then a wild game ensues. Mona chases Comanche and he chases her with his mouth open, showing a formidable set of teeth. Comanche is for all the world like a big piebald dog and both of the "children" enjoy themselves immensely.

Eddie Lyons has shown his quality as a director during the absence of Al E. Christie and has put on a Nestor comedy, "Love, Luck and Smallpox," with himself, Lee Moran and Vicky Forde in the leads.

James Durkin, Thanhouser director, has completed a Christmas heart interest picture called "Adventures of a Good Fellow." It carries home a lesson of cheerful giving.

Harrish Ingraham is one of the latest of players to enlist under the Eaco Films' banner. Mr. Ingraham before entering pictures had a number of stock engagements throughout the West. He has done quite a good bit of journalistic work and is the author of many successful vaudeville acts. Before joining Eaco he was with Pathe and previous to that was leading man and scenario editor for the Whitman Feature Film Company.

"The Rosary" has added another week's growth to its interesting structure. The great Selig feature is growing more fascinating as Director Colin Campbell's all-star company unfolds the story for film purposes. Unusual sets characterize a portion of this production.

Nothing short of a little German band could have produced the rending discordance which smote hard upon the quietude of a Santa Barbara Cal., morning. Sure enough investigation proved it to be a true to type one drafted from the "Flying A" forces, escorting "Queenie" up State Street while the camera man shot scenes for "When Queenie Came Back," a "Beauty" release.

Reviewed By Charles R. Condon

A QUEST of any kind, if sprinkled with the right spirit of adventure, and a sufficient number of contradictory developments to keep up the suspense and enliven the action, always meets with an appreciative response from the average spectator. The four-part Pathe-American drama, "The Quest of the Sacred Gem," comes within these qualifications, and adds to them by being staged in a most realistic and impressive manner.

Pathe features in the past have been noted for their stupendous interior settings, and this one adds to the record by possessing a temple scene that is a masterpiece in studio construction. It represents an East Indian house of worship, and is complete in every detail, even to the half-naked, white-haired beggars who adorn the foot of each of the temple's enormous columns. Other interiors that deserve special mention are those of the various rooms in the Rowland mansion. Over-furnishing is carefully avoided in these scenes, and the result is suggestive of a magnificent home fitted out with unusually good taste and judgment.

Charles Arling occupies the center of the limelight in the role of David Harding at the opening of the story, but the Hindu's vengeance overtakes him, and he is succeeded by William Rosell's characterization of Joe Marsden, the young fellow whose addiction to somnambulism nearly proves destructive to his engagement with May Rowland, which part is taken by Edna Mayo. Ernest Truex, well known both on the screen and legitimate stage, has a small but active part as the office boy sleuth.

To some the appearance of the Hindus at Harding's apartments in New York, without first showing them trailing him from India, may come as a surprise, and impress them as a gap in the line of action. But it is easily probable that they could have followed him, having seen him leave and knowing the direction he must follow to reach the boat landing, therefore the screening of the incidents of the chase would represent padding rather than necessary detail.

The sleepy city of Barrnipore one day receives a visitor in the person of an American soldier of fortune, David Harding. The young fellow's good judgment is overruled by his passion for adventure when he learns that a priceless diamond decorates the forehead of the stone god in the Hindu temple of worship, and he determines to become possessor of it. Disguised as a native he enters the temple at night, pries out the stone and is about to make away with it when he is discovered by one of the fakirs who arouses the guards with his cries.

Harding manages to escape to his rooms, changes his clothes, mounts his horse and rides away with the crowd of terror-stricken, howling Hindus at his very heels. The high priest and his assistants follow him to America, board the same train as he when he leaves New York, and, by hanging from the top of the Pullman car, kill him as he sleeps in his berth. One of the Hindus slips as the train passes over a trestle and falls to his death below. The others fail to find the stone, but learn later that it has been willed to Harding's niece, May Rowland.

The girl wears the diamond at a party given at her home in celebration of her engagement to Joe Marsden, and the Hindus, hiding on the veranda, see it. Joe becomes the victim of their plans when he answers their call, and goes out to watch them juggle. The old priest exerts his powers of hypnotism upon him, and the rest of the party come to the door just in time to break the charm. That night the Hindus approach the house, and again the priest calls his strange powers into play. Joe responds to the telepathy by rising, entering May's room, and securing the diamond.

On the way back to the room he drops the stone and it is picked up by one of the other guests who has lost heavily at cards during the evening. He pawns the jewel, and there it is traced by the detective whom the Rowlands have employed at Joe's suggestion. All this time, however, May firmly believes that Joe is voluntarily the thief, having seen him enter her room on the night of the robbery. The detective unravels the mystery and succeeds in convincing May that Joe is innocent of complicity.

god's forehead. As he mounts the altar steps he is seized with an attack of the heart, and in his agony accidentally drops the stone into the incense-pot, where it is consumed by the fire.

Famous Players "The Straight Road"

There are any number of byways and lanes into which one may turn off the Road that is Straight; and the turning point may be just anywhere, as is exemplified in the allegorical introduction with which the Famous Players' Film Company precedes its four-reel offering, "The Straight Road." There are morals, any number of them, there are realistic settings, there is interest intense and prolonged, there is a splendid climax at the end of each of the four reels, there is instanced the big love of a man for a woman—and there is Gladys Hanson in the role of this woman and William Russell in the portrayal of this man. Each contributes an exceptionally big share toward making the film well worth the booking. Arthur Hoops is third in importance in the disagreeable role of Douglas Aines, who is not only willing but anxious to lead into the byways of the Road, the woman, Moll O'Hara.

There is variety throughout the film's four reels, the story of which concerns principally Moll O'Hara, whose weakness for drink was bestowed upon her by her mother. The death of that mother offers Miss Hanson opportunity for a splendid bit of acting and she qualifies. Her small world is a disreputable tenement district with Hubbell's saloon as a center. Here

Moll is attacked by "Lazy Liz" for the supposed stealing of her lover's affection, and Big Bill acts as mediator. Then occurs the fight between Big Bill and the professional and with Big Bill's victory he wins the admiration of Moll. Ruth Thompson, settlement worker, becomes interested in Moll and with her fiance Aines procures her work. Aines attempts to collect commission from Moll in the way of affection. She loathes him. Big Bill tells of his love and Moll is happy. Then Aines forces his attention upon her again, and she determines to sacrifice appearances to undeceive Miss Thompson as to the character of Aines. She accedes to the latter's request to call, and invites Miss Thompson for the same hour. The scene which follows has the effect of undeceiving not only Miss Thompson but also Hubbell, who calls unexpectedly and Moll is cast off by both her friends.

Zudora's Second Adventure Screened

Hassan Ali and Zudora.

WONDERFUL photography, elaborate stage settings, an air of orientalism and mysticism, which prevail throughout the entire production, together with strange sliding panels, revolving doors, an iron room, the walls of which can be slid in upon themselves, make "The Mystery of the Sleeping House," which is the second adventure of Zudora, one of the most mysterious and interesting pictures that has yet been thrown on the screen.

Marguerite Snow, James Cruze and Harry Benham again are seen in the leading roles, and their work undoubtedly will make them still greater favorites with the picture-going public. Particular praise is due James Cruze for his wonderful make-up as Hassan Ali, the uncle of Zudora.

At the opening of the story, Hassan Ali, a mystic detective, is called upon by a Hindoo to solve the mystery of the sleeping house, it being explained that a certain apartment in the city is occupied by a strange group of Hindoos, who there engage in rites peculiar to their native custom and religion, and that for some strange reason, on numerous occasions, all the occupants of the apartment find themselves thrown into a strange sleep, which lasts for hours and from which they arise weakened physically and mentally.

In the house of sleepiness.

Hassan Ali and Zudora visit the apartment and find themselves being overtaken by the same sleepiness that has already overpowered the other occupants of the room. Hassan Ali realizes what is happening and escapes to the outer air, while Zudora is overcome by the strange sleep and falls prostrate to the floor.

John Storm, Zudora's sweetheart, anxious for her safety, visits the house, and arrives just as the Hindoos awake. He is made a prisoner and confined in a steel dungeon.

Zudora on awakening is told that the Hindoos have brought from India a princess of another tribe, whom they are planning to marry to their own chieftain. Zudora later discovers that Storm, her lover, is a prisoner in the Hindoos' apartment, and confined in the iron dungeon, the walls of which are so arranged that they will close in upon him and eventually crush him to death.

Making her way to the basement of the apartment, she discovers that the tribesmen whose princess has been stolen by the Hindoos above, have made their way to America and are the ones responsible for the spell of sleep that is cast over the occupants of the apartment above, this being effected by burning lotus leaves in a huge grate, the fumes being carried by pipes upstairs and emitted through the nostrils of an idol that stands in the room above.

Zudora is constantly watched.

Zudora makes known the plight of her lover and calls upon the Indian tribesmen for assistance, promising to return their princess to them if they will rescue her lover. After many exciting adventures, the princess is returned to her tribesmen, and Storm is released from the torture chamber just as he has given up all hope of being rescued alive. Confined in the narrow steel chamber he had seen the walls slowly closing in on him, and with the sweat pouring from every pore, had realized that he was helpless to prevent himself from being crushed to death. Weak and faint from the experience through which he had passed, he staggered out into the larger room, when Zudora ordered the torture chamber opened, and after regaining some of his shattered nerve he escorted his sweetheart to her home.

Their arrival came as a great surprise to Hassan Ali for he believed that Zudora would be strangled by the deadly fumes of the burning lotus leaves, while he was certain Storm could never escape from the steel prison.

Clara Kimball Young Honored

Clara Kimball Young enjoys the distinction of being the first actress to receive special attention from a Washington newspaper. In a recent issue of the Washington Post there appeared a three-column cut of Clara Kimball Young. This is the first time in the history of that publication that a cut larger than a double column one has been used of an actor or actress. Remembering that Maude Adams, Forbes Robertson, Ethel Barrymore, and other notables of the mimic world appear from time to time in the Capitol city, the friends of Miss Young are delighted that she has the distinction of having received more attention than any other star. The cut appeared in the city section and was used to illustrate the Post's article on the Washington exhibitors' ball, the grand march of which was led by Miss Young and Earl Williams. During November she will be seen at three exhibitors' balls and in every instance has been asked to lead the grand march. Her first picture to be released through the World Film Corporation is "Lola," which has been made from Owen Davis' play of the same name. The release date is November 23.

Horsley Buys Bostock's Animal Show

Frank C. Bostock's large collection of trained wild animals returned to America November 18, on the Atlantic Transport liner Minnewaska, to appear in motion pictures for David Horsley. While the exact purchase price is not known it may be definitely stated to be in excess of $100,000.

The European war is directly responsible for Mr. Horsley being able to secure this collection of trained animals. When Frank C. Bostock, the animal king, died, the animals passed to Mrs. Bostock. They were quartered in London and, a few weeks ago, Mrs. Bostock, fearing a Zeppelin raid by which she would lose all the animals, sent Harry E. Tudor, personal representative of Mr. Bostock for twelve years, to America to dispose of the animals. Mr. Horsley outbid all other purchasers and the Bostock's animal players will be seen in pictures made by him. The productions which will be special releases, will comprise single-reel pictures, a serial and numerous features.

Bosworth's New Affiliation

Carl H. Pierce, eastern representative of Bosworth, Inc., was advised last week that John Cort has agreed that for a period of five years he will turn over to the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company the exclusive rights to all his stars and plays. In addition to this it is expected he will materially benefit the company with his influence and power in any way desired. Special films can be booked over the entire Cort circuit from coast to coast. Oliver Morosco is also pledged to turn over all his successes, when they have finished touring, so that all of the Morosco stars and plays will be available for the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company. The special significance of all this, insofar as Mr. Pierce of Bosworth, Inc., is concerned, lies in the fact that the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company is affiliated with Bosworth.

Richard Tucker has returned to the Edison Company, after a short stay in Philadelphia, where he was leading man with the American Theater stock company.

$1,000,000 Mystery Ends

Episode number twenty-two of Thanhouser's mystery serial, entitled "The Million Dollar Mystery," is the end of the story, insofar as the film manufacturer goes with it. Episode number twenty-three, which contains the solution of the mystery, will be released at a date to be announced later, and will be made from the best solution submitted by those who have seen the pictures. In other words, the party submitting the best solution of the mystery, and winning the $10,000 prize, will have his solution produced in pictures as episode number twenty-three.

Many surprises are to be found in the last installment of the serial, which has indeed become a mystery of the deepest sort. The many film fans who were of the opinion that Jones, the butler, was in reality the missing Hargreaves, will be amazed to discover in episode twenty-two that Hargreaves returns home and enters his library to confront Jones and thank him for the services he has rendered. The two men shake hands, and one is then easily able to understand the confusion which may have arisen over their identities, for they are as alike as two peas, if one considers that Jones is clean shaven, while Hargreaves wears a beard.

The last installment begins with the discovery by Jones and Norton of the cave meeting place of the conspirators, and their determination to call in officers of the law in helping them round up the criminal band.

The conspirators make one last attempt to kidnap Norton, but he accidentally learns of his danger, and has the chauffeur arrested who is seeking to abduct him. Then, accompanied by Jones and a squad of policemen, the cave is raided and the conspirators are arrested.

Countess Olga and Braine boldly visit the Hargreaves mansion, after they learn that Hargreaves himself has returned, but the fortunate arrival of Norton and several officers of the law result in the death of Braine and the capture of the countess.

Hargreaves, after the event is all over, turns to Florence and remarks that he can now tell her the story of his disappearance and the hiding place of the fortune. With this sub-title the story ends, and it is up to the public to solve the mystery. N. G. C.

Thanhouser's "Own Country" Pictures

Prompt to realize the importance of the "see our own country" sentiment sweeping the United States with an impetus given by disturbed conditions abroad, the Thanhouser management will soon release six one-reel scenic-dramas, showing the wonders of the greatest of federal reservations—Yellowstone National Park.

These pictures were taken with the express authority of the Hon. Franklin K. Lane, secretary of the interior, who declared the project "one of the greatest educational uses to which the motion picture has thus far been applied." The result is that the Thanhouser pictures will carry to those unable to travel west, the wonders of this greatest of national parks.

Each of the films will portray some scenic wonders, as settings to stories of dramatic interest. The Thanhouser players who went to the park were given a special train by Garritt Fort, passenger traffic manager of the Union Pacific railroad, himself one of the foremost exponents of "a greater West." Mignon Anderson and Morris Foster headed the company.

An Artistically Finished Production

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

WONDERFUL camera effects are shown in the two-reel production entitled "In the Candlelight," which will be released by the American Film Manufacturing Company on Monday, November 23. While this company is always careful of the manner in which it handles tinted scenes and visions it has outdone itself in this production and, as one effect surpasses another, the spectator begins to grasp the vast possibilities of an artistically handled film.

The plot is laid in a colony of artists, apparently located in the Latin quarters of Paris and the quaint costumes and interior settings lend themselves naturally to the delicate photographic work. The exterior scenes, too, are well chosen and never once is the California background allowed to intrude upon the foreign atmosphere of the story.

Not content with having turned out a film of appeal to the artistic minds, the director has handled the story which was given him in such a manner that throughout the full two thousand feet the uninteresting moments are few and far between and several characters are drawn with such clear, bold lines that we feel we have met living persons and sympathize with them in the trouble which they encounter. The acting also is worthy of praise, especially that of Jack Richardson, erstwhile villain, who has one of the leading character roles. William Garwood, Vivian Rich and Harry Von Meter excel in their roles and the supporting cast is made up of Charlotte Burton, Josephine Ditt, Louise Lester, Harry Edmondson and Reaves Eason.

Ralph bids his mother farewell.

The quarrel between Ralph and his father.

Ralph believes Nina loves him.

As the story opens Bertran, an artist, is teaching the wife of Darby, one of his fellow-workers how to paint. Darby sees them together and his jealousy is aroused. Bertran dispels his fears at first but when the husband again sees them working side by side he thinks it is evidence enough that she is untrue to him and, taking their little daughter Marian, goes away. When his wife learns what has happened she is heartbroken and, despite all the care the faithful Bertran can give her, she passes away.

The years pass and Marian grows to be a young lady. Her father keeps her in seclusion in the country home, to which he went when he left his wife. The solitude has affected his mind and Marian lives in constant fear of him. In the artist colony of the nearby city Bertran has Ralph, a young man of wealth, as a pupil. Ralph is loved by Nina, one of the models, who seeks only his money and cares nothing for him. One day while riding through the country Ralph meets Marian, who has an artist's instinct and crudely attempts to model clay. He becomes interested in the girl, though his attention to one poorer than himself lead to a quarrel with his father. In the candlelight he says good bye to his mother and leaves home.

A short time later Darby, in a fit of rage, chastises Marian and she flees from home, going to the artists' colony, where she again meets Ralph, who now lives there. He takes her to Bertran to receive instructions and the latter notices in her, the resemblance of her mother. Her presence causes a quarrel between Nina and Ralph and the former at once transferres her attentions to another student. Darby comes to the city and manages to kidnap Marian and take her back to their home, where he locks her in her room.

Bertran and Ralph start a search for Marian and the young student reaches Darby's home at nightfall, Bertran having taken another route. He secures lodgings for the night, little knowing that Darby plans to kill him for the trouble he has caused him by encouraging Marian to study art. Midnight arrives and Darby steals upstairs to murder Ralph. Marian sees him creeping toward the room through the key-hole of her door and, becoming desperate, breaks down the door with a chair. Darby struggles with her until Ralph, who has been awakened by the noise, interferes. The two men then lock in a death struggle, which is ended by the timely arrival of Bertran.

The man who believes the other one stole his wife faces Bertran in rage, but the quiet manner of the artist calms him and he listens while his friend tells him of the mistake he made and how it killed his wife. Darby bows his head as he realizes how he wronged his wife, while Ralph and Marian find happiness in each others arms.

The cast is as follows:

Ralph, an art student.....William Garwood
Darby, father of Marian.....Harry Von Meter
Bertran, co-worker with Darby.....Jack Richardson
Marian .....Vivian Rich

Pleasing Program at Vitagraph Theater

One of the most tensely interesting feature picture programs yet offered at the Vitagraph Theater in New York is now current in "The Little Angel of Canyon Creek," picturized in five parts by Colonel Jasper Ewing Brady from the novel of the same name, written by Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, LL.D., and "Two Women," a powerful drama of life, wrtiten by James Oliver Curwood and produced by Ralph W. Ince, which begin their third week at this popular Broadway photoplay house on Monday, November 16.

In adapting "The Little Angel of Canyon Creek" for the screen, Colonel Brady has retained all the salient points of the novel in logical sequence and built around them to make a screen story of wonderful power. The manners and customs of the great West of some fifty years ago are graphically visualized and are backed by a scenic environment that gives added realism to the picture. The story of "The Little Angel of Canyon Creek" is appealing and follows the fortunes of a ten-year-old orphan boy whose influence helps change a mining camp from the lawlessness characteristic of a heavy drinking, gambling, happy-go-lucky community to that of a peaceful, God-fearing town. Rollin S. Sturgeon produced the picture and was careful in selecting localities similar to those described in the book, while the cast was chosen from the pick of the Vitagraph's western stock company.

A great cast, including such well known names as Anita Stewart, Earle Williams, Julia Swayne Gordon and Harry Northrup, appear in "Two Women," the second feature picture of the Vitagraph Theater's present program. The story, while old, is the ever new one of the love of a man for a maid, the maid in this case being a nymph of the far north woods.

School Children Entertained

Henry Wadsworth Longfellow captured for all time the heart of every school boy and school girl when he wrote his immortal poem, "The Midnight Ride of Paul Revere." Edison never chose a better subject to feature, and when the announcement came to the pupils of one of New York's great public schools, situated opposite the Edison studio, that they had been invited to see this film, a cheer went up for Edison that fairly shook the school walls. When the noise had subsided it was demanded that Andy Clark, the ever popular Edison player, should "head

Selig Two Reel Psychological Drama

Reviewed by Neil C. Caward

IN "Unrest," the Selig two-reel psychological drama to be released on Monday, November 30, Thomas Santschi, Selig's leading man, has one of the best roles he has been given for some time, and works out the difficult shadings and gradations of character called for by the plot in a truly wonderful manner.

Bessie Eyton has the role of Bessie Garwood, an athletic miss, whom Professor Delmar, the eminent psychological scientist, prevails upon to assist him in effecting a cure of Tom Dean, the hero of "Unrest." Miss Eyton appears to advantage in the few scenes in which she is seen on the screen, and those who know her prowess as a water nymph will be delighted at seeing her again in bathing regalia, for of late the pictures in which she works in the surf have been few and far between.

As the story unfolds, we learn that Tom Dean, a stalwart, muscular, clean-cut and athletic looking young man, cares nothing for society and the restraint of home life, preferring the company of bowery toughs, and the rough companionship of prize fighters and the riff-raff of the underworld.

Much worried over Tom's strange mood, his father engages Professor Delmar to give Tom a special course of treatment. Professor Delmar holds the belief that Tom is atavistic and not living in the present age, but that his spirit roams in the primitive, when muscle and brawn won the way instead of refinement and intelligence.

At the earnest request of his father he returns home for a time, but within a few days is obsessed with the old longing to return to the rough friends of the underworld.

Tom rescues Bessie.

The race ends disastrously for Tom.

Professor Delmar finally arranges with Bessie Garwood, an athletic society girl, to interest Tom in wholesome sports, and Bessie, knowing Tom's interest in her racing automobile, laughingly invites him to a speed trial, in which she not only defeats him, but finally leaves him standing by his wrecked machine. This race between Bessie and Tom is splendidly shown in the picture, and as a result of the race, for the first time in his life, Tom Dean shows an interest in a member of the gentler sex.

Bessie gets her first glimpse of Tom.

Learning that Gregg, who claims the title of champion pugilist of the bowery, has spread the report that Tom has left his former haunts because he is in fear of him, Tom angrily returns and knocks out the would-be pugilist. Fearing arrest by the police, Tom flees to the beach and secures employment as a boatman there as a means of livelihood

A short time later Bessie Garwood finds him and attracts his attention by pretending to be drowning. Tom plunges into the water to rescue her, and after he has carried her through the surf and upon the beach he is amazed to have her jump up with a laugh and mock him.

He begins an acquaintance which finally ripens into love, and one day Silas Dean, Tom's father, is delighted to receive a letter from the boy, saying that his old desire for the rough side of life has been overcome, and that the cure has been effected by love, for Tom frankly confesses that he is going to marry Bessie Garwood.

Tom's father is naturally highly delighted at the change wrought in his boy by the clever girl whom Professor Delmar called on to aid him, so no doubt can exist in the minds of any who see the picture as to the sort of a reception which will await Tom and his bride when they reach home. Tom's future seems assured and the past banished forever with its state of unrest.

Selig Buffalo Picture to be Released

Seldom, if ever, has a herd of buffalos been seen on the screen which competes with the number used in the five-reel release of the Selig Polyscope Company through the special feature department of the General Film Company on November 30. It is entitled "In the Days of the Thundering Herd" and is one of the most interesting pictures, from a historical standpoint, that this reviewer has been privileged to witness for some time.

The scenes were taken on the ranch of "Pawnee Bill" in Oklahoma and all the buffaloes in the immense herd owned by this veteran of pioneer West are used in the production, as are numerous Indians, who maintain their wigwams on his ranch and who are known as "Pawnee Indians." Gilson Willets, the author, has supplied a story of exceptional merit, around which Director Colin Campbell has built up a well-nigh perfect production of the days of '49, the finished product being a real story of the West, instead of one which merely represents in a shadowy way the life of the intrepid frontiersmen.

Tom Mix assumes the leading male role and Bessie Eyton has the woman lead. While the dramatic moments are numerous and suspense is never allowed to relax throughout the entire production the spectacle furnished by the buffaloes, Indians, settlers and hunters will probably erase from the minds of those who see the film all thought of the story. The rugged country in which the scenes were taken is a fitting background for so admirable a picture of the West. It is a production handled by men and women who know the life they portray and have given great thought and care to every detail. To the person who admires the West this film will probably prove more entertaining than any book, either fiction or fact, that he has studied for the purpose of acquainting himself with the lives of the men who blazed the way into the section of our country.

The story, briefly, deals with the emigration of a group of settlers from the middle west into the virgin country, whose sole occupants were the Indians, and upon whose plains grazed the great American animal, the buffalo. During their journey the settlers are attacked by the redmen and all are killed except Tom, a mail rider and Sally, his sweetheart. They are held prisoners by the Indians but finally escape, with the aid of the chief's sister, who falls in love with Tom. After narrowly escaping death under the hoofs of a herd of buffaloes, they are recaptured and escape torture and death only by the timely arrival of a band of hunters, who put the savages to rout after a battle. The hunters then accompany Tom and Sally to their destination. C. J. C.

Can You Complete Story?

Followers of the motion picture screen will be interested in a prize contest about to be started by the New York Dramatic Mirror in collaboration with Thomas A. Edison, Inc. Mark Swan, author of the "Andy Series" and a score of other Edison photoplays, as well as successful plays for the legitimate stage, has written two-thirds of a one-reel photoplay, and The Mirror is offering a prize of $50.00 for the best completion of the story submitted by a reader, four prizes of $10 each for the next best endings, and a prize of $10 for the most suitable title. Not alone photoplaywrights, but all interested in motion pictures, have an opportunity in such a contest, since strong, original ideas are more important than technique.

The completed photoplay will be produced by Thomas A. Edison, Inc. with full credit on the screen to the contestant who supplies the prize winning ending. The contest starts November 18 and closes January 9, 1915.

"Forgiven" For Chicago Territory

The Photoplay Productions Releasing Company, 37 South Wabash avenue, Chicago is preparing to place upon the market the film production "Forgiven," or, "The Jack o' Diamonds," featuring Edwin Forsberg, who played the part of "The Jack o' Diamonds" in the stage play of "Forgiven," which has touched the hearts of the American public for years. The picture is in six parts, and is said to be a very thrilling subject. The owners of the picture are resorting to an unusual method of advertising it by means of four-hundred twenty-four sheet billboards, distributed over Chicago, supplemented by newspaper advertising. They think well of the picture, otherwise, they would not be inclined to enter into such an enormous expense as this will entail. The picture will be out November 27, and it is predicted that many thousands of people will view it during the several succeeding weeks.

"The Colonel of the Red Huzzars"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

NUMBERLESS independent principalities have been created by authors and playwrights as the backgrounds for their romances, and almost invariably the problem is that of the young American who falls in love with the princess, and, after many hardships, succeeds in overcoming the "royal blood" barrier and winning the girl for his wife.

On December 18 the Edison Company is releasing a three-reel adaptation of John Scott Reed's "The Colonel of the Red Huzzars," which deviates somewhat from the usual principality story, inasmuch as the young American ambassador turns out to be the descendant of one of the former members of the court and therefore of royal lineage.

The restoring of his father's title, however, does not remove all of the barriers between Dalberg and the Princess Dehra, with whom he is in love, but it brushes aside the greatest one, and the young fellow's gallantry more than takes care of the others. A story of this kind is pleasing only when its characters are so, for there is not enough new atmosphere in the plot to carry along its interest if the action be portrayed in a mediocre or ordinary way. In saying, then, that the picture is entertaining in the fullest sense of the word, one says all that could be said about the ability and work of its cast and director.

Richard Ridgely's instinctive eye for beauty in settings and action and his fine sense of dramatic poise are evident in the direction in every scene. Miriam Nesbitt is a captivating and queenly figure as the Princess Dehra, who is courted by the young American, Major Armand Dalberg (Robert Conness). Marc MacDermott plays the role of Archduke Lotzen; Herbert Prior that of Dalberg's secretary, Richard Courtenay; Bigelow Cooper the role of King Frederick; and Sally Crute that of the pretty and dangerous widow, Mrs. Marion Spencer.

Major Armand Dalberg is appointed United States ambassador to Valaria, and prepares to leave for that country. Mrs. Marion Spencer, the flirtatious wife of the late General Spencer, reads of the appointment and invites Dalberg to call on her before leaving. He accepts the invitation because of his great friendship for the general, but makes his call a short one when the woman chooses to consider his sympathy a personal advance.

Shortly afterwards Dalberg sails to take up his new work. He is fairly well acquainted with Valaria, having been through the country once before, traveling under the name John Smith. A question from his secretary as to why he traveled incognito brings forth the story that his father years before was a member of the principality's court, but had incurred the ruler's disfavor by leaving to join the forces of Lafayette in America. For that reason Dalberg did not wish his real name to be known. The one event of his journey that stands out vividly in his memory is his meeting with the fair Princess Dehra. Only a few words and glances passed between them, but he was irresistibly attracted to the girl.

Their next meeting is in the grounds adjoining the royal mansion. The princess recognizes Dalberg and teases him by showing him a card which bears the name "John Smith." King Frederick is struck by the resemblance between the new ambassador and the famed Dalberg, and on questioning him, learns the whole story. The king reinstates the young fellow in his father's position, greatly to the discomfiture of the archduke of Lotzen, who recognizes in Dalberg a rival for the hand of the princess.

One day the former ambassador meets Mrs. Spencer and her cold reception at his hands is witnessed by Lotzen. The latter calls on the widow and together they plan Dalberg's downfall. At one of the court receptions Mrs. Spencer falls on the young fellow's neck, claiming him to be her husband. Dalberg shakes her off, and attempts to explain, but the scene has made a firm impression on the king, and the young fellow's explanation is unheeded.

A strained atmosphere exists between Dalberg and the court until the night of the royal masque ball, when things are speedily brought to a climax. The princess overhears Lotzen and Mrs. Spencer in conversation, and learns that there is no relation whatever between the widow and Dalberg. Lotzen forces the former ambassador into a duel, in the hope of doing away with him, but the princess prevents bloodshed by rushing between the duelists. Dalberg now vindicated, King Frederick gladly consents to his marriage to the Princess Dehra.

Blackwell Film Pleases

Carlyl Blackwell and his company in the Favorite Players' release, "The Man Who Could Not Lose," offer five reels of interesting and speedy action. Mr.

The betrothal scene in Favorite Players' "The Man Who Could Not Lose."

Blackwell takes the title role and is an ideal man for the part, while Ruth Hartman returns to the screen in the role of Dolly, the rich girl who eloped with the poor writer, Champneys Carter, and who thereby greatly angered her father, Harry Ingram, whose role is played by Harry Kernan. Gypsy Abbot took the part of her sister Melissa, and James J. Sheehan did splendid character work in the guise of Rev. Orlando Stone.

William Branton put personality in the role of Count Lecoff, a fortune hunter. The part of Burbank, a broker, was a small though necessary one, and was well played by Thomas Delmar. J. M. Strong, as Spink, the publisher, had a part which matched that of Delmar, and Hal Clements had a brief life as Carter, a gambler.

The racing scenes which occur at various times throughout the picture are well filmed and provide the tense and thrilling atmosphere so necessary to a picture of the caliber of that which is the second release of Mr. Blackwell's company of Favorite Players. The settings for the respective scenes are typical of the environment called for, and so alternate in magnificence and the merely respectable. A coaching party offers opportunity for the meeting of Carter, the man whose father's death left him with a heritage of gambling debts, and Dolly, whose father is desirous of her marriage with Count Lecoff.

It is a story within a story, for the spectator's interest is first engaged by the author, Carter, who is petitioned for a manuscript for which his publisher's daughter is to call the following day. Carter sits down to his typewriter and—the inner story begins.

A dinner at the Ingrams', where there are attentive men and well-gowned women, furthers the acquaintance of Carter and Dolly, and the former asks Dolly to marry him. Dolly is willing, but Mr. Ingram and the count object. Dolly and Carter elope, with the assistance of the Rev. Mr. Stone, who has been browbeaten into the act of performnig the marriage ceremony in an automobile which is exceeding the speed limit and which has a pursuing car, containing the irate Ingram and Count, as an incentive to further speed.

Carter takes his bride on a trolley honeymoon and they settle down to light housekeeping in a tiny apartment. Carter's book, "The Dead Heat," is declared a failure. Then occurs his dream in which the horse Dromedary wins against staggering odds. So the next day finds Carter and Dolly en route for the races, where he places his all upon Dromedary with odds of 400 to 1. And Dromedary wins. Day after day "the man who could not lose" attends the races, and day after day he places oodles of money to his credit at the bank. The count becomes a waiter and writes Ingram that his daughter made a wise choice in a husband. Ingram forgets his grievance and visits the Carters and a happy reunion results.

The author yawns, stretches out in his short-backed typewriter's chair and answers a rap at the door with a "Come in!" It is the publisher's daughter. In her the author sees the girl of his story, and later she becomes his wife. M. C.

Balboa Banners

MOTOGRAPHY is in receipt of one of the new and extremely attractive little banners which the Balboa Amusement Producing Company of Long Beach, California, is sending to the exhibitors using its product. The banner is of maroon felt, 12 by 18 inches in size, and bears at the top a large semicircle, in which is depicted the historic discovery of the Pacific ocean by Balboa. This scene is shown in several colors and the same colors are used in a tasteful design at the base of the banner, surrounding a small circle in which the head of Balboa appears. Between the scenes at the top and bottom of the banner is a graceful scroll bearing the following inscription:—"Balboa Feature Films, the pictures beautiful. Horkheimer Bros., managing directors. Long Beach, Cal."

Officials Discuss Plans

NEW York City was the meeting place, one day last week, of Herbert Payne, president of the California Motion Picture Corporation, just back from the war zone of Europe, and Alexander E. Beyfuss, general manager of the same film company. Mr. Payne, in the Alco projection room, got his first glimpse of "Salomy Jane" and "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," the first two releases of the California Corporation, both of which have been completed since he left for Europe.

Mr. Payne, who is a member of the wealthy Payne family of San Francisco, and known all along the Pacific coast as the millionaire sportsman of Menlo Park, California, greeted reporters of the various trade journals when they called and described in an interesting way the beginnings of the California Motion Picture Corporation.
